AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES SEATTLE PORTLAND

BOOKS ON THE TABLE.

The Green Overcoat.

Like Mr. Shaw, Mr. Belloc is really at his best and most entertaining when riding on the easy snaffle of romance. And just as, when G. B. S. casts themes, socialism, Shavianism, and circus stunts generally to the four winds and swings into the light-hearted canter of "Cashel Byron's Profession," his performance is the more brilliant and instructive, so Mr. Belloc in his lighter romancing moments sometimes goes farther than in his most deliberate and constructive work. "The Green Overcoat" was obviously written in a mood of relaxation, but the play of a mind like Mr. Belloc's is apt to be better work than most writers are capable of in moods of lyric inspiration. So "The Green Overcoat" contains a deal of wisdom and more human nature than one meets with in nine so-called psychological novels out of ten.

The chief beauty of Hillaire Belloc, as indeed of his not dissimilar colleague, Bernard Shaw, is a total absence of sentimentality. Having shown the ancient pedagogue's conduct as it certainly would have been in the grilling circumstances of his kidnapping and enforced forgery, he does not moralize in the superior fashion of many writers we know who, judged from the vigor with which they mete punishment to the erring, are lined up on the side of the fence occupied by the ex-Kaiser and God: neither does he lecture on the fallibility of the human will. He states his facts and they tell their own story, which, as every one who has read "The Green Overcoat" knows, is one to keep the reader taut to the very jolly finish.

One more word about the particular quality of Mr. Belloc's type of novel as distinguished say from Mr. Bennett's or Mr. Wells', to name two who are of the top notch. Would that the latter two and their numerous following could as easily find a theme outside of their terrible preoccupation, sex! "The Green Overcoat" shows it can be done—perhaps not by every one, but conversely we are sure that any one could write a novel about sex. Nothing is easier than nothing stupider. But it takes sheer genius to reveal the plain, ordinary "cussedness" of humanity as Hillaire Belloc and Bernard Shaw indubitably can. We should like to see the outcome of a contest in which all the leading English-writing novelists participated, each to write on some such theme as that of "The Green Overcoat," sex treatment thereof barred. Mr. Belloc, who has a fertile mind, could probably spare one for the good of the cause. Conrad and Walpole would come in with flying colors, but, oh, we wonder where some of the chief luminaries would land. Or would they even struggle through at all? R. G.

THE GREEN OVERCOAT. By Hillaire Belloc. New York: Robert McBride & Co.

When Winter Comes to Main Street.

A book that frankly confesses itself an advertisement and maintains that it is none the worse for that is "When Winter Comes to Main Street," a title to lead one to suppose he has before him yet another parody, the fad for which has become almost as satiating as the thing parodied. But Mr. Grant Overton's book with the dubious title, which, by the way, he is rather proud of—why is it that American humor calls everything odd or grotesque funny, whether it means anything or not?—is, as he admits, an advertisement; not, as we supposed, a parody. The book is a collection of short chatty sketches, half biography, half gossip of Doran authors, and truly it is amazing to discover how many of the great and near great are on the Doran roster. It is almost like the Victor organization and the opera stars. But of course that is an impression, and if the other publishers follow Mr. Doran and Mr. Overton's example in composing local Who's Whos, the result, we are sure, will be just as impressive. Mr. Overton, by the way, is the author of "The Women Who Make Our Novels," and was therefore in good training to deal with the corollary of the women who make the Doran novels. Though in strict accuracy it must be said that this score or so of Doranites are mostly masculine.

WHEN WINTER COMES TO MAIN STREET. By Grant Overton. New York: George H. Doran Company.

Lilian.

The recipe for selling a bad book is to write first a number of good ones. Some such doctrine seems to be the motive power back of Mr. Bennett's latest, "Lilian." "The Pretty Lady" was weak and so was "The Roll Call" with its cheap factitious use of the war, but "Lilian" is worse. If Eleanor Glyn had written it it would be called scandalous, and if any one else had perpetrated its horrors the chances are they never would have seen the light of print—or at least not on our simon-pure native shores. But, of course, the author of the "Hilda" trilogy and even of the "Old Wives' Tale" should be allowed some privileges. Potboiling is a custom hallowed by its antiquity and traditions. Still, there must be some rules to even the ancient game of potboiling, or it would not have stood the test of time, and in our opinion "Lilian" must break all of them.

Usually we are averse to "telling the story" of a book, for the excellent reason that a reviewer has no right to steal the thunder of the author (or the publisher) of the book reviewed. But that nice observation connotes a plot, and "Lilian" is guiltless of either plot or dynamite, though it frequently has the effect of ipecac on the hapless reader. It is, briefly, the story of a stenographer who "goes wrong" according to American standards, but evidently not Mr. Bennett's or that of the public he is counting on, and is made an "honest woman" by a deathbed marriage. Truly an original theme. Did Mr. Bennett write it on a bet or has he been rereading "Pamela" and does he think to palm off its ancient theme on a new generation unversed in eighteenth-century or Victorian fiction? We thought at first that our author had sworn allegiance to the continental novel and was going to convince the British public once for all that the liaison does exist and that he, Arnold Bennett, was out with a brief for it. But the staid Britisher was too much for the anarchist. Mr. Bennett fell in love with his lovely but rather glib heroine and made the charming roué marry her. Very simple. Since the author holds the strings and very immaterial that the roué would not have felt bound to act according to the Richardson school of fiction.

But on the whole we are inclined to think that "Lilian" was written on a bet. If by any chance the bet includes the proviso that its existence must not be guessed at, then we insist that Mr. Bennett loses. And we do not care how much either, after having waded through miles of such rot as this: "He had impregnated her with new ideas; he had reassured her; he had justified her enjoyment; he was amazing; he was mad about her, in his restrained style; and now he would surprisingly dance with her." The amazing, surprising, marvelous creature, a Bennett-made man!

LILIAN. By Arnold Bennett. New York: George H. Doran Company; $2.

Overlooked.

Maurice Baring is both a charming and an original writer, and deserving of a description less trite than that one. Unfortunately one applies the words so carelessly that when they are particularly suitable they mean nothing. "Overlooked" is a novel that is a literary heir of many of Henry James—a fact that seems to contradict the claim we have made for Mr. Baring's originality. But of course there is nothing really new under the sun. James himself confesses to have borrowed—or inherited—freely from the French, even from Ouida. But the theme of "Overlooked" is novel and its treatment is so fresh that it actually reminds one of no one. Mr. Baring has used the dodge of a non-literary man keeping notes on a little drama that was unfolding at a certain watering place while his friend, a novelist, dished the same thing up in regulation literary form—a lush field for satire.

As for the theme, you may have your choice between the drama as "seen" by Anthony Kay, the elderly blind man, who kept his notes from his keen flair for attitudes or the story told by James Rudd, the novelist, who prided himself on his talent for nuances. It is not every writer who could present his figures and his tale from two such angles of parallax and keep any uniform effect at all. But Maurice Baring succeeds, not only in giving a double edge to his story, but in wielding the blade thus fashioned with a wicked thrust at prosperous "genius" and in the ways of novelists in particular.

OVERLOOKED. By Maurice Baring. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; $1.75.

Notes of Books and Authors

Mary Roberts Rinehart confesses that her greatest handicap is a growing self-criticism which slows down and sometimes temporarily stops her writing. "The Breaking Point" (Doran) was written twice completely and portions of it oftener still.

A new Leonard Merrick book is in order for early publication by the Duttons, its title to be "To Tell You the Truth." It will contain a number of short stories of which none has been published heretofore in book form.

The colored frontispieces of the four-volume "History of the Great War," by John Buchan, are portraits of Lloyd George, Sims, Pershing, and Foch. The inscription under the portrait of Foch has caused some comment because he is given the title of Field Marshal. The reason for this is that when Sir William Orpen painted this portrait in 1919 Foch had been given the honorary title of Field Marshal in the British army. Therefore we presume this eminent military English painter preferred to give him the benefit of his English honors.

Stephen Graham is back in New Mexico, this time in company with Wilfrid Ewart, the author of that novel "Way of Revelation" which has aroused so much comment. Mr. Ewart has bought a horse and its trappings and plans to fare forth with Mr. Graham to the Grand Cañon this fall. It is not known whether this means that the Graham "Tramping with a Poet in the Rockies" will be followed by "Riding with a Novelist in the Cañons." An interesting contrast between the two men and their literary methods can be obtained by reading Graham's account of his Rocky Mountain tramp with Vachel Lindsay and Ewart's new "A Journey in Ireland." The free and easy dash of the one is as striking as the realistic, photograph-like manner of the other.

A recent marriage in England is of interest to all who have received pleasure from the writings of those skillful romancers, the late Mr. and Mrs. Egerton Castle. Their only child, Marie Louise, was married to Count Antoine de Meus at Brompton recently. All the way from the days of "The Pride of Jennico" to their last work, "Pamela Pounce," published just after Mr. Castle's death last year, the Castles wrote with undiminished and always delightful zest of gallant romance.

There is Delightful Entertainment

For Many a Long Evening In These Worthwhile Books

"A remarkable achievement in fiction, one that stands out far above any other book of the year!" writes Lillian C. Ford, in the Los Angeles Times. of

THE GLIMPSES OF THE MOON

By Edith Wharton

Everywhere proclaimed as Mrs. Wharton's masterpiece, a best seller since publication, this is a book you must read—and will surely enjoy. Its vivid portrayal of life in the upper circles of society will fascinate you. $2.00

FAIR HARBOR

By Joseph C. Lincoln

A new circle of lovable characters, a new plot full of lively and laughable situations—but the same delightful humor, quaint philosophy, and bracing freshness that a million readers love. "Even the most down-hearted readers must find entertainment and laughter in its pages."—N. Y. Times. $2.00

TRAMPING WITH A POET IN THE ROCKIES

By Stephen Graham

With Vachel Lindsay, the poet, Mr. Graham followed the primitive trails in the Canadian Rockies. In this volume he narrates the eventful trip and the interesting conversation of the two men. Illustrated. $2.00

THE COVERED WAGON

By Emerson Hough

All the dangers, and glory, and romance of the early days in the great West are vividly portrayed in this splendid novel. Mr. Hough has written a brilliant epic of heroic pioneers in which their thrilling experiences are told with gripping interest. $2.00

THE TRANSMISSISSIPPI WEST

By Cardinal Goodwin

The fifty years' period marking the annexation to the United States of the territory between the Mississippi and the Pacific is described fully and authoritatively in this splendid volume. Illustrated with valuable maps. $3.50

MY LIFE

By Emma Calve

In an appealingly personal style and with frank simplicity this star of the opera tells the story of her brilliant career—her early struggles, her rise to fame, the friendships she has won among the leaders of music, social and political worlds. Illustrated. $4.00

Jay William Hudson's ABBE PIERRE

In lovely old Gascony Abbe Pierre watches the unfolding of a beautiful romance. This appealing novel is, as the Boston Transcript says, "one to be read slowly that none of its delicate flavor may be lost." $2.00

THE INDISCRETIONS OF LADY SUSAN

By Lady Susan Townley

Brilliant, revealing, and brimful of extraordinary entertainment is this volume of frank reminiscences by one who has an unusually broad and varied knowledge of social and public life and leaders. Here is the book that all London is agog over, that all America is chuckling over, that will give you many an hour of delightful diversion. $5.00

NARRATIVES IN VERSE

By Ruth Comfort Mitchell

This talented writer has published many brilliant poems that have won wide popularity. Here is a collection of her verse—a volume glowing with human understanding and full of dramatic power. $1.50

Send for Free Catalogue of Children's Books and Illustrated Holiday List

D. APPLETON & COMPANY
Publishers

35 W. 32nd St.

NEW YORK

Bonds
for InvestmentMUNICIPALS IRRIGATION DISTRICTS
CORPORATIONS

Specialists in Safety

Anglo London Paris Company

One Sansome Street San Francisco
Phone Kearny 5600

The French American Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO

108 SUTTER STREET

Commercial—Checking—Savings

Resources Over $16,000,000

A General Banking Business Transacted

Commercial and Personal Checking
Accounts SolicitedSavings Accounts receive interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum

SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES $3.50

OFFICERS

Leon Bocqueraz.....President
J. M. Dupas.....Vice-President
J. A. Bergerot.....Vice-President
W. F. Duffy.....Vice-Pres. and Cashier
A. Bousquet.....Secretary
J. T. Irilary.....Asst. Cashier
Chas. L. Ebner, Jr.....Asst. Cashier

Member Federal Reserve System and
Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco

The San Francisco Savings and Loan Society

(THE SAN FRANCISCO BANK)

SAVINGS COMMERCIAL

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

MISSION BRANCH.....Mission and 21st Streets

PARK-PRESIDIO DISTRICT BRANCH.....Clement and 7th Ave.

HAIGHT STREET BRANCH.....Haight and Belvedere Streets

June 30th, 1922

Assets.....$76,170,177.18

Deposits.....72,470,177.18

Capital Actually Paid Up.....1,000,000.00

Reserv. and Contingent Funds.....2,700,000.00

Employees' Pension Fund.....385,984.61

A dividend to depositors of FOUR AND

ONE-QUARTER (4 1/4) per cent. per annum

was declared for the six months ending June

30th, 1922.

BRIEFER REVIEWS.

M. Coue Again.

M. Coue's visit to America, which has doubled and trebled the public interest in his famous formula, gives point to a very compact little book by Hugh Macnaghton, the vice-provost of Eton College, who, beginning a skeptic, has become one of the most industrious disciples of the man from Nancy. The book, which in size is little more than a bound pamphlet, entitled "Emile Coue, the Man and His Work" (Dodd, Mead & Co.), is a recapitulation of the method of autosuggestion and of some of M. Coue's remarkable work.

The Outline of Science.

The fourth volume of Professor Thompson's "Outline of Science" (G. P. Putnam's Sons) has now appeared, thus completing one of the most intrinsically valuable books that has ever been put before the public. The publication of some of the pioneer works of science have doubtless been more significant in their ultimate effect on their particular field, but we doubt if any single book has gone further to illuminate the mind of the layman, commonly known as the man in the street or the general reader, than has this remarkably edited, inclusive outline of science. The subject treated in the fourth volume are bacteria, physiography, oceanography, animal electricity, the lower vertebrates, the Einstein theory, the biology of the seasons, the essence of mind, ethnology, the story of domesticated animals, hygiene, and last, but not least, an interesting analysis of the nature and aim of science written by the editor.

The Winter's Tale.

The Duttons have issued an unusually beautiful edition of "The Winter's Tale," whose feature is the unique illustrations or rather stage settings by Maxwell Armfield. This master of the wing and back drop was recently commissioned to produce a Shakespearean play and chose "The Winter's Tale" because of its Greek tradition and the fact that he was then interested in developing the significance of gesture and posture as known to the Greeks. The pictures illustrating the present text are a further development of the experiment. Mr. Armfield imbues the pageantry of the Middle Ages, which has been apt to savor of gingerbread in most of our Elizabethan revivals, with the dignity and economy of Greek gesture. The result is to preserve the archaic note of the sixteenth century, but to give it new strength and significance.

New Books Received.

THE THREE FIRES. By Amelia Josephine Burr. New York: The Macmillan Company; $1.75. A story of Ceylon.

THE CATHEDRAL. By Hugh Walpole. New York: George H. Doran Company; $2. A novel by the author of "Fortitude."

TWO PERSONS. By Edward W. Bok. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons; 75 cents. An incident and an epilogue.

OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY. By Frank K. Sanders. Charles Scribner's Sons; $1.25.

THE BLACK WOLF PACK. By Dan Beard. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons; $1.65. Juvenile.

THE TRAMPING METHODIST. By Sheila Kaye-Smith. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $2. The first novel of the author of "Janna Godden."

KNUT HAMSUN. By Hanna Astrup Larsen. New York: Alfred A. Knopf; $1.50. A study of the Scandinavian writer by the editor of the American-Scandinavian Review.

LILY. By Hugh Wiley. New York: Alfred A. Knopf; $2. By the author of "Jade" and "Lady Luck."

THE QUEST. By Pio Baroja. New York: Alfred A. Knopf; $2.50. Translated from the Spanish by Isaac Goldberg.

THE ROOM. By G. B. Stern. New York: Alfred A. Knopf; $2.50. A novel.

PIPPIN. By Archibald Marshall. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.; $2. A novel.

THE KINGMAKERS. By Burton E. Stevenson. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.; $1.90. A political mystery story.

THE POISONED PARADISE. By Robert W. Service. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.; $2. A romance of Monte Carlo.

RAINBOW GOLD: POEMS OLD AND NEW. Selected for boys and girls by Sara Teasdale. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2. With illustrations by Dugald Walker.

THE REAL LINCOLN. By Jesse W. Weik. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; $4. By the collaborator with Lincoln's law partner,

Mr. Herndon, in writing the official life of Lincoln. The present volume deals with the personal side of Lincoln's life.

LETTERS OF FRANKLIN K. LANE. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; $5.

The inner history of the war cabinet.

INCA LAND. By Hiram Bingham. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; $5.

Explorations in the highlands of Peru.

ONCE ON A TIME. By A. A. Milne. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; $2.

A fairy tale for grown-ups.

THE BOY ADVENTURERS IN THE FORBIDDEN LAND. By A. Hyatt Verrill. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; $1.75.

The first volume of a new series for boys.

HALF PAST SEVEN STORIES. By Robert Gordon Anderson. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; $2.50.

For young children.

THE DIVINE RIGHT OF DEMOCRACY. By Clarence True Wilson. San Francisco: The Abingdon Press.

The people's right to rule.

THE VALIDITY OF AMERICAN IDEALS. By Shailer Mathews. San Francisco: The Abingdon Press. Lectures on the Bennett Foundation, Wesleyan University.

THE SECRETS OF SVENGALI. By J. H. Duval. New York: James T. White & Co.; $2.

On singing, singers, teachers and critics.

STEEL. By Charles Rumford Walker. Boston: The Atlantic Monthly Press; $1.75.

The diary of a furnace worker.

IMPROMPTU MAGIC WITH PATTERN. By George De Lawrence. Chicago: T. S. Denison & Co.

GYPSTING THROUGH CENTRAL AMERICA. By Eugene Cunningham. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $7.

The record of a horseback journey through the Central American countries.

MY YEARS ON THE STAGE. By John Drew. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $5.

With a foreword by Booth Tarkington.

THE SHAKESPEARE GARDEN. By Esther Singleton. New York: The Century Company; $3.

On the horticulture of Shakespeare's day.

OUR MEDICINE MEN. By Paul H. De Kruif. New York: The Century Company; $1.75.

An analysis of the practice of medicine.

MY LIFE. By Emma Calvé. New York: D. Appleton & Co.; $4.

Autobiography.

FIRE CASTLES. By Maurine Hathaway. Cincinnati: Stewart & Kidd Company; $1.50.

Verse.

ALONE. By George Wesley Davis. Los Angeles: Times Mirror Press.

A romance of California.

THE DUST FLOWER. By Basil King. New York: Harper & Brothers; $2.

A novel.

RACKHOUSE. By George Agnew Chamberlain. New York: Harper & Brothers; $1.90.

A novel.

WHY WARS COME. By Rear-Admiral A. P.

The White House

Her Unwelcome Husband

By W. L. George

The story of a beautiful, courageous woman caught in the trap of an unfortunate marriage—revealing the inmost feelings of the heart of a lovely woman who lives one life outwardly and another in secret. $2

Book Department, Main Floor

Phone Kearny 5000

Raphael Neill & Co. Inc.

BALFOUR, GUTHRIE & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO AND LOS ANGELES, PORTLAND, SEATTLE, TACOMA, AND VANCOUVER.

MERCHANTS

EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS

MARINE AND FIRE INSURANCE

AVERAGE ADJUSTERS

Agents of

HARRISON DIRECT LINE OF STEAMERS

TO AND FROM EUROPEAN PORTS

and

COMMONWEALTH GOVERNMENT LINE

Redwood Export Company

California Redwood Lumber and Ties

Cargoes and Parcels

"To off shore markets only"

260 CALIFORNIA STREET
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

Phone Sutter 2163

UNION LUMBER CO.

CROCKER BUILDING

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

MANUFACTURERS and WHOLESALERS

—OF—

REDWOOD LUMBER

RAILROAD TIES

TELEGRAPH POLES

SHINGLES

—AND—

SPLIT REDWOOD PRODUCTS

Geo. E. Billings Roy C. Ward Geo. B. Dinsmore
J. C. Muessdorffer Jas. W. Dean

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE
EFFECTED

312 California St., San Francisco, Cal.
Phone—Douglas 6400

BONESTELL & CO.
PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna,
San Francisco

The Wright Magazine

("Not for self, but for others")

Only $1.00 a Year.

Besides a serial and short stories it contains departments for literary and music, women and children, farm and garden, a people's forum, manuscript markets, radio notes and other interesting features.

THE WRIGHT MAGAZINE
P. O. Box 894 Little Rock, Ark.

A
New Arrival
AT

474 Sutter Street

The Childrens Book Shop
Opening November 25th

Programming Santa Claus, with a heaping pack of Gifts and Gift Books. Free.
The Book Fairy, with Stories and Tokens from Fairyland; and Dr. James L. Gordon, 3 o'clock

Kearny 5991

COME AND BRING YOUR FRIENDS

IT'S THE WATER.

Prepared with Glacier Water from

Shasta Springs

AT ALL DEALERS

SHASTA WATER COMPANY

Niblack. Boston: The Stratford Company; $1.50.
An analysis of the most frequent causes.

HORACE AND HIS INFLUENCE. By Grant Showerman. Boston: Marshall Jones & Co.; $1.50.
Our Debt to Greece and Rome Series.

PEREGRINE'S PROGRESS. By Jeffery Farnol. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.; $2.
By the author of "The Broad Highway."

LAST DAYS IN NEW GUINEA. By Captain C. A. W. Monckton, F. R. G. S. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.
Being further experiences of a New Guinea resident magistrate.

SAINT JEANNE D'ARC. By Minna Caroline Smith. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.25.

The mystical story of a girl of the people.
IN LOTUS-LAND JAPAN. By Herbert G. Ponting. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $6.
With eight pictures in color and eighty in monochrome from photographs by the author.

All Books that are reviewed in the Argonaut can be obtained at
Robertson's
222 STOCKTON ST.
Union Square San Francisco

THE HOLMES BOOK CO.

707 Market St. 152 Kearny St. 22 Third St.
Largest variety of new and second-hand books in the city. A visit to our stores will convince you of the truth of this assertion. We buy libraries or single books for cash. See us before selling. Phone—Douglas 3283.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

IF YOU ARE A REAL BOOK-LOVER

Spend a pleasant hour in the real "Old Book Shop" at 2 TILLMAN PLACE, OFF GRANT AVENUE—below Sutter.

Rare Old Books Bought, Sold and Hunted For by GEORGE HARGENS (formerly of the White House)

BOOKS
AT
PAUL ELDER'S
239 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

NEWBEGIN'S BOOKSTORE

358 POST STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Opposite Union Square

A Shop known for its courteous service, and a pleasant place to browse.

Information on books, authors and editions gladly given. Books bought and sold. Buyer will call.
Telephone Douglas 2810

JOHN HOWELL
IMPORTER BOOKS PUBLISHER
RARE BOOKS and FIRST EDITIONS
Libraries Bought and Sold
328 Post Street Union Square
Sutter 3268
SAN FRANCISCO

PETER WESTON.

The reorganization of the Alcazar Theatre has been the means of evolving a well-balanced company capable of doing most creditable work. It may be that Frank Keenan's identification with the present enterprise—giving a local première to a play that Mr. Thomas Wilkes means to produce on Broadway—has stiffened up the company to extra effort. Mr. Keenan is a very fine actor and his personal direction of the company must have had a magnetic effect. And Mary Newcomb is distinctly an asset that counts. Then there is Netta Sunderland: a handsome young actress with metropolitan ease and finish to her acting.

"Peter Weston," therefore, is having a chance; for every one in the company does creditable work. Even the actress in the rôle of the little maid, Hope Drown by name, played so well the mad terror and desperate cry for help of the maid when she witnessed the murder that the fact that she was acting did not obtrude; was, indeed, almost forgotten.

"Peter Weston" is in the same line of plays as Githa Sowerby's "Rutherford & Son"; plays of family life in which the clash of character is precipitated by paternal tyranny. To this class belongs quite a group of famous plays: "The Voyage Inheritances," "Milestones," and "Hindle Wakes," and, to add a now well-seasoned play of Continental birth, "Magda."

Such plays make a much more intimate appeal than the old historical fustian or those in which the action was confined exclusively to the elegant artificialities of the drawing-room. Therefore "Peter Weston" was listened to with deep interest on its first night, even those artless primitives who express every emotion by childlike laughter being occasionally silenced by the emotions raging in the Weston family.

Peter, the founder of the iron works that made him a multimillionaire, belongs to that class of domestic tyrant whose presence ties tongues and whose absence sets them loose to relieve by contumely the mental repression caused by the habitual boastings of a strong-willed meglomaniac.

To dominate every one around him is an obsession with Peter. Thus we see all the native talents and natural impulses of his children repressed; a situation that always appeals strongly to the sympathies of an audience.

For it is very common for a certain kind of parent to believe that his children are his subjects, and to attempt, even after the younger generation has achieved the independence of self-support, to continue to exercise absolute sway.

That kind of parenthood has probably helped to develop the twentieth-century kind of filial attitude, which insists on its right to independence of action before youth has gained the right by adulthood and self-support.

The play, therefore, may be said to be a little behind the times. For shortly there will, no doubt, be a line of plays in which the younger generation will be wrestling to grasp the reins of family dominance from older hands, instead of yielding to parental authority, as in the past.

The exercise of will, however, is one of the most interesting features of human nature, as also the ease with which a masterful, determined will can dominate weaker ones.

Frank Dazey's theme—I understand that he is the theme-maker of the play and Leighton Osmun the dialoguist—is to show how a man can wreck his own life by his oblivion of the rights of other lives. It is the same that is used in "Rutherford & Son," but differently treated. For Peter Weston has affections, and therefore he is not invincible.

Of this strong, able, energetic egotist Frank Keenan presented a finely detailed impersonation. His sledgehammer methods, the resistless strength with which he rode over opposition, is splendidly conveyed by an actor endowed with the forceful personality and the histrionic strength that enables him to convey it.

There is almost sunshine in the presence of the successful tyrant until one discovers that the light emanating from him is more like an electric glare, illuminating nearly every hidden corner in which revolt smoulders.

Mary Newcomb's rôle is a marked contrast to that in "Nice People." In this one she is a gentle, yielding girl, slow to revolt, and only able to hold her own by cutting herself loose from the tyrant. Miss Newcomb was particularly moving in her depiction of the mental and physical prostration of a girl whose happiness is suddenly blasted, and in the sudden up-leaping of self-assertion with which the girl announced her tragical secret.

Netta Sunderland was excellent in conveying the bright, hard, cynical defiance of an emancipated and fearless daughter-in-law to the family despot, the young lady's technique being worthy of Broadway.

Jerome Sheldon and Emmet Vogan also conveyed most successfully the different individualities of the two sons, and George Webster, H. L. Willits, and Norman Feusier, and one or two others in lesser rôles, contributed a most commendable share toward a general performance in which tone, technique, and finish were much nearer to a high standard than we are accustomed to at the Alcazar. Also, there was a suitable and attractive setting, and if Mr. Thomas Wilkes can keep things up at this standard—not counting, of course, on having in the ordinary course of things a star in the cast—San Franciscans may rely on seeing a certain line of Eastern attractions adequately and attractively presented.

It might be added, as a final word, that the play is in such good shape that very little cutting will be necessary. The dialogue is direct and forceful, and there is considerable humor in those lines which betray character. One or two scenes run a little over-long, but that will be easily remedied.

"THE SPRING MAID."

This jolly little operetta was first made known to us by jolly little Mitzi Hajos. She was, if not new to us then, still comparatively a novelty on the American stage, with her pretty, foreign face and her piquant foreign accent, and the piece was very successful.

It is a good idea to revive it at the Rivoli with another pretty woman, Lillian Glaser of the crystalline soprano, in the rôle. Miss Glaser's sapling-like slenderness is set off by the pagodaed skirts of her costume, and her flying blonde curls frame her face prettily.

Lavinia Winn attracts the pleased regard with her dainty figure of faultless symmetry, and, as the cup-bearer at the fountain-coquets with demure propriety.

John Van, dressed to kill in a white Hungarian uniform, contributed his robustly effective tenor to the highly decorative rôle of a princess-shy prince, and Ferris Hartman has so successfully reestablished his old friendly entente with his audience that there are mingled streams of personal regard and pleasure over his success as an amuser, heading steadily, all through the programme, toward the popular comedian.

Ferris Hartman, indeed, has been so bathed in bliss over the success of the Rivoli that his friends are hoping that it will help him to bear up against the financial blow of the recent expensive hold-up at that place. And perhaps the police may be able to repair damages.

"The Spring Maid" is a very melodious composition, and the tunelessly inclined audience demanded so many encores that the opera almost ended in being a music lesson. The sprightly young chorus, being vocally well endowed, and also carefully trained by Paul Steindorff, who is thoroughly seasoned in work of this kind, give the exhilarating choral numbers with youthful gusto.

In fact, a general atmosphere of happiness at the Rivoli finds a pleased reflection in the bosoms of the spectators.

A long cast of fifteen players and singers, including Nona Campbell, who has her opportunity in "The Song of the Nightingale," and Rafael Brunetto, who seems to have lighted on his feet in the congenial atmosphere of musical comedy, contributes an abundance of action and variety, and Edna Malone, with Paul Hartman coming out strong as an assistant dancer, gave a clever imitation of the magically moving cut-out that tickle the ribs in every Orpheum programme.

Altogether, if one wants to be in a sort of lively love feast between performers and public, go to the Rivoli, where you will find fun and fancy, pretty girls, and tuneful melodies sung by young and pretty voices.

THE EUROPEAN INVASION.

It has been the custom for America to go to Europe, but since the war a European invasion of all classes has been heading our way. True, the new immigration laws act as a deterrent to the working classes, but princes, noblemen, generals and statesmen from Europe have become so common in America that they have almost ceased to be a show.

And now a later form of the incoming tide has taken on an artistic complexion. For not only will the company from the Art Theatre in Moscow be in New York this winter, but already the tide of English plays and players has shown a tendency almost to submerge American production. For American producers, avid for profit during these hard times, are looking Europe over for novelties. Even Germany has had the once over. Pola Negri and other motion-picture stars have thrown the handkerchief, and German musicians are coming over by the score to America. The Russian "Sauve-Souris" has grown to be an old story in New York, and is being imitated in English. There will be German plays spoken in German on Broadway, it is said, and France contributes plays and special cabaret attractions.

Almost it seems as if the confusion of tongues born on the Tower of Babel is descended upon us, and it begins to look as if America, melting-pot of the races, and next to the British the worst linguists in the world, will have to look to itself and master a few languages besides its own.

However, the translator has been busy, and Hauptmann's "Rose Bernd" and the brothers Quintero's "Malvaloca" are among foreign-born pieces on which New York has been passing judgment, Ethel Barrymore starring in the German piece and Jane Cowl in the Spanish one, neither of the plays being very much liked.

Still another translated piece, entitled "R. U. R.," has created quite a sensation in New York. It suggests H. G. Wells' boom-food story, although more horrific, for it tells a story in which human beings, in order to be relieved from toil, are replaced by "robots," creatures made by a scientific formula, who lack affections, resentments, and emotions generally, for like the bee-workers, they lack a perception of sex.

It sounds good to the selfish, comfort-craving mind. Haven't we housewives longed at times for a specially constructed aluminum maid-of-all-work who doesn't require to have her irritably sensitive feelings carefully walked around or an irritably sudden temper dodged or placated? What a soothing thought it seems, recalling how the pearl of a maid, after several years' service, when she has become indispensable and knows it, thinks she owns us, and begins to run her angles against ours!

But in "R. U. R."—which means "Rossum's (the manufacturer's) Universal Robots"—the robots got gay and began to rise against the human race with its dwindling birth rate. Somebody in the group of robot-makers, being cursed with scientific curiosity, tampered with the formula, and the emotionally-inarticulate robots began to feel. From feeling came to doing, and then to rebelling, which made drama; a rather ghastly form of drama, from all accounts, the play having had its conception in the scientific Teutonic mind.

However, some ingenious burlesquer on Broadway will surely take hold of the idea and make a travesty of it, in which will, no doubt, be seen hopeful housekeepers reveling in the perfect piece of mechanism that relieved them from distasteful drudgery, until the dream of lifelong comfort is suddenly changed to bereavement, and the perfect robot developed a Swedish accent and a temper.

I shouldn't be surprised if the original idea of the robot had its concept from the Singapore armies of the war (in "R. U. R." they have armies of absolutely submissive robots). Those black soldiers, with their readiness to fight for a return of food, lodging, and clothes, and with their emotional detachment from the real causes of the war, and, in the majority of cases, ignorance as to what it was all about, must have seemed to the observant mind like useful and well-machined automatons.

PICTURED BIOGRAPHY.

An Eastern motion-picture organization, headed by Arthur Zinkin, an intellectualist who has specialized in educational work, is planning a novelty that should please those devotees of motion pictures that long to get away from photographed drivel. The purpose is to produce photo-plays which are biographies of famous musicians; the biographies, however, to be given over entirely to the romantic phases in their lives. Some of the musicians whose fame and the texture of whose lives have led to their selection are Beethoven, Mozart, Chopin, Schumann, Liszt, Haydn, Tchaikowsky, Brahms, Berlioz, Grieg, Schubert and McDowell.

The pictures are to be accompanied by appropriate selections from the works of the subjects of the biographies, and continuous scores will be arranged by Clarence Adler, a pianist well known in New York.

For some time Mr. Zinkin has been collecting material for this work. The idea is excellent, provided it is done from an artist's and not from a mere investor's standpoint, and it suggests the possibility of enlarging on the idea, drawing the sensationalized youth of the country away from pictured melodrama and sentimentality to a contemplation of the fascination of truth as far as it can be revived and pictured in the lives of famous writers, painters, soldiers and scientists.

JOSEPHINE HART PHELPS.

One of the three new operas by contemporary composers to be given at the Munich Festival this year was Pfitzner's "Palestrina," based on the life of the greatest of Italian choral masters. In this connection the publication of a book on Palestrina, by Zoe Kendrick Pyne, which Dodd, Mead & Co. have just issued, is both interesting and timely. The volume not only covers the life and work of the noted composer (who was born in 1526), but presents a comprehensive history of sixteenth-century music.

Chaliapin and Maxim Gorky have collaborated in writing a "huge Russian scenario" which an American syndicate is to produce next year with the great Russian singer in the leading rôle.

AGENTS WANTED.

DEFLEXOGRAPH fits any phonograph. Stops scratch and surface noises. Softens tone. Immense profits. VANTONE CO., Dept. 102, Box 1244, City Hall Station, New York.

All For the Children

What has been heralded as "the greatest playground in the world" is being constructed by the Park Commission for the children of San Francisco.

The site is at the northwestern corner of the Lake Merced Rancho at the junction of the Great Highway, Sloat Boulevard and the new Skyline Boulevard.

Sixty acres are being transformed into a "Kiddies Paradise" that will include a clubhouse, baseball diamonds, tennis courts, and a huge swimming pool.

This swimming pool of salt water, within sound of the booming Pacific surf, will be a thousand feet long, a hundred feet wide, and will contain four and one-half million gallons of water. It will accommodate 10,000 swimmers at one time.

Work on this magnificent addition to the outdoor recreation facilities of San Francisco is now proceeding under the supervision of John McLaren.

The city of San Francisco has leased the acreage for this wonderful playground from the Spring Valley Water Company.

The terms of the lease include an option to purchase, and there is no doubt that this tract will eventually become the property of all our youngsters.

SPRING VALLEY
WATER COMPANY

ESMOND'S

"THE CAKE SHOP"
253 Grant Ave.

Mince Pies made from our own home-made mince-meat. Genuine English Plum Puddings and Fruit Cakes.

"ECCLES CAKES" Our Specialty

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE.

The Columbia Theatre.

Mitzi, the elfish musical-comedy star, comes to the Columbia Theatre, Monday night, November 27th, in the first New York musical comedy of the season at that house. Her vehicle is called "Lady Billy" and was written by Zella Sears, remembered as an actress of note, and by Harold Levey, a protégé of Victor Herbert. Henry W. Savage sponsors the production.

The large company is practically the same that appeared during the long runs of the play at the Liberty Theatre, New York, and at the Illinois Theatre in Chicago. Among the principals are Boyd Marshall, Fan Bourke, Mark Smith, Vira Riel, Ethel Allis, Edward Ciannelli, Vera Kingston and Charles Gay.

The company's opera orchestra will augment the local orchestra. Mitzi will sing seven new songs and appear in various rôles, from that of a gardener's boys in overalls to countess in gold brocades.

At the Curran.

"When Knighthood Was in Flower" will enter upon its third week at the Curran Theatre Sunday, with a special matinee at 5 o'clock. It will be given twice daily, once in the afternoon and once in the evening, during the coming week. The music score that was written especially for "When Knighthood Was in Flower" is being interpreted with exceptional skill by Petro Marino and his selected orchestra.

The New Baritone.

John Charles Thomas, a new concert baritone who is creating a stir in the concert world, will give a song recital at the Scottish Rite Auditorium, Sunday afternoon, November 26th, at 2:30 o'clock sharp, under the management of Frank W. Healy. Mr. Thomas will have the assistance of William Janashek, a most capable accompanist. Tickets for the Thomas Sunday afternoon concert are on sale now at the box-office of Sherman, Clay & Co.

COLUMBIA THEATRE Leading Playhouse of the West
Geary at Mason Phone Franklin 150

Beginning Monday, Nov. 27th
Matinees Wednesday and Saturday
Henry W. Savage Presents
America's Foremost Prima Donna Comedienne
MITZI
in the musical romance
"LADY BILLY"

CURRAN THEATRE Geary Street Near Mason Phone Prospect 9300

Now Playing for a Short Engagement
A Picturization of Charles Major's Story of Love and Romance
"WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER"
Prices for All Performances
50c and $1 (tax extra)
Matinees Daily

RIVOLI OPERA HOUSE
Market at Seventh. Phone Market 373

Matinees Saturday and Sunday

Special Matinee Thanks-giving Day
FERRIS HARTMAN AND PAUL STEINDORFF
Present the Exquisitely Tuncful Comic Opera
"BOHEMIAN GIRL"
Best Seats One Dollar

Orpheum THE BEST IN VAUDEVILLE
Orpheum Circuit

MATINEES 25 and 50c DAILY
EVENINGS 25c TO $1.25
Except Sat., Sun. and Holidays
ALWAYS A GREAT SHOW
SMOKING PERMITTED IN DRESS CIRCLE AND LOGES

Sequoia Little Theatre
1725 Washington St. Pet. Polk St. and Van Ness Ave.

Tuesday and Saturday Nights in November
Three One-Act Plays
Dunsanny-Galsworthy-G. Bernard Shaw
Prices $1 and 50c, plus tax.
Sherman, Clay's and Paul Elder's

CURRENT VERSE.

Ballade to Our Lady of Czestochowa.

Splendor and Queen and Mystery manifold -
And very Regent of the untroubled sky,
Whom in a dream St. Hilda did behold
And heard a woodland music passing by:
You shall receive me when the clouds are high
With evening and the sheep attain the fold.
This is the faith that I have held and hold,
And this is that wherein I mean to die.

Steep are the seas and savaging and cold
In broken waters terrible to try;
And vast against the winter night the world,
And harborless for any sail to lie.
Yet have you heard above the waves a cry.
And hanged above the hills a cusp of gold.
This is the faith that I have held and hold,
And this is that in which I mean to die.

Help of the half-defeated, Helm of old,
Shrine of the Sword, and Tower of Ivory;
Standing apart, supreme and aureoled,
The Battler's vision and the World's reply.
You shall restore me, O my last Ally,
To vengeance and the glories of the bold.
This is the faith that I have held and hold,
And this is that in which I mean to die.

Envoy.

Prince of the degradations, bought and sold,
These verses, written in your crumbling sty,
Proclaim the faith that I have held and hold,
And publish that in which I mean to die.
—Hilaire Belloc in the New Statesman.

The Human Altitude

When I catch myself agape
Grinning at a Barbary ape,
Or assuming hatred lies
In the hungry tiger's eyes;
When I call the vulture "vile,"
Or "devilish" the crocodile;
Tigers "cruel," camels' humps
"Ugly," or the roseate rumps
Which baboons so proudly show
As they swing from bough to bough;
When I call the boar "malicious,"
Kite "revolting," grizzly "vicious,"
"Quaint" the lithe prehensile nose
The elephant so blithely blows;
When I say of birds: "The he-male Warbles to attract the she-male,"
Or "Brute beasts are soulless," I
Do not merely simply lie—
I commit a sheer enormity
Like one jeering at deformity—
I curse the day and bless the night;
In short, I sin against the light.
When I reluctantly arise,
Breakfast, after exercise,
With dispassionate disdain,
And breathlessly approach my train,
With my bowler on and spats;
Do the sparrows, dogs, and cats
Mock me in amused delight?
No, they don't, but well they might.
Animals have no pretense
Veiling their indifference.
They don't overeat nor whine,
Label all things "yours" and "mine."
Never vulgar, avaricious,
Sentimental, superstitious;
Never snobbish, vengeful, vain,
Pleasures they accept, and pain,
Vice is unknown, filth abhorred.
They do good without reward.
When their lives on earth are done,
Happily, I think, they run
Over death's dividing dark,
Where those saints who ran the Ark—
Noah and Japheth, Ham and Shem—
Probably look after them.

—Geoffrey Dearmer in the Nation and the Athenaeum.

The Inkberry.

The windflower swings in the woodland shade,
A tethered star on an emerald glade;
The violet sleeps on the leaf-riched mould,
A fragment of sky on a sea of gold;

The marigold sways by the moonlit spring,
A glimmer of fire like a censor's swing—

But the inkberry stands on the windy lands,
An outlaw king with blood on his hands!
—Arthur L. Phelps in Canadian Magazine.

The collection of German marks as a hobby is another form of Zero worship.—Punch.

JOHN CHARLES THOMAS
Remarkable Concert Baritone
SINGS
Tomorrow Afternoon at 2:30
Scottish Rite Auditorium
Management FRANK W. HEALY
Tickets on sale at usual places.

EXPOSITION AUDITORIUM
Tuesday Evening, Nov. 28, at 8:20
First and Only San Francisco Appearance
MARCEL DUPRE
World Famous Organist, from Notre Dame Cathedral, Paris
A Programme of Rare Excellence
Reserved seats, 50c, 75c, $1. Admission, 25c
Seats now on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s
Auspices Auditorium Committee,
Board of Supervisors

THE THEATRE GUILD.

The Theatre Guild is a hydra-headed producer of dramatic works which started out a little more than three years ago with a $500 loan in the bank (subsequently returned with thanks, and possibly with interest) and a measly $750 subscribed by prospective patrons, says Alexander Woolcott in the New York Times. In the brief interval since then it has made seventeen public productions and several private ones and has become the most important, the most interesting, and, to the watchers overseas, the most celebrated theatre in what is still quaintly called the Anglo-Saxon world. It will start its new season in October with nine plays selected from the literatures of the world, with about $30,000 for accumulated profits in the roomy Guild stocking and with something like $35,000 in the box-office, paid in there by the foresighted theatre-goers who will want tickets to all the pieces the Guild is to stage between now and June.

With this comforting if not completely comfortable security against losses, foreseen and unforeseen, it is now launched on a programme of production bolder, more ambitious, and more promising of interest to the adult play-goer than that shouldered for this year by any other English-speaking (laughter) producer, with the possible exception of Arthur Hopkins. That this wonder should have been worked at the once forlorn Garrick, in West Thirty-Fifth Street, shows with what pathetically scanty equipment—a few dollars, a little devotion, considerable æsthetic discernment, a bit of luck and a modicum of experience—our theatre can be transformed from what it cravenly and sluggishly is to what it so easily might be.

Since the Guild calls for subscriptions—asking, that is, for a few thousand Mæcenases instead of one—it takes on the color of a quasi-public institution, like the Metropolitan Opera House and the Boston Symphony. Therefore, its books should lie open to the public. The books are open because of the nature of the appeal the Guild frankly makes. The books are interesting because the Guild is an experiment which others are about to follow and which seems quite likely to impress its form and character on the American theatre of the next twenty-five years. A passing glance is given at them here, in order to set at rest two lively and mutually hostile legends about the Guild which have been adrift in our town these many months. One legend is that the Guild has been running at a heavy loss, nobly and silently borne by some Otto Kahn or other. The other legend is that the Guild is already foul with wealth, that it has made tremendous profits, which are being divided by the directors and by them, riotously and in relays, squandered in the beer gardens on the Kurfürstendamm. A third, or rather a variant of the second, would have it that the vast loot of the Guild is being stowed away, with the idea of building a theatre in the rosy future, when the five-year lease of the Garrick has slipped unnoticed by.

Now, as it happens, none of these legends is true. There is, and has been, no mysterious backer. (Indeed, the man who did more than any single person to make the Guild a self-supporting success is a young, personable, remote fellow from Belfast who did his part before the Guild was ever thought of. All he did was to write "John Ferguson" and "Jane Clegg.") And all the wealth in the Guild's possession is that aforesaid $30,000, an unmatched store of good-will, and a motley assortment of new and costly but valuable wisdom in the ways of the theatre.

Here, then, for the benefit of those who, in this and other cities, are of half a mind to follow in the path the Guild has blazed are a few bare facts. The Guild, sprung after the armistice from the ashes of the Washington Square Players, is directed by a board which consists of one banker, one lawyer, two playwrights of sorts, one fair-to-middling actress, and one first-rate artist. Without counting its several private performances of plays intended for subscribers only, it has proffered in its brief time some seventeen productions. Of these nine were profitable. They were "John Ferguson," "The Powers of Darkness," "Jane Clegg," "Heartbreak House," "Mr. Pim Passes By," "Liliom," "Ambush" (by the skin of its teeth if at all), "He Who Gets Slapped," and "From Morn to Midnight." Losses of varying dimensions were suffered in producing "Bonds of Interest," "The Treasure," "The Faithful," "The Rise of Silas Lapham," "The Wife with a Smile" (and "Boubouroche"), "John Hawthorne," "Back to Methuselah," and "What the Public Wants."

Of the first group, the one that has thus far made the handsomest profit is "Liliom," the Hungarian fantasy which was first rejected by all the commercial (renewed laughter and catcalls) managers in town. Of the second group, the one that achieved the heaviest loss was, to no one's surprise, "Back to Methuselah." In an almost vertiginous access of respect for Mr. Shaw's well-known susceptibilities, the Guild stubbornly declines to tell just how many dollars it cost them to go back to Eden with Mr. Shaw. A good guess would be $20,000. Not less, certainly.

Existing coal mines in the United States can produce from 700,000,000 to 900,000,000 tons a year.

"The Missionary"

direct service to

New Orleans

Santa Fe

through Northern Arizona New Mexico and Texas

Standard Sleepers and Chair Cars
Fred Harvey Meals

Grand Canyon Line

Tickets to and from Europe via all Trans-Atlantic Lines

Ask any Santa Fe Agent
R. D. Johnson, Div. Pass. Agt.
601 Market Street
Phone Sutter 7600
or
Market Street Ferry
Phone Sutter 7600

OAKLAND
434 13th St.
40th St. & San Pablo Ave.
BERKELEY
University Ave. & West St.
SAN JOSE
48 Ryland Block
SACRAMENTO
201 Calif. Fruit Bldg.

VANITY FAIR.

It might be argued that if there were one good reason for withholding the suffrage from women it would not be necessary to invent so many; and it must be admitted that a great many have been put forward, here and in England, none of which seems to have stemmed the tide of feminism now threatening to drown the world in a perfumed flood. But the palm for ingenuity will have to be awarded to certain members of the French Senate when this pandemic question swept over it the other day. The reason they assigned was that French women do not need to vote because they are so much better treated by French men than English and American women are by English and American men. A French senator must by law be over forty years of age, and few are under sixty. By the time a Frenchman is sixty he knows a great deal about women. He knows them in the abstract and in the concrete, in the general and the particular, as an institution and as an amusement, as a solace and as a folly; when they are "uncertain, coy, and hard to please," as the poet so vividly put it, and when they are on the warpath and know just what they want and exactly how they are going to get it. What memories may not the thought of women raise in the mind of a French senator sixty years old, one of those old fellows with a black Assyrian beard, just beginning to show the basting thread through the dye, and a top hat and a long vista of rosy nights stretching behind him? And so when women want the parliamentary suffrage in France he may be presumed to know what he is talking about. Senator Labrousse declared that the Latin women were more honored by their men, and did not have to escape the "brutal yoke" placed on their wives by the men of the north, where feminism was a product of male excesses. Senator Hugues le Roux declared that in France women were the daughters of their fathers; a discovery fit to rank with all that is embodied in that great American feminist phrase, "mothers of men." We are as loathe to believe in daughters without fathers as in sons without mothers, and in either case we fail to see just what it proves. But it is argument, and of a kind leading inevitably to the conclusion that woman's place is in the home—to which the French Senate, after so much ingenuity and originality, actually did descend. So things seem to be taking the same course there as here. There is a woman in the American Senate. There will be women in the French Senate. And what is France that she should escape it?

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt continues to write brightly and optimistically on the ever-green subject of woman suffrage, and to enliven thereby the pages until recently directed by that thrifty Dutch-American journalist, Edward Bok. She has seen women's rights grow from small beginnings until she fears the thing is going too far, and in her latest effusion seeks to set bounds. She gets away to a flying start by declaring: "One of those little incidents which cause thrones to totter and battles to stop occurred during the days when the pioneer women drew up that first Bill of Rights in the town of Seneca Falls, New York, in the year 1848." And as she specifies no other incident, she leaves us to infer that it was this Bill of Rights and what developed from it that caused the tottering of those thrones and the stoppage of those battles. Now, this is rather a flight, for a starter. We had supposed that the recent insecurity of thrones was caused in some way by the progress of some battles. But if the suffrage Bill of Rights caused the battles to stop, the tottering of thrones must have had some other cause. And if thrones tottered because of the Bill of Rights, what was it that sent Constantine back to Greece? To what degree is Europe aware that its thrones have been undermined and rudely shaken by the incident that occurred at Seneca Falls, New York, in 1848? And how many and just what battles were stopped thereby? We feel that Mrs. Catt would have enlightened us on these points had she not been so busy trying to define where women's rights begin and where they cease, or in her own words differentiating real rights from sham; but it is a pity, because it is one of the things about which curiosity once aroused becomes acute and then painful. The incident at Seneca Falls occurred before the civil war. With what great battles of that conflict did it interfere? Not to say stop? The Wilderness, Shiloh, Antietam? And then there were wars in Europe, wherein the action of the brave little band at Seneca Falls must have had some deterrent effect. And there was the Spanish war and San Juan Hill and the Rough Riders. Were they aware of what had been done to stop battles? And the German war, which considerably shook up the thrones of the Hohenzollerns and the Romanoffs and the Hapsburgs and a few more. If those battles had been stopped those thrones would still be stable. Yet it was long since the peace of Seneca Falls. In this matter we fear that Mrs. Catt has been talking through her bonnet. No battles have yet been stopped by woman suffrage, nor is any likely to be. However, this is merely by way of introduction. Let us pass to those rights, real and sham.

Mrs. Catt says "real rights give a human being liberty, happiness, and privilege, up to the point where those rights begin to curtail the liberty, happiness, and privilege of some one else." Well, men have long had all the rights women have the hardihood to claim, less the privileges they additionally desire, but they have not thereby been made altogether happy, nor altogether free; and as to privilege, that means literally "private law," and we don't recognize it in these United States, or we try not to, and raise a howl about it if we do and consider that the republic is in danger. Mrs. Catt's definition is too inclusive. It means more than even she can mean in her hours of calmness. But it does help her establish a sort of rough measurement for the delimitation of women's rights, and so we are not disposed to quarrel with it, for Heaven knows those rights need delimiting. And she points, as well and properly she may, to the rights of children, which may be curtailed by some of the "rights" some women still appear to seek. She speaks of women that want a right to their own names, of some that want marriage without motherhood, and others that want motherhood without marriage. And she lectures them for it, pointing out that children need names, and that to deprive them of their fathers' names would be to introduce confusion into records and social relations of value to them. And that seems real sensible, and worthy of her undoubtedly mature age, which we do not know and can not find out from Who's Who, for she forgot to tell the editor of that gossip periodical the year of her birth—only the place where it happened. She even cites the case of an Oregon co-ed who soulfully yearned to be a mother, but no wife, and went away and did so, but found that she didn't like the results, and then it was too late to change back, and there she was with a child that had no father, to speak of, and no name in particular, and did not fit any existing social arrangements. That co-ed had treated herself to some sham rights, in her anxiety not to be done out of her real rights by the tyrant man. And if we get Mrs. Catt, this throne-shaking, battle-ending business has gone about far enough. We have all somehow come into the condition of George Ade's nigger, who had just as much rights as anybody only he "didn't dast to use 'em." Otherwise, the suffrage movement is marching on. And the armies are ready to. And as ever, the heroes of coming battles will be rewarded by the women.

The New York horse show this year has been of unusual interest, especially to Californians. In the first place, the show has moved up town from Madison Square Garden to Squadron A Armory at Park Avenue and Ninety-Fourth Street. Secondly, one of the main features of the opening night was the contest in the five-gaited saddle horse class, wherein the prize was taken by a California-bred chestnut gelding, Sinbad, belonging to F. W. Matthiesen, over the Kentucky-bred gelding Eastern Star, belonging to H. N. Greis. There were twelve entries. Notwithstanding the competition of the opera, the opening was well attended by New York society folk. One end of the ring was closed off by a copy of the farm house at Mt. Vernon, serving as a tea room and the enclosure for the members of the National Horse Association. Over the balcony at the east end was a reproduction of the North Lane, with the dairy, the school, and Washington's old pre-Volsteadian brew house. The tea room was conducted for the benefit of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, and tea was served by girls of the younger society set acting as waitresses. Among them were seen Miss Kate Prentice, Miss Dorothy Schi, Miss Dolores Carillo, Miss Cecile Sisco, Miss Priscilla Baldwin, Miss Sally Sayre and Miss Katherine Adams. Among those that took boxes for the week were Stuyvesant Peabody, Mrs. Frederick E. Lewis, Jr., John P. Crozer, Dinwiddie Lampton, Robert Law, Jr., Mrs. J. D. Hertz, E. L. Crawford, O. W. Lehman, William M. Lybrand, Byford Ryan, J. Macy Willets, Miss Helen T. Murray, Mortimer B. Fuller, Jessie Metcalf, Percy Stewart, William Du Pont, Robert A. Fairbairn, Isaac H. Clothier, Jr., William H. Wanamaker, Jr., Mrs. Ambrose Monell, Alfred B. Macley, Miss Clara S. Peck, William H. Moore, H. P. Dunn, Lewis L. Clarke, Miss K. L. Wilks, J. A. Spoor, Walter J. Salmon, Price McKinney, Francis P. Garvan, Sanford F. Harris, Mrs. T. Shaw Hall, Mrs. George C. Sherman, W. W. Willock, H. N. Greis, Harry D. Holloway, Charles D. Lanier, George Crouch, Mrs. Lewis G. Kaufman, Juan S. Ceballos, Reginald C. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Albert S. Cornell, Richard J. Goodman, Mrs. Thomas J. Regan and John Edwards. This is the thirty-seventh annual exhibition of the Horse Show Association.

The Fatal Third Puff.

"Never light three cigarettes with the same match," cries the third smoker, who immediately blows out the flame which you hold before his nose. For he does not care to die in the course of the year, according to the New York Tribune.

This superstition now generally established in the public's minds is said to have had this origin:

In the war which Spain carried on against Morocco in 1911-1912, and which was principally an ambuscade war, the Spanish officers, who are great smokers, puffed cigarettes in order to kill time in the trenches. Sometimes it happened that three of them lighted their cigarettes with the same match. Now, in the course of time they noticed that at the first puff of smoke escaping from the cigarette the Moroccan across the lines opened his eyes; at the second cloud he noted the place; at the third he fired. And often the smoker fell with a bullet in his forehead. This third smoker, made prudent, therefore took to blowing out the match. This quickly became a superstition, which continued after the end of the war and later was passed from Spain to France.

THE CHARLES NELSON CO.

MANUFACTURER AND WHOLESALE

of
REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR,
SPRUCE, HEMLOCK,
SUGAR & WHITE PINE,
CEDAR SHINGLES & POLES.

230 California St. San Francisco

E. C. EVANS &amp; SONS, Inc.

(Established 1881)

STEAMSHIP AGENTS

SHIP AND INSURANCE BROKERS

260 California Street, San Francisco

Phone Douglas 8040

Cable Address "DEWGRIP"

GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION

Offices at

SAN FRANCISCO

LOS ANGELES

Alaska Commercial Bldg.

Higgins Bldg.

HAMMOND LUMBER COMPANY

260 CALIFORNIA ST.

REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR

AND

PILING

Press Clippings

Are money-makers for Contractors, Supply
Houses, Business Men and Corporations

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

Phone Douglas 5119

121 Second Street

4-Passenger Touring Phaeton

Those who ride in the New Peerless commonly refer to its luxurious ease as unequalled in their previous experience. The front springs are three feet, five inches long, and the rear springs five feet long. The seats are delightfully flexible and buoyant. Moreover, the balance of the New Peerless is practically perfect.

1900 Van Ness Ave.

Phone Prospect 8800

The New
PEERLESS

A Hillsborough Home

This house—which in architecture and setting reminds one of Italy—is situated in the fashionable Brewer Tract, Hillsborough, less than forty minutes by motor from San Francisco. Its rooms are spacious and it is marked by soundness of construction and elegance of finish.

First Floor—Living room 16x29 feet, sun room, dining room, breakfast room, kitchen, maid's room and bath.

Second Floor—Five bedrooms and two tiled baths.

Garage for two cars and chauffeur's quarters. The grounds are ample and beautifully planted.

Price $40,000. Terms if Desired.

Telephone Our Mr. Burks for Appointment

MASON-McDUFFIE COMPANY

Sutter 2171

278 Post Street

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

During an art exhibition one of the artists was receiving the benefit of a friend's criticism. "This canvas," said the friend, indicating a violent bit of impressionism. "Do you not think, after all, the atmosphere is too warm?" "No," said the artist, "not for a pot-boiler."

Teacher was endeavoring to make clear to the youngsters the grammatical tenses. "My father had money," she pointed out, "is in the past tense. Now, Grace, what tense would you be employing if you should say, 'My father has money?'" "That would be pretense," said Grace, very soberly.

Gridley Adams is always on the lookout for journalistic gems for Everybody's Magazine. The other day he dug up this one, from the columns of the Atchison Globe: "Roup has broken out among the Atchison chickens. Chicken dinner at Union Hotel tomorrow, 50 cents. The new lunch at the old Eglinger stand. Chicken dinner, 50 cents."

Apropos of Ford's gilt-edged democracy some one told the story of the hard-boiled captain of industry to whom a friend applied for a job for his son, just out of college. "He's a bright, honest, modest young man," said the proud father, "if I do say so myself." "Modest?" snorted the industrial captain. "What in hell has he ever done to be modest about?"

Sir Harry Lauder said at one of his numerous farewell banquets in New York: "We Scotch are a much maligned people. A Londoner said to me one night: 'A conundrum for you, Sir Harry. What's the difference between a Scotchman and a cocoanut?' 'Give it up,' I said, after a bit of hard thinking. 'You can get a drink out of a cocoanut,' said he."

The old farmer had been to market, had got good prices for his cattle, and feeling flush, bought several yards of cloth, intending to have the wife make him a suit of clothes. Unfortunately, on the way home he lost his purchase. Much annoyed at his expensive carelessness, his helpmeet told the vicar. A week or so later the vicar met the good man and hailed him with the query, "By the way, Mr. Green, have you heard anything about your cloth?" "Morning, noon, and night," said Farmer Green.

An English celebrity who is noted for his quickwittedness, his high temper, and his scarcity of cash, was breakfasting alone at his club one noon when a collector broke in on him and presented his bill. The celebrity exploded. "Don't you know any more of the usages of decent society," he demanded, "than to break in on a man while he is breakfasting? Don't you even know the rule of any club? Go outside and send your card in!" The collector, humbly and abashed, withdrew. Following directions, he sent in his card, which the celebrity inspected through a monocle. "Tell him," he told the club servant, "that I'm not in."

The dear old Scotchwoman tramped miles over the hills to get a bottle of medicine for a small boy who was ill in her remote village. When she had described the symptoms, the doctor set about preparing the mixture, one ingredient of which was a poison which could be administered only in the smallest quantities. She watched him pouring it out with the utmost care into the measuring glass. He poured a little from the bottle, held the glass up to the light, and then put in a few more drops. "Ah doctor," she said reproachfully, "you needna be sae stingy. Remember, it's for a puir wee orphan laddie."

A schoolteacher in a Western town, wishing to extend her rather scanty knowledge of the stories of Edgar Allan Poe, inquired at the delivery desk of the rural library for "The Gold Bug," adding, "I can't seem to find it in the catalogue, but I am sure you have it. A friend of mine had it out last week." The librarian glanced at the card-catalogue drawer over which the teacher had been poring, and smiled a superior smile. "No wonder, Miss Smith," she explained with patient gentleness. "You're looking under 'Fiction.' Turn to 'Entomology' and you won't have any trouble."

In Scotland there is told a story of one Sandy McIntosh, who started to build a small outhouse of brick. He worked from the inside, and as he had the material close beside him, the walls were rising fast when noon arrived, and with it his son, John, who brought his father's dinner. With honest pride in his eye, Sandy looked at John over the wall on which he was engaged, and asked: "How do ye think I'm gettin' on?" "Fine, father; but how dae ye get oot? You've forgot the door?" One glance around him showed Sandy that his son was right; but, looking at him kindly, he said: "Oh, but ye've got a grand heid on ye, John! Ye'll be an architect yet, as sure's yer feyther's a builder!"

Writing about that celebrated wit, Charles Brookfield, a British dispenser of reminiscences gives an example of one of his tilts at Sir Charles Wyndham: "The actor-knight was then playing in his evergreen version of 'David Garrick,' and when in the club was very fond of sitting immediately underneath a portrait of the 'Great Little David' that hung in the smoking-room. One afternoon Brookfield entered the room, and seeing him in his customary chair, stared hard at the canvas above his head. 'Upon my word,' he murmured, 'it's really extraordinary. I think you grow more like Garrick every afternoon.' 'Do you, my dear fellow?' returned Wyndham in his rumbling voice, and as pleased as Punch at the unusual compliment. 'Very good of you to say so, I'm sure. So you really think I grow more like Garrick every afternoon?' 'Yes,' was the reply, 'and less like him every evening.'"

Lord Riddell, who made many American friends at the Washington Conference, speaking at a recent luncheon at the Crickieth Golf Club, related: "The greatest hero in golf history was a Scotsman, who in the year 1710 used to start playing at dawn and end by putting at the last green by candle light. Matters reached such a stage that his wife, an innkeeper, applied for a separation order. This enabled the man to make one of the most pathetic declarations in history. 'Let her have the business,' he said, 'provided she gives me sufficient to clothe and feed myself and provide myself with golf balls.' The magistrate must have thought it a very proper disposition of the marital property, because they decreed accordingly, and the gentleman lived to be ninety-five and continued his avocation."

Mr. George Robey, the English actor and raconteur, tells the story of a gilded youth of effeminate tendencies who by some fluke of luck found himself stony broke. Deciding that his best bet was America, he tried for a job on one of the boats crossing the Atlantic. After being turned down by ship after ship he almost despaired of ever getting out of England. Finally, his luck changed. He struck a boat on the point of sailing and found that a stoker had failed to show up. Joyfully, he signed on, went aboard, and was directed below by the captain. Then he disappeared. Nothing was seen or heard of him for three days. But on the fourth day the skipper suddenly came upon a resplendent figure in full yachting kit, glasses slung over his shoulder, promenading. "What the hell are you doing here?" he demanded. "I thought I told you to go below." The regilded youth gazed at the irate officer, tapped him lightly on the shoulder, and pleasantly inquired, "Oh, haven't you heard? I've left."

THE MERRY MUSE.

To Lucrecia.

(On being detained at the office.)
Tell me not, sweet, I am a brute,
That far from the domain
Of thy chaste breast and mind astute
Late at work I remain.

A brighter mistress now I chase,
A far, far blonder wren;
And with a stronger faith embrace
An ink-pot and a pen.

Yet this inconstancy is such
As thou, too, shalt adore:
I could not love thee, dear, so much Loved I not money more.
—Cyril B. Egan in Judge.

According to Yale, Harvard, and Princeton, there has been too much of this business of not letting the left guard know what the right guard doeth in the matter of paying his college expense.—Norfolk Virginian-Pilot.

A twelve-year-old London boy has made a gramophone all by himself. We are glad to hear that his kind father has freely forgiven the erring lad.—London Ideas.

ORNAMENTALS, FRUIT TREES, VINES AND FIELD GROWN ROSES

Open Daily and Sunday to visitors and purchasers

GEO. C. ROEDING, Pres.

California Nursery Company

(Founded in 1865 by John Rock)

NILES, CALIFORNIA

DESTRUCTIVE "Sulpho" compounds are the cause of motor oils breaking down rapidly under engine heat. An enormous amount of money is annually lost through the presence of these unnecessary properties in oils.

Cycol will save engine owners this tremendous amount of money lost through wasted oil, wasted fuel, preventable repairs, because it is free from destructive "sulpho" compounds. These have been removed by the new Hexeon Process used exclusively by us.

When your oil contains destructive "sulpho" compounds it breaks down rapidly under engine heat. Its lubricating value becomes quickly impaired. The oil film is broken and serious damage may result.

Have your crank case thoroughly flushed—not with kerosene. Use the correct grade of Cycol as shown on the Cycol Recommendation Chart. Use Associated Gasoline. Then notice the improved performance of your motor.

ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY
15AN FRANCISCO

CYCOL

MOTOR OIL

FREE FROM DESTRUCTIVE "SULPHO" COMPOUNDS

PERSONAL.

Social Notes.

At a luncheon which Miss Elizabeth Barrows gave for Miss Gertrude Seaver, whose engagement to Mr. Carl Bachelder, Jr., was announced some time ago, the news of her engagement to Mr. Frank Gibson Adams, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Quincy Adams of Long Beach, was told. Both Miss Barrows and her fiancé are juniors at the university, and the marriage will not take place until after Mr. Adams' graduation. Miss Barrows will spend a year in Europe with her parents, President and Mrs. David Preston Barrows, who are planning to make the trip in the spring.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Head, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stetson Wheeler, was married to Mr. Gray Hanson on Monday, November 20th, at the Regent Street home of her parents. The wedding was a very simple affair, with only the immediate members of the two families present, and no attendants. Following their wedding tour in Southern California, Mr. and Mrs. Hanson will make their home in Oakland. Mrs. Hanson is the sister of Mrs. Henry White of New York. Mrs. Walter MacLeod of Montana, Mrs. Matt Savage Walton of Kentucky, and of Mr. Charles Stetson Wheeler, Jr. Mr. Hanson is the son of Mrs. Hiram Edgar Hanson of Berkeley, and the brother of Miss Helen Hanson and of Mr. Arthur Hanson.

Mrs. Irene Rowlands Murison of Piedmont and Mr. Griffith Henshaw, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Griffith Henshaw, were married on Tuesday, November 14th. Mrs. Henshaw is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Francis Rowlands, and until her marriage Tuesday made her home with them in Piedmont. On the conclusion of their wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Henshaw will reside at the Stanford Court apartments, where Mrs. Henshaw's parents also live.

Elizabeth Ida Short and Dr. Monroe Sutter were married Sunday, November 29th, at the home of the bride's father, Mr. William Short of San Francisco. The bride was attended by Miss Edith Harrison, the bridegroom by Mr. Herbert Stockton. The couple departed for Los Angeles, but after the honeymoon will reside in San Francisco.

The marriage of Miss Sara Cunningham and Mr. Cornelius Van Hemert Engert will take place Saturday, December 16th, the ceremony to be performed at St. Luke's Church, with a reception at the Fairmont Hotel following the wedding. Two sisters of the bride, Mrs. Murray Sargent and Miss Elizabeth Cunningham, will be the attendants. Miss Cunningham and Mrs. Sargent will arrive from New York during the week and join their mother and sister, Mrs. James Cunningham and Miss Elizabeth Cunningham, at their Menlo Park home. Mr. Engert is a Californian, although he makes his home in Washington, D. C., where he is assistant to the chief of the Near East division of the Department of State.

Mr. and Mrs. George Armsby gave a ball at the Burlingame Country Club on Saturday evening for the debut of their daughter, Miss Leonore Armsby, at which there were several hundred guests. Preceding the ball Miss Armsby was the guest of honor at a dinner party at which Miss Eleanor Martin entertained at her home in Burlingame. Another dinner party was that of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth R. Kingsbury, who took their guests to the Armsby ball afterward. Miss Armsby's debut was truly an introduction, as she has been away for many years, returning only recently from abroad.

Miss Josephine Drown was the incentive for a dinner-dance at the San Francisco Golf and Country Club at which her father, Mr. Willard Drown, was the host. The guests invited to meet Miss Drown were Miss Josephine Grant, Miss Edith Grant, Miss Lillian Hopkins, Miss Leonore Armsby, Miss Edna Taylor, Miss Lawton Filer, Miss Adrienne Sharp, Miss Frances Ames, Miss Jean Howard, Mr. William Magee, Mr. George Montgomery, Mr. Geoffrey Montgomery, Mr. Frank Kennedy, Mr. Leroy Nickel, Mr. Bliss Rucker, Mr. Alfred Hendrickson, Mr. Harry Crocker, Mr. Orel Goldaracena, Lieutenant Trammell and Mr. Richard Carlson.

Invitations for another debutante ball have been issued. It will be the debut of Miss Virginia Hanna, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard J. Hanna, and will take place at the Hotel St. Francis on December 8th. At present the Hanna family is in New York, but will return to San Francisco December 2d.

Miss Adrienne Sharp entertained at a supper-dance at the Hotel St. Francis for a little group of debutantes, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Fox, Jr., chaperoning the party, which included Miss Josephine Drown, Miss Frances Ames, Miss Virginia Hanna, Miss Mary Bernice Moore, Miss Leonore Armsby, Miss Jean Howard, Mr. Orel Goldaracena, Mr. Coy Filmer, Mr. Leroy Nickel, Mr. Harry Crocker, Mr. Peter Jackson, and Mr. Homer Curran.

Mrs. Alfred de Ropp was hostess on Thursday afternoon at a luncheon which she gave at the Town and Country Club, complimenting Miss Josephine Drown and Miss Frances Ames. The guests bidden to meet them were Miss Adrienne Sharp, Miss Alice Moffitt, Miss Eleanor Spreckels, Miss Jean Howard, Miss Hélène de Latour, Miss Josephine Grant, Miss Leonore Armsby, Miss Lillian Hopkins, Miss Jane Carrigan, Miss Camilla Loyall, Miss Aileen McIntosh and Miss Alice Requa.

Mrs. Charles G. Morton observed her afternoon at home on Thursday, when she was assisted in receiving her guests by her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Huff and her house guest, Miss Mary Lewis of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Mrs. William Hendrickson, Jr., issued cards this week for an informal tea which she will give at her new apartments in San Francisco on the afternoon of November 27th. The affair will be in the nature of a housewarming, and will include the intimate friends of Mrs. Hendrickson and of her mother, Mrs. Seward B. McNear.

On Thursday Mrs. Hubert Law entertained at a bridge-luncheon at the San Francisco Golf and Country Club. Included in Mrs. Law's hospitality were Mrs. Walter Scott Franklin, Mrs. Richard Heimann, Mrs. Otto Grau, Mrs. Max Rothschild, Mrs. Dean Dillman, Mrs. Robert Roos, Miss Lucy Hanchett, Miss Alice Hanchett, Miss Mary Bernice Moore, Miss Dorothy Crawford, Miss Sally Fox and Miss Margaret Kingston.

In honor of Miss Dorothy Dukes and her fiancé, Mr. Stanley Dimm, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Simonds gave a large party at the tea-dance at the Hotel St. Francis on Monday afternoon. Miss Harriet Campbell, Miss Eleanor Campbell, Miss Janice Kergan, Miss Helen Dunbar, Miss Merodine Keeler, Miss Jean Howard, Mr. Frank Tucker, William Blair, Mr. George Cabanis, Jr., Mr. Elliott Davis, Mr. Frederick de Lopez were among the guests asked by Mr. and Mrs. Simonds.

General and Mrs. Charles Morton entertained at dinner at their home at Fort Mason on Monday evening, when their guests included General and Mrs. Carroll Devol, Colonel and Mrs. John B. McDonald, Colonel and Mrs. Andrew Rowan, Dr. and Mrs. Edwards, Mrs. Denman, Captain Harry Brickley and Lieutenant Leander Trammell.

One of the most important events for the benefit of charity was the dinner-dance at the Fairmont Hotel on Wednesday evening for the Little Children's Aid. A great many additional reservations were made in the last few days before the affair, and large parties given by the women interested in the undertaking. One of the largest parties was that at which Miss Hélène de Latour complimented Miss Josephine Drown and Miss Frances Ames, two of the winter's debutantes.

On account of the funeral of Mrs. Walter K. Wright, wife of Colonel Wright, whose passing was the cause of great sorrow to her many friends, Mrs. Charles G. Morton postponed her afternoon at home from Wednesday afternoon to Thursday.

The crowns of the former imperial family of Russia, valued at £70,000,000, are to be sold by the Soviet government, it is said.

A monument to Don Quixote is to be raised at Esquivias, Spain. It will not be the first statue raised to a character in fiction, as Barrie's Peter Pan is thus "immortalized" in Kensington Gardens. San Francisco already has its group of the Don and Sancho Panza, kneeling to their creator, Cervantes.

HOTEL RAFAEL

Special Winter Rates

$1.50 and up per day, without bath, $10.00 weekly rate. $3.00 and up per day, with bath, $15.00 weekly rate. All rooms steam-heated and modern in every respect.

Sunday Dinner $1.50

HOTEL RAFAEL is but 50 minutes from San Francisco via ferry and train or auto. Delightful, invigorating trip.

W. C. JURGENS    SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

THE HILLCREST

American and European Plan
CALIFORNIA AND JONES STS.
Phone Franklin 3240

DEL MONTE

The Largest Resort Hotel Plant in the World
Where "Thinking People" can find Recreation in Hotel del Monte's Comfort, Service and Outdoor Life. "Here every sportsman can find his chosen recreation."
TWO CHAMPIONSHIP GOLF COURSES
CARL S. STANLEY, Manager
DEL MONTE    :    :    CALIFORNIA

San Ysidro Ranch

Furnished bungalows of various sizes; situated on the foothills among the orange groves, overlooking the sea. Central dining-room, electric lights, hot and cold water. Good tennis court. Six miles from Santa Barbara, two miles from ocean. Booklet. Address MANAGER

San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara

Clark's Leadership

WE are Cruise Specialists who alone possess actual experience in cruising Round the World and have successfully managed Eighteen Mediterranean Cruises during 28 years in business. Reasonable rates for superior inclusive arrangements over itineraries of much charm in great steamers offering luxurious comfort. Secure our rate sheets for comparisons.

3rd Cruise Around the World

S. S. "Empress of France," Jan. 22d
Four months travel, first class, $1000 upward (vacancies from $1500).

19th Cruise to the Mediterranean

S. S. "Empress of Scotland," Feb. 3rd
65 wonderful days, first class, $600 upward (vacancies from $900).

With Both Cruises
Rates include hotels, guides, drives, fees; stop-over privilege in Europe. Shore excursions at all points. Complete program and rates of the Cruise that interests you; free upon request.

FRANK C. CLARK
Times Building    New York
M. T. WRIGHT, Agent
American National Bank Building
485 California Street    San Francisco

American Beauty Roses

For the Debutante.

JOSEPH'S FLORISTS
Phone Sutter 423    233 Grant Ave.

CARIBBEAN CRUISE

JANUARY 1923
Pacific Coast to New Orleans, Havana, Panama Canal, Costa Rica and Return.
Folder on Request.

BENNETT'S TRAVEL BUREAU, INC.
681 Market Street    SAN FRANCISCO

"Travel Without Trouble"

COOK'S TRAVEL SERVICE

World wide—Complete—Efficient

Inclusive Tours for Individual Travel
arranged, to start any day by any route.

Explanatory circular on request

THOS. COOK & SON

(Est. 1841)

Agents for the best lines for travel by Land, Water or Air

128 SUTTER STREET
(COOK'S BUILDING)    Phone Kearny 3512

SERVICE

To Sacramento

Observation Cars.

Dining Car Service on Meteor
leaving 4:40 P.M. through to Chico.

We Carry Baggage

SACRAMENTO SHORT LINE

5 PM
via Coast

4 PM
via Valley

10:40 AM
via Valley

8 AM
via Coast

6 PM
via Valley

8 PM
via Coast

8:15 PM
via Coast

7 TRAINS DAILY

to LOS ANGELES

| Leave San Francisco                               | Arrive Los Angeles |
|---|--------------------|
| 8:00 A. M. Shore Line Limited (Third St. Station) | 10:30 P. M.        |
| 10:40 A. M. Los Angeles Express (Ferry Station)   | 7:40 A. M.         |
| 4:00 P. M. Tehachapi (Ferry Station)              | 9:40 A. M.         |
| 5:00 P. M. Sunset Limited (Third St. Station)     | 7:45 A. M.         |
| 8:00 P. M. Owl (Ferry Station)                    | 8:50 P. M.         |
| 8:00 P. M. Lark (Third St. Station)               | 9:30 A. M.         |
| 8:15 P. M. Sunset Express (Third St. Station)     | 12:10 P. M.        |

Our Agents will gladly furnish further information.
50 Post Street.

Ferry Station

Third St. Station

Have you stood on the ACROPOLIS at ATHENS with ARISTOTLE, ARISTOPHANES, ST. PAUL, DEMOSTHENES?

One of the many rare experiences offered by the

AMERICAN EXPRESS Luxury Cruise on the

Mauretania

to the Mediterranean

From New York February 7th—66 Days of Enchantment

The MAURETANIA your home all the way

Visiting Azores, Madeira, Cadiz, Seville, Gibraltar, Tangier, Algiers, Monte Carlo, Nice, Naples, Pompeii, Rome, Athens, Constantinople, Palestine, Egypt, Corsica, Lisbon, Southampton, London (5 days), Cherbourg.

Send for illustrated announcement

AMERICAN EXPRESS

Travel Department

Market St. at 2d, Kearny 3100, or at the Emporium, Market St. near 4th, Douglas 1

STRINGER STORAGE COMPANY

Sutter near Fillmore
and
Steiner near Sutter

Conducting a Storage
Business Founded
in 1880

Storage—Shipping

Expert Packing, Protection
and Dispatch

A fully informed representative, anxious to give you any desired information,
will respond to your phone call.

Phone West 999

PERSONAL.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Mrs. William H. Langdon and her sister, Mrs. George Nelson, together with her children, are due to arrive in New York December 1st, returning six months sooner than they had expected.

Miss Maxine Marshall has closed her studio here, and gone to New York to continue her studies.

Mrs. Macondray Moore, who has been in the East for several months, returned to her home on Saturday.

Colonel Frank Elbridge Webb has gone East to bring Mrs. Webb to San Francisco next month. Colonel and Mrs. Webb plan to make their permanent home here.

Mr. and Mrs. T. V. Maxwell are at present in Venice, after a pleasant stay in Switzerland.

Miss Camilla Loyall has returned recently from France, after a long absence.

Miss Elizabeth Barrette arrived from Honolulu on Saturday to visit Dr. and Mrs. Redmond Payne and their daughter, Miss Betsy Payne. Miss Barrette is the daughter of General John D. Barrette.

Mrs. James C. Drake of Los Angeles is in San Francisco for a short time at the Palace Hotel.

Mrs. Herbert Hoover, who has spent several months in New York, has joined Mr. Hoover in Chicago. They will travel in the West for several weeks.

Mrs. Jean St. Cyr, who passed the summer at her Burlingame home, is established for the winter in New York.

Mrs. Anne Whitney Sperry of San Francisco sailed recently for France on the liner Honoric.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wheeler have returned, after a month's stay in New York, and are at their home in Broadway.

Mrs. Charles Peabody Huff left on Thursday for New York and Europe.

Mr. Henry Dearborn, president of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Company, New York, is in San Francisco on a business trip.

Miss Gail Hamilton, who has been in France for the past four years, will come to California shortly. On her return she will visit her sister, Mrs. Robert Tucker, in Indianapolis.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Lent, who have been in New York for the past several months, are expected home the latter part of the month.

Mr. Joseph Catherwood sails this week for home, expecting to come to San Francisco in time for the holidays. Mr. Catherwood has been in Europe since early spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Welch, who have passed the summer abroad, will return this month.

Mrs. Cuyler Lee and her daughters, Miss Margaret Lee and Miss Rosamonde Lee, left last Wednesday for Monterey.

Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Brown have been in the East for months. They are expected to return to San Francisco in time for Thanksgiving.

Mr. and Mrs. Duane Tweeddale returned during the week from their wedding tour, and have taken possession of their Divisadero Street home.

Mr. and Mrs. James Moffitt are established in their new apartments in Webster Street.

Mrs. William Tubbs and her daughter, Miss Emilie Tubbs, have returned from Coronado, where they spent the past two months.

Mr. Raymond Armsby returned last week from New York and Paris, where he has been for several months with his sister, Miss Cornelia Armsby.

Mr. Augustus Spreckels and his daughter, Mrs. Spencer Eddy, left on Tuesday for New York and Paris.

Dr. and Mrs. William Ford Blake arrived in San Francisco on the China Mail steamer Nanking. They have taken apartments at the Palace Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Barton T. Bean sailed on Wednesday on the Wilhelmina for Honolulu, where they will remain until after the Christmas holidays.

Miss Geraldine Graham of Santa Barbara is at present in the East. She will return for the Christmas holidays to Santa Barbara.

Major Lawrence Redington has arrived in Santa Barbara and has joined his wife and little son. They will come to Mrs. Redington's parent's home in Burlingame for the holidays. Mrs. Redington was Miss Josephine Parrott before her marriage.

Mrs. A. B. Hammond and her daughter, Mrs. Frank King, will leave this week for a month's stay in the East.

Mrs. William Magee and her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Magee, returned this week from a several weeks' trip in the East. They are at their country home in Fruitvale.

Mr. and Mrs. William Duval returned to town last month from their country home, Wildwood. They have returned to pass the coming two weeks there.

Countess André de Limur and her little daughter left last week for their home in Paris.

Recent arrivals at the Hotel St. Francis include Miss J. A. Pridham, Antofagasta, Chile; Mrs. C. T. Dozey, Mrs. Thomas Harding, Quincy, Illinois; Mrs. Lillian Lange, Santa Rosa; Mr. S. S. Sanders, New York; Mrs. Irene Orwig, Pittsburg; Mr. P. A. McCarron, Reno; Mr. Ralph H. Cake, Portland; Mr. R. S. Talbot, Seattle; Mr. Joseph Hirsch, New York; Mr. C. E. Donley, Modesto; Mr. C. M. Hill, Portland.

Thanksgiving at Del Monte.

Del Monte, which has long been popular with society folk for the celebration of holidays, will be interesting this year with a feature golf tournament and social events over Thanksgiving Day. Thanksgiving Day falls on Thursday and a number of visitors are coming to spend the rest of the week at Del Monte. The golf tournament will hold sway for the four days and it will be separate for men and women.

The old-fashioned Xmas tree celebration and golf competitions and the dinner-dance and golf tournament on New Year's will also attract attention.

Astronomical Society Lectures.

The Astronomical Society of the Pacific announces the following series of three popular lectures to be given by eminent astronomers at Native Sons' Hall in the near future: On Thursday evening, December 7th, "The Solar System and What We Know of Its Origin," by Robert G. Aitken, astronomer in the Lick Observatory; on Friday evening, January 19th, "The Total Eclipse of the Sun on September 20, 1922," by William Wallace Campbell, director of the Lick Observatory; on Friday evening, March 16th, "Recent Additions to Our Knowledge of How the Stars Are Moving," by Walter S. Adams, assistant director of the Mount Wilson Observatory. The lectures will be given in non-technical language, will be illustrated with lantern slides, and will be open to the public.

A Steam Storage Motor.

A devastating epidemic among horses prevailed in this country fifty years ago, a sort of distemper, which, while rarely fatal, caused the disablement of a great number of animals, says the Washington Star. The horse-car lines of the cities were hard hit. This condition stimulated the search for urban motor power. In the Star of October 20, the following:

"The New York street-car companies are making an effort to procure dummy engines to take the place of the horses stricken down with the prevalent disease. The epidemic will doubtless stimulate the efforts of inventors to substitute some safe motive power for street railway cars other than horses or mules. Dr. Emile Lanno of New Orleans claims to have solved the problem. His invention has been tested on one of the roads in the Crescent City and found to work successfully, saving 33 per cent. of the cost of running cars by mule power. The driving engine is of ordinary character. It has a reservoir large enough to contain 300 gallons of water, with steam room above it. The motive power is obtained by means of a compression of steam in water, the steam being conducted from a stationary boiler at the end of the track, which dispenses with firing up while under way. The steam with which the engine is charged is sufficient to perform a trip of from ten to fifteen miles."

A Mattress for a River's Bed.

In an article in the November Harper's Magazine on modern methods of flood protection on the Mississippi, Charles Pierce Burton writes:

"Most people understand the soothing effects of a good bed and a woven-wire mattress. The Mississippi River is tamed by the astonishing method of laying a woven-willow mattress on its bed at the point attacked by the current. The river does not go to sleep exactly, but it quits doing damage at that particular spot. The process is known as revetting. This mattress is 1000 or more feet long, from 200 to 300 wide and a foot and a half thick. The huge mat is made on a great barge constructed for the purpose. As the mattress lengthens, the barge drops down stream, leaving it when completed spread over the surface of the water like a great carpet. It then is covered with stone uniformly until it sinks to the bed of the stream, where it closely fits the sloping banks near the shore. In this way the point attacked is given a flexible facing, constantly reinforced by silt from the stream, which prevents further washing. The demand for brush for revetment purposes has nearly denuded the delta district of willow."

The first of the great modern telescopes was made for Sir William Herschel in 1779.

California LIP-READING School of
FOR THE HARD OF HEARING
MISS KENFIELD    MRS. POINDEXTER
Co-Principals
Demonstration classes Tuesday, 7:45 p. m.
Friday, 10:30 a. m. Representing Nitchie
School of New York. Awarding Nitchie Normal Diploma.
916 Shreve Bldg. Ph. Kearny 1666
Berkeley Branch—107 Wright Building

THE SANTA BARBARA GIRLS' SCHOOL
Resident and Day Pupils. Eleven acres.
Country Life and Sports. Sleeping-porches.
Open-air school rooms. Riding. Swimming all the year round. Basis of work, clear thinking.
MARIAN L. CHAMBERLAIN, A. M., Principal
P.O. Box 548, SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

FERNAC SCHOOL OF LANGUAGES
C or Private Instructions
Prepares for All Colleges
Kohler & Chase Bldg. 26 O'Farrell St.
Phone Douglas 6732

MOST BEAUTIFUL
Rota-Gravure
Section
in the world
Published Each
Sunday
by the
San Francisco Chronicle
ONLY
$5.20
a
Year
Including Every Sunday Feature
of the CHRONICLE

GORHAM'S FOLLIES TO-NIGHT PALACE HOTEL

World's greatest hotel attraction
every evening, except Sunday, seven
to one, in the Palm Court, Palace Hotel.
Well known cast of Broadway
favorites. Famous American Beauty
Chorus of twenty.

John Breuner & Co.
of San Francisco
281 Geary Street between Powell and Stockton

—That air of distinction—of individuality, which is the mark of quality, is strikingly illustrated in this desk and chair.

—The pieces are covered in plain tapestry, hand-painted in oils after the motive of the famous French painter Boucher of the time of Madame de Pompadour.

—The average person possibly thinks that such things as these are to be found only in small exclusive shops of New York and Paris.

—Perhaps some day you too will know the John Breuner Co. of San Francisco—for some day you will drop into this store, to see, and be surprised at what you see.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"How long will it take you to complete your trousseau, dearest?" "The rest of my life, I hope, darling."—Sydney Bulletin.

"What does your wife say when you are out so late at night?" "I am not married." "Then why do you stay out so late?"—Stockholm Kasper.

Rumb—At the "Follies" the other night my eyes felt like little birds. Dumb—How come? Rumb—Flitting from limb to limb, m-deah boy.—Chicago Phoenix.

"I heard a delicious bit of gossip about Alice at the reception." "I thought she was there in the room." "Oh, yes, but we asked her to sing."—Boston Transcript.

Wife—You used to say that you would rather be with me in purgatory than without me in paradise. Hub—Yes, and I was more of a prophet than I realized.—Boston Evening Transcript.

"Remember," said the serious friend, "your country is calling you." "I know that," replied Senator Sorghum; "but different parts of the country are calling me different things."—Washington Star.

Beggar—Do you 'appen to 'ave lost yer purse, me lord? His Lordship (hurriedly feeling in pockets)—Ah—no. Beggar—Then per'aps you can let me 'ave a little assistance, me lord.—London Passing Show.

Tom—I say, introduce me to Miss Van Coyne, will you? I'd like to marry that girl; she's a perfect bank in herself. Jack—Sorry, old man, but she has just gone into the hands of a receiver.—Boston Evening Transcript.

Mistress—Above all things you must be frank. New Cook—What's that? Mistress—Why, to let people know just what you really think. New Cook—Sure, mom, that is how I lose all me jobs.—New Bedford Evening Standard.

Mother—Is your new friend Margery what I would call a nice girl, a dignified girl? Fair Undergrad—Oh, yes. Why, when we have plays we always give her the maid's part because nobody else has good enough manners.—Columbia State.

Squire—What are those bells ringing for? Rustic—Aven't you 'eard, sir? Bill Clegg the blacksmith is being married today. Squire—But why the muffled peal? Rustic—Bill thought it would be a bit more seemly like, 'e being a widower and she not a chicken.—Punch.

Old Lady (to Major Trotter-Blount, O.B.E., D.S.O., F.R.G.S., who has kindly consented to give a little talk in the Episcopal Church on "Village Life in Thibet")—Ain't it funny, major, with all your travel an' knockin' about, that this is the first time you've ever been in Riverville!—Life.

"Your money or your life," demanded the footpad. "Are you going to take that?" asked the little man plaintively. "It's my week's wages." "I want it," said the footpad briefly. "Then shoot a hole through my hat." "What for?" "I want to submit it as evidence to the missus. The last time I told her I was robbed it started an argument that kept me up till 3 in the morning."—London Answers.

"Where were you yesterday, Jackie Jones?" asked the teacher. "Please, miss, I had a toothache," answered Jackie. "Has it stopped?" asked the teacher sympathetically. "I don't know," said Tommy. "What do you mean, boy?" remarked the teacher, her suspicions at once aroused. "You don't know if your tooth has stopped aching?" "No, miss; the dentist kept it."—London Answers.

"Billy," said the teacher, "what does c-a-t spell?" "Don't know, sir," said Billy. "What does your mother keep to catch mice?" "Trap, sir." "No, no. What animal is very fond of milk?" "The baby, sir." "You stupid! What was it that scratched your sister's face?" "My nails, sir." "I am out of patience. There, do you see that animal on the fence?" "Then tell me what does c-a-t spell?" "Kitten, sir."—Los Angeles Times.

"I'll show you an old, old tintype of the family," said she coyly, leading me into the livingroom. "Ah," thought I, "a sweet, old-fashioned maid! Lovely echo from the romantic past. Hers should be a background of hollyhocks, sweet Williams, and lilacs, with sweet music of the minuet sounding faintly in the distance." She led me to the window. "There's the damn wreck," and she pointed to a flivver at the curb.—Stanford Chaparral.

A Woman of India.

A woman of varied accomplishments, sterling character, and public usefulness of a high order recently died in India, the Maji Sahiba, mother of Bahadur Jung, ruler of Bharatpur, says the New York Times. If she had been a member of a European royal family, or an American woman prominently engaged in philanthropic and educational work, she would have had an international fame for her services. The Maji Sahiba had a wisdom unusual in either men or women, and possessed remarkable executive ability. She had no spare time except for good works. She was a severe self-disciplinarian, but tolerant of the frailties of others. Left widowed, with an infant son, she undertook his education as future ruler of Bharatpur. But she looked beyond him to his subjects. She wrote books on the care of the young and on the treatment of women. Holding fast to the best traditions of her race, she wished to perpetuate them by an anthology of folksongs which she edited. The games of the past that were worth treasuring she revived. Every year she wrote a book about her son's reign. She proposed and carried through many reforms, but she kept "the old things, too," when their influence was wholesome. This tribute has been paid to the Dowager Princess of Bharatpur: "Her best memorial is the Bharatpur that some of us have the joy of knowing—a state in which you are living, so to speak, in the pages of the most beautifully illuminated picture book, at the time of the Festival of the

Key to a Safe Deposit Box in Crocker Safe Deposit
Vaults Means
Security.

Crocker Safe Deposit Vaults
Crocker Building Post and Market Sts.

Horse, or of other great festivals; and yet a state in which you can find all that the present age has to teach of thought for the welfare of the subject."

When the Maji Sahiba attended the Conference of Princes at Delhi she gave little attention to the pageantry of the occasion. Her concern was the welfare of the independent states: she distributed a circular letter asking the opinion of the conference on "the best way to educate our sons." There was nothing too modern for this Indian lady to interest herself in. Visiting England, she took her son to the industrial cities and walked the factories with him. Before returning to India he passed an examination for a motor mechanic's certificate. Years afterward she had her grandson instructed in the science of aviation. In this many-sided woman the quality of mercy found expression in active sympathy for the unfortunate. The story is told of her intervention in the case of a girl charged with homicide. The princess went to see the girl, learned that she was ill and that an operation would restore her health. "How could we make a sick person suffer punishment?" said the Maharaja's mother. "I begged her from my son, that we might heal her first. Whatever awaits her, she will have had some good days of care and loving kindness."

New York State mills and factories employ more than 300,000 women.

Taxis That Saved Paris.

The taxicabs of the Marne, which are credited with having saved Paris by transporting three divisions of troops from the capital to the front on the critical date of September 7, 1914, are to be commemorated by representation in the Hotel des Invalides. These machines, which have been in constant service in the streets of Paris since the memorable date, have gradually been replaced till only a score are left. These are scheduled for retirement before the first of next year. In view of their disappearance a Paris paper suggested that before it is too late one be placed in France's museum of war memorials. The suggestion was immediately accepted, and a car will be selected to fill a place next to the sleeping car in which the armistice was signed.

This taxicab will be a dilapidated two-cylinder affair, but the tablet affixed to it will testify that on September 7, 1914, it carried five soldiers from Gagny to Manteuil. The tablet will also bear the famous response of a chauffeur to General Gallieni: "One must do as one's comrades do: one must go where it is necessary."

A large dog attended a motion picture theatre at Ann Arbor the other night, and lay on the floor watching the show quietly and intelligently, not once reading a caption aloud.—Detroit News.

TO LEASE
Entire Top Floor
IN
Wells Fargo Building
Second and Mission Streets
(Will Sub-Divide to Suit)

consisting of about 12,000 square feet; unlimited light, surrounded 4 streets. Janitor service and all modern conveniences. Will construct partitions or remodel to suit. Rent only 15 cents per square foot.

Apply Your Own Agent or Express Building Co.
Care of E. TROPP, Owner,
Kearny 316 129 Sutter St.

KING
COAL

High in Heat Units
Low in Ash

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS
IN CALIFORNIA

KING COAL CO.

Main Office
EXCHANGE BLOCK
San Francisco

Wholesale Only

The Catacombs of Cypress Lawn

Comparable with the luxurious tombs of ancient Egyptian kings, yet within the means of people of moderate circumstances.

A stone edifice, highly artistic in appearance, containing a magnificent chapel. Eleven Tomb Rooms, 425 Crypts.

Cypress Lawn Cemetery
Association

Phone Douglas 4772P

995 Market St.

ENGLISH
CASEMENTS
and Windows
for banks, offices, schools,
hospitals, etc

for artistic residences and other substantial buildings

CRITTALL
Steel Casements

Made in varied designs
to meet all conditions

Residence of Mrs. C. H. McCormick, Lake Forest, Ill.
Perkins, Fellows & Hamilton, Architects

Coast Representatives
J. E. DWAN, Los Angeles F. T. CROWE & CO., Tacoma and Seattle
WATERHOUSE-WILCOX CO., San Francisco J. MCCRAKEN, Portland
Crittall Casement Window Co., Detroit, Manufacturers

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXXXI. No. 2384.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 2, 1922.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE: The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $5.00 per year; six months, $2.55; three months, $1.50, payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $6.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, 207 Powell Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco Postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., Breams Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue; and at Daws Steamship Agency, 17 Green Street, Leicester Square, and can be ordered from any of the news-stands of W. H. Smith & Son. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opera. In New York, at Brentano's, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-Fourth Street. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at Adams' News Agency, Ninth and G Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & Orear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Van Noy-Interstate Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Telephone, Kearny 5895. Publication office, 207 Powell Street.
WM. J. MILLIKEN, Business Manager.

FORTY-SIXTH YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

|  |         |
|--|---------|
| EDITORIAL: "Toward Higher Ground"—Clemenceau—Washington—Independence in Education—Canada's Book Week—Editorial Notes.....  | 353-355 |
| LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.....   | 355     |
| A NEW NATIONAL ALIGNMENT: A Proposal that Republicans and Democrats of Conservative Mind Shall Co-operate in Politics..... | 355     |
| VOICES FROM THE PRESS.....   | 356     |
| OLD FAVORITES.....   | 356     |
| INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes About Prominent People All Over the World.....  | 356     |
| THE VOICE THAT BOUGHT A CASTLE: Autobiography of Emma Calvé Depicts the Career of a Great Stage Artist.....                | 357     |
| BANKING AND INVESTMENT NEWS.....   | 358-359 |
| BOOKS ON THE TABLE: Notes of Books and Authors....   | 360     |
| BRIEFER REVIEWS: New Books Received.....   | 361     |
| DRAMA: Mitzi and "Lady Billy"; "Heartbreak House"; The Thomas Concert; At the Orpheum. By Josephine Hart Phelps.....       | 362     |
| FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE.....  | 363     |
| VANITY FAIR: A Kaiser-minded Wedding—English Husbands of Today—Paris Rebuking Sin—Italy's Reno....                         | 364     |
| STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.....   | 365     |
| THE MERRY MUSE.....  | 365     |
| PERSONAL: Social Notes—Movements and Whereabouts.....  | 366-367 |
| THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....  | 368     |

The office of THE ARGONAUT in all its departments has been re-established in the Alto Building, 381 Bush Street—southeast corner of Bush and Kearny.

"Toward Higher Ground."

In another column we reprint from the New York Herald a summary of Dr. Butler's argument in support of his solemn declaration that "the time has come to move toward higher ground." Dr. Butler sees what all observant and thoughtful men see, that our present political divisions are illogical and that they tend to chaos. The traditional parties are breaking up and there is coming in their place a medley of blocs and other groups, founded in geographical, sentimental, or other special interests. Government under the conceptions of the founders of the republic, and as we have had it thus far, can not be maintained under conditions so narrowly conceived, so selfish in inspiration and intent, and so confused. Truly, it is time that men who think alike with regard to essential things should put to one side minor and trivial considerations and move toward higher ground. Dr. Butler, as the Herald points out, is no transcendental theorist, no dreamer of dreams, but a practical man who along with many other kinds of knowledge knows his book of politics. He sees clearly that if our system is to be maintained and if our government is not first to degenerate into trivial and selfish groups and finally drift through chaos into autocracy, men of conservative mind, men of vital knowledge, must put aside all but essentials and "move to higher ground." We commend to careful attention Dr. Butler's argument as summarized elsewhere. It points, we profoundly believe, a way towards a re-organization that is absolutely necessary unless we are to drift upon a sea of troubles and end up—God knows where!

Clemenceau.

For a man who has observed men and things for the better part of a century—and who has been married twice—Monsieur Clemenceau is a poor psychologist. He ought to know that the surest way not to revivify love is to chide love's delinquencies. American affection for France is an abiding tradition; it found concrete and emphatic expression from the first gun of the war to the last. Nor did it cease with the passing of the war, for even today America sustains many and continuing forms of providence and charity in France. But affection for France on the part of America does not imply American approval of everything said and done in the name of France by the emotionalists and temperamentalists who hold so large a part in forming French opinion and in directing her policies of government. M. Clemenceau comes to us with doubled-up fists arraiging us for not supporting France at points where her course appears to us—as it does to the world in general—as conceived in narrow and selfish spirit and calculated by its tendencies, not only to impoverish France, but to promote chaos of European finance and industry. Americans are not convinced, much less won, by invective. We are not pleased to be told that we are derelict in respect of our obligations. We think we understand what our obligations are quite as well as or better than M. Clemenceau or any European.

Despite the fact that half a century ago M. Clemenceau spent a few years in America, he remains a man of narrow vision. At the peace conference he was interested in whatever related directly to France; to all else he was indifferent. Doubtless he knows his France, but apparently he has little knowledge of the rest of the world, and assuredly he has only a slight grasp upon the tendencies of human nature. Now we are told that having by his early utterances created antagonisms he will tone down his future addresses. Well he may, though we suspect that already the purpose of his mission is irrevocably lost. So long as he shall stay with us he will be accorded the hospitality due to a distinguished visitor, to a man of high and notable career. But he will not induce the United States to change its policy in regard to Europe nor will he augment the sense of good-will on the part of this country toward France.

M. Clemenceau might well have taken counsel from Mr. Wilson's experience upon his return from Europe, in the early months of 1919. It will be remembered that the then President landed at Boston, where he hoped to begin a glorious and triumphal progress to the national capital. He opened the ball by a speech at Boston in which he challenged his critics, berated them as men of pigmy minds and proclaimed himself a man of fighting blood. That was the beginning of the end. If Mr. Wilson, instead of coming home in the verisimilitude of Ajax defying the lightning in angry and imperious mood, had used the soft pedal, he would probably have put over his precious league. He lost through assumption and assertion and through vituperative arraignment a good-will that might have been his support. The country, we think, is to be congratulated upon his indiscretion, for as things have turned out we should now have been involved in a sad mess if we had assumed the obligations Mr. Wilson wished to put upon us.

But the psychological lesson is none the less definite and impressive. It finds new illustration in the failure of M. Clemenceau to win America's favor. He blew in too furiously; and now the attitude of the American public towards him is merely that of tolerance of a famous and worthy but garrulous old gentleman whose departure for home will duplicate the pleasure that attended his coming. If at another time France shall wish to conciliate America and win her coöperation, she will do well to keep her Tiger at home and send instead a kindlier and more ingratiating agent.

Out of the Clemenceau incident there ought to come to Europe a quite definite consciousness that America will not now or at any other time involve herself with the League of Nations as now framed and organized. Not yet does Europe appear to understand that definitely and permanently we decline to entangle our country in an alliance that would place any part of American sovereignty in hands other than American. Even Mr. Lloyd George, so late as a month ago, expressed the belief that America must ultimately "come in." Verily, America will not come in. She will coöperate in all ways that accord with her obligations as she comprehends them. But she will not put into alien hands the formulation of her policies or the direction of her forces, military, financial, or other. She will lend a hand precisely as she has been doing these past eight years, but the direction of her hand will be from the government at Washington, and not from the headquarters of the league at Geneva.

That's flat and it may well be taken as final.

Washington.

Grouch and ill-humor rule the hour at Washington. Among the returned senators and representatives—those Republicans who were defeated and those who were reelected as well—there is disposition to blame the slump upon the Administration. The members of Congress seem not to understand that the public resentment which has all but revolutionized the political character of the next Congress (the Sixty-Eighth) is aimed, not at the President, but against Congress itself for its trifling opportunism, for its persistent truckling to the prohibition vote, to the labor vote, to the soldier vote, to the farmer vote and to other special and local groups. Yet in their hearts every mother's son of them knows that the President has with the country a standing far above and beyond his own. The fact, for it surely is a fact, that while Congress is in disfavor the President still remains in high popular regard gives him, if he shall choose to take it, a new mastery of Congress. It is not the sort of mastery he hoped for. The situation is far from ideal as related to his conception of things and to his intentions. It is a mastery forced by circumstances, since somebody must lead, and if the President will not then where else is leadership to be found?

In what he has done in the matter of the subsidy bill we have what appears to be the spectacle of Mr. Harding with the bit in his mouth. His definite championship of the subsidy bill was against the wishes and advice of foremost men in both houses. His determination to proceed in defiance of congressional counsels marks a distinct development in what may be styled his administrative character. But while Mr. Harding has spoken in positive terms for the principle of subsidy, there is reason to believe that he is not keen as to the particular form shipping legislation shall take. What he most seriously wants is to end an intolerable situation. The Shipping Board and its fleet is costing the country an unconscionable sum annually. It is a sum difficult to determine because the proceeds of ship sales go into the maintenance account and the organization is to that extent subsisting on its capital. Mr.

Harding believes that a subsidy will be less expensive than the present system. He is primarily intent, however, on getting a substitute, any substitute that promises to lessen the expense and at the same time give us something of a merchant marine.

As a result of the late election the radicals in the Senate hold the balance of power. Their votes combined in a solid block could advance or defeat any measure. But any approach to solidarity is not in accord with the character of radicalism. Always in such groups—and the immediate situation again demonstrates the principle—there are too many programmes and too few harmonizers, too many generals and too few privates. Senator La Follette got back to Washington flushed and swollen with his success in Wisconsin. He promptly called the press correspondents about him to issue to the world his programme for assuming national leadership of all the forces of unrest and discontent that expressed themselves at the polls on November 7th. With characteristic modesty he spoke for all—for the farm bloc, the farmer-labor group, the government railroad ownership partisans and the rest. He let it be known that he personally would call a series of conferences of the radicals in and out of Congress to sit from time to time in advance of and during the sessions of the Congress that comes in next March. In setting forth what the radical elements wanted he made no constructive presentments, demanding only destructive measures. This in its final summing up and boiling down implied defeat of all the Harding proposals.

Concurrently upon Mr. La Follette's assumption, upon his individual initiative, of the headship and mastership of the radical forces, Senator Capper, chairman of the farm bloc, announced a programme for that organization. It is affirmative rather than negative, save for the ship subsidy, to which he announced his personal opposition, although knowing that some of his bloc associates were committed to it on a trading basis. Capper wants the Muscle Shoals project put through, rural credits, other rural financial legislation, the cooperative marketing bill and various other bills of that sort. Further, he wants repeal of certain vital parts of the Esch-Cummins Transportation Act. His programme touches the La Follette programme at few points, being notably reticent in regard to the old La Follette proposals for nationalization of railroads and abolition of the Supreme Court.

Senator Borah had gotten in a blow or two before even La Follette or Capper. He presented no specific programme, but gloomily declared that the Republican party must reform itself and cease opposition to the direct primary law or the goblins of radicalism would get it. Now both Capper and Borah, while suspicious of each other, are united in wrath against La Follette for getting the spotlight on himself and attempting to impress the country that the lunatic fringe is the main body of this assumed revival of Progressivism. Briefly stated, the situation is that all these stars in the Progressive firmament are moving, each in his own orbit, and getting further and further away from anything like harmonious organization. Indications are that in time there will be collision and that there will be reenacted on the Senate floor a delightful imitation of the famous Donnybrook Fair. When radicals fall out—and radicals always fall out—the destruction of the republic has been moved forward into the future indefinitely.

Much of the trouble arises from the fact that La Follette and Capper are self-chosen candidates for the Republican presidential nomination in 1924, and each is fearful that some other radical may beat him to it. Our own Hiram has not at this writing yet returned to Washington, but when he gets there there will be another addition to the presidential would-bes. It is intimated by friends of Mr. Johnson that he appraises the situation as ideal for himself. Other candidates, he thinks, will kill themselves off and make it easier for him as a candidate on whom all of the radicals and a considerable body of conservatives may be brought to combine. What the mind of Senator Borah may be with reference to the presidential nomination is not known. He likes to play a lone hand. He is never happier than when placed as he is now in a detached attitude. He is positively opposed to making a personal campaign for the nomination on the ground that he has not the means to do so and will not permit others to provide for campaign expenses. Probably he is not individually hopeful, but he is in a position to spoil a lot of other presidential candidacies and is likely to do it—Mr. La Follette's first of all.

Precedent lends little favor to senatorial candidates for the presidency. Mr. Harding, to be sure, went straight from the Capitol to the White House. But this is the single instance of its kind in the history of the republic. Usually by the time a man has served in the Senate he has created antagonisms enough, great and small, to set him back in the roster of non-availables. We suspect that this is now the position of La Follette, Borah, Johnson and other senators who may cherish hopes of riding in on a radical wave in 1924. Among radicals not now members of the Senate there are two men with presidential aspirations—ex-Senator William S. Kenyon of Iowa and Henry Ford of Michigan. Kenyon was long the champion of farmer legislation and he was the founder of the farm bloc in the Senate. He is a fairly strong man, thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the Western farmer class. He has political experience, is an effective spellbinder, and as a candidate would have the support of farmers' organizations throughout the West. Of Henry Ford it is hardly necessary to speak. His is perhaps the most widely advertised personality in the country excepting only President Harding. He has money to burn—and to spend—and he does not mind spending it. His platform, as defined in his weekly newspaper which is distributed gratis to users of Ford machines and tractors, is of the ultra-radical sort. Ford, of course, has no fitness for the presidency, since he has no experience in political life, no background of economic or historical knowledge, no restraints of any kind upon emotionalism or whimsicality. But he would no doubt make a formidable presidential candidate just as he made a formidable though unsuccessful senatorial candidate in Michigan. As between Kenyon and Ford the former is far and away the better man, and all considered, he is the most likely man in the radical group for the presidential nomination in 1924.

Independence in Education.

There are multiplied indications of a tendency general throughout the country to put over the business of education upon government—state and national. In California the state supports a great university and pays directly from the state treasury 48 per cent. of the cost of maintaining the public school system. In other states, more notably in the West, this situation is practically duplicated. Everywhere there is urgency for expansion of state-supported universities and for increase of the percentage of state support for public schools. In Oregon an initiative law has just been decreed by popular vote practically abolishing private schools for children under the age of sixteen; and similar proposals are quietly being urged in California and elsewhere.

The movement towards making the support of primary and elementary schools a state as distinct from a local charge proceeds naturally enough from a disposition on the part of local communities to avoid direct taxation. Where support comes from the state treasury it does not touch directly and consciously the local community, which is thus befooled with the idea that it is getting something for nothing. Of course it must pay in the form of increased state taxation, but that is not felt because it is not seen. As related to colleges and universities there is another factor in the case. It is one of the many effects of the high cost of living. The endowed colleges find their fixed incomes inadequate to increased charges growing out of increased cost of everything that enters into their maintenance. Salaries of professors, prices of apparatus and books, care and maintenance of grounds and buildings—all these items run to larger figures than previously; and while the annual budget of each institution is necessarily larger than formerly the income from endowments or other fixed sources is relatively less. So the endowed or independent schools are now appealing to the public either for enlarged endowments or for support from the state treasury—more frequently the latter. Concurrently, the state universities are all launching campaigns for increased appropriations. All these things taken together comprise a movement to put over the whole business of education upon the state, and it is none the less a vital movement because it is in large degree unconscious as related to the ultimate effect.

Schools, large or small, supported by the state quickly fall into alliance with politics. We see this in our state university; we see it again in the hundred-and-one efforts to popularize education and thus to make appeal for votes favorable to state support. Verily it is a dangerous tendency, for education supported by the state inevitably adapts itself to the aims and pursues the projects of whatever political interest is in control of government. State-supported schools must please the politicians who hold the door of the treasury. How the system of state support and control of education works out has been exhibited on a large scale in Germany. The German schools have been subordinated to the policies of the state. An entire generation has been brought up—schooled and drilled—in the theories of the powers dominant in the state. Thus the mind and the character of the German people—to their ruin and shame—have been bent and dwarfed to an immoral accord with the ideas and the policies of the Hohenzollern. No more striking illustration of the flexibility of the human mind, of its capacity for acceptance of wrong ideals and principles even to the degree of moral disaster, has ever been afforded.

These considerations should be in every thoughtful mind, and they ought to be effective in inspiring policies tending to maintain the independent school. Schools, for example, like Stanford University and Mills College are enabled by their independence of state support to stand above state control. They may be described as bulwarks against a tide that tends, not to independence of mind, not to freedom of mind, but to enslavement of mind. If we would preserve the spirit of independence in education, the spirit of freedom in teaching and in thought, we must not allow the independent school to go by the board. It is pertinent to add that while this writing is not intended as a special plea, none the less it may well be interpreted as such in relation to efforts now making to bring up the endowments of Stanford University and Mills College. These institutions merit support not more for what they are doing for general culture in California than for the fact that as independent schools they are sustaining the cause here of intellectual and moral independence in education.

Canada's Book Week.

Special publicity weeks are not a monopoly of our own country. Or perhaps they are contagious. Canada has recently celebrated a book week which was either primarily or incidentally for the purpose of refuting the gross German libel that our northern neighbor is an uncultured desert. The point is that the book week had that satisfactory result, for since the typical Teutonic accusation was made in 1913 we conclude that the Dominion of Canada did not take the taunt seriously. The alternative, of course, is that it was taken very seriously, indeed, to the point of deliberation and nine years' carefully nurtured culture. We incline to the interpretation that the book week's mustering of native talent is but throwing off a nonchalant denial to the ex-German government. After all, it takes more than nine years to grow even an indifferent author and we notice no Daisy Ashfords among this northern constellation.

A pamphlet published by the department of education of Ontario for the Canadian minister of education presents a fair summary of current Canadian books—notable ones only being included. And we venture to say that a similar epitome of any other nation's contribution to the phenomenon of culture would be no more imposing. And, with relative census figures considered, we would hesitate to match a similar investigation of our national output in the past year or two. We can boast more best sellers, but it must be remembered that one of the most remarkable of those phenomena was the Canadian "Maria Chapdelaine," a book that achieved the distinction of becoming a classic and a best seller immediately on publication. And it is surprising how many old friends reveal themselves as Canucks in this bulletin of the Ontario department of education. We wonder how many people know that Bliss Carman hails from New Brunswick or that Harvey O'Higgins, though he resides in New Jersey, is from Ontario. Lord Beaverbrook, as every one ought to know, is also from New Brunswick, and Sir Gilbert Parker, as every American novel reader does know, is a Canadian. In fact when one thinks of Canadian literature he thinks of Sir Gilbert. There are doubtless many well-informed people who think of him as the sole representative of Canadian letters. But he is only one of several dozen distinguished novelists listed by the department of education in its efforts to give the lie, albeit belatedly, to Germany's kultur map in which "Canada shared with Africa the distinction of being black, that is, of 'having no assignable culture.'" Robert Service and Vilhjalmur Stefansson are two more noted Canadians, the intrepid explorer having first seen light in Arnes, Manitoba, the poet being a Canadian and a Vancouverite by adoption.

The low temperature, which is doubtless conducive to clear thinking, seems to produce an unusual proportion of rather solid books by comparison with our publishers' output, which is so largely fiction. Fiction occupies less space in the book week bulletin than do the serious classes of education, agriculture, government, history, sociology, etc. Nor is Our Lady of the Snows without her representative women writers. We are pleased to note that two of the most charming books that came our way during the past year are listed to Canada, namely, Elizabeth Montizambert's "Unnoticed London" and Mazo De La Roche's delectably funny "Explorers of the Dawn." But of course humor is not an unknown Canadian quality, as witness Stephen Leacock of international funny repute. We have not previously mentioned Professor Leacock, as it would be blatantly trite to advertise him as a Canadian. He has managed that on his own. Although there are scores more that challenge comment we must content ourselves with the foregoing high lights and the fact that the book week fulfilled its purpose. Canada might further retaliate by a culture map of her own in which Germany should be painted, not black, nor even red and black, but red.

Editorial Notes.

In the muchness of his saying Brother Gordon now and again says a wise thing. But sometimes his foot slips, as in classifying Senator Borah with Mr. Bryan. The two men are alike in the simple facts that both are fat and both eloquent. But there the resemblance ends. Bryan is a blatherskite who talks with his mouth, which long ago lost any connection with his brain. Nobody has better defined his processes than the late Representative Cushman of Washington State. "My mother," said Cushman, "had three sad-irons, but only one handle. She worked with one till it cooled down, then she released the handle and grabbed an iron fresh from the kitchen stove. So with Brother Bryan. He has many irons, but only one handle. He works with one until it cools down. Then he puts that aside and claps his handle upon whatever looks like hot stuff and slams away again." Mr. Borah, on the other hand, is a man of mind, a man of knowledge, a man of courage, a man of intellectual and moral force. If he is oftentimes wrong, he is frequently right. It remains to his everlasting credit that he led a movement that saved this country from an incalculable responsibility in relation to the muddled and muddling affairs of Europe. Mr. Borah, despite his many excesses, must not be confounded with that sounding brass and tinkling cymbal that goes by the name of William Jennings Bryan.

The governors of eleven Western states, in conference at San Francisco within the week, recommended a tax of 2 cents per gallon upon gasoline consumed by automobiles, the sum so collected to be used in maintaining the highways. This may or may not be the best way to make the users of the highways contribute to their support. But assuredly either this or some other means ought to be devised to make the dancers pay for the fiddling. Our highways have been created at prodigious cost. They are being used—in a measure they are being destroyed—both by legitimate and illegitimate users. We are in debt for our California highways in the tidy sum of $73,000,000. Only a minority use the roads, but all of us contribute to pay interest on the debt. It is only fair that those who find their advantage or their pleasure in running over these roads should make special contribution for their upkeep.

In view of the fact that the most successful development of the coöperative marketing principle for food-stuffs is found among the citrus food producers of California, it is difficult to understand why there should be such effort at Washington to put over a new coöperative marketing act. Since the laws as they stand are good enough for the organizations in California, why should they be further muddled with for anybody else? However this may be, the coöperative marketing bill has the endorsement of the farmer organizations throughout the country and is being promoted by the farm bloc—or rather, we should say, it is being promoted by the promoters of the farm bloc. But while thus favored the pending bill is opposed by students of economics, who pronounce it vicious because its purpose is to produce a monopoly and a monopolistic control of food production. It is a scheme, so its critics declare, leading up to centralization of control of food products, well safe-guarded from anti-trust laws. It is significant that Barney Baruch is acting as financial adviser to the leaders in this coöperative project.

As the census bulletins relating to prisons and penal institutions, statistics of the insane asylums, etc., come out they are affording a vast deal of comfort both to the wets and to the dries. This because anybody can take the figures and make them show anything that may be desired. Under one interpretation prohibition is a failure; under another it is a howling success. Of striking importance is the fact that the number of prisoners in Federal penitentiaries increased from 3018 on July 1, 1917, to 5440 on July 1, 1922. In the same period the number of inmates in state prisons increased from 41,871 to 44,283; the number of persons confined in municipal and police stations decreased from 25,855 to 21,635. Now the wets find comfort in the statistics of Federal and state prisons, while the dries are made happy by the decrease in the inmates of city prisons and police stations because this manifestly points to a decrease in the number of drunk and disorderly cases. Increase in the figures of Federal prisons is due to circumstances easily explained. The prohibition laws have compelled the Federal judiciary to take on the functions of police courts to such an extent that Congress has had to add more than twenty new judges to the United States District Court bench. If the prohibition laws have largely increased the population of Federal penitentiaries by sending to them a large number of persons convicted of bootlegging and allied offenses, it is not reasonable to deduce therefrom that the prohibition laws are a failure. Aside from this, there is to be considered that a great war in which this country participated has been fought and finished in the period covered by the current reports. Following a great war criminality invariably increases. Again, increase in the number of inmates in state prisons and county jails is at a percentage rate fairly normal compared with the normal rate in increase of population. On the whole then it seems unreasonable to assume—however they may be regarded—that the prohibitory laws have produced and are solely responsible for an excessive increase in criminality.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Eminently Worthy.

SAN FRANCISCO, November 17, 1922.

TO THE EDITOR—Sir: Why not offer Justice Shaw to Washington for President Harding's consideration as one of California's sons worthy of filling one of the judgeships soon to be named? He is a lifelong Republican—a kindly man—whose legal ability no one questions. H. S. MOORE.

Side Light on the Oregon Education Law.

SAN FRANCISCO, November 20, 1922.

DEAR MR. HOLMAN: In re your "Lock-Step" editorial, please read the enclosed dispatch, which casts a sidelight on the situation in Oregon:

PORTLAND, ORE., November 11.—The majority in favor of the compulsory school attendance bill, passed by the voters of Oregon in the election of last Tuesday, will approximate 16,000. This became evident today, when 90 per cent. of the vote had been tabulated. Advocates of the measure themselves had not anticipated so large a majority although they had expected to win.

Opponents of the bill already have announced that they will contest it in the courts on the ground of alleged unconstitutionality. Whether they will seek to enjoin Governor O'Leary from certifying the bill, in the hope of preventing it from being declared law, or wait until it becomes effective four years hence and then bring proceedings designed to prevent its enforcement, they have not decided. If the former course is decided on the attack will be made early in January. Joseph A. Hill, head of a private school for boys here and director of one of the organizations which opposed the bill, said decision as to the course to be followed would be made soon.

The victory for the bill was won notwithstanding the fact that newspaper publicity was preponderantly on the side of the opponents. Two of the most influential Portland newspapers actively opposed it. None openly favored it. Opponents carried their advertising campaign all over the state and into papers small and large everywhere. Proponents confined their advertising campaign to a comparatively few advertisements. Paid speakers and volunteer speakers who made public addresses also were largely on the side of the opponents. Advocates said comparatively little, but results showed they were not to be swayed from their determination.

One of the facts brought out during the campaign was that in five public school districts of Oregon, wherein the schools are supported by taxation of the whole district, all the teachers are Roman Catholic nuns who appear in school in their religious garb. This fact was used as an offset to the arguments being made by the Roman Catholics that the rights of minorities would be infringed by the proposed bill. In the districts referred to the Protestant minorities had been outvoted by Roman Catholics, who thus turned the public schools over to their own organizations.

The bill just adopted will become effective in September, 1926. Thereafter, by its provisions, all children between the ages of eight and sixteen, inclusive, must attend the public schools five days a week during the school year.

These Many Years—and Again!

NEW YORK, November 21, 1922.

EDITOR ARGONAUT—Dear Sir: You have in the past received from the undersigned a donation in behalf of the San Francisco Fruit and Flower Mission, when it put its best foot forward, to make as many families as possible happy on Thanksgiving.

Will you kindly do so again this year, with the enclosed fifty dollars, and oblige. M. R.-M. F.
[With enclosure of $50.]

A NEW NATIONAL ALIGNMENT.

A Proposal That Republicans and Democrats of Conservative Mind Shall Co-operate in Politics.

(New York Herald.)

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, statesman, philosopher, has come to recognize the fact that our two dominant political parties have ceased to be efficient instruments for carrying on our public business of today.

Dr. Butler is no political theorist. He is a hard-headed, clear-thinking, practical man in his politics as he is in his educational and administrative work. Dr. Butler has been a Republican all his life, a stalwart Republican at that. For many years he has been one of the great figures in state and national conventions and one of the great figures in guiding and shaping the policies of the party.

In 1912 on the death of James S. Sherman, candidate for Vice-President on Mr. Taft's ticket, Dr. Butler was put on the ticket by the Republican National Committee to fill the vacancy. With such a setting it is obvious that Dr. Butler is no political renegade. So when he comes out clearly and strongly for a new political alignment, as he did in his important address recently before the Institute of Arts and Sciences of Columbia University, his utterances carry unusual weight and have marked significance.

Referring to our political situation, Dr. Butler says: "In our approach to the study and discussion of public problems, we are misguided and blinded by the shibboleths of a party division which no longer represents the facts. Today the division of office-holders, office-seekers, and the voting public into Republicans and Democrats means little or nothing except struggle for public place and public authority. In the Congress at Washington and in many of the states, these party names have only the reminiscent significance of the label on an empty bottle of champagne."

"The time has come to move toward higher ground. The overwhelming majority of Republicans and the overwhelming majority of Democrats who are insubstantial agreement on all fundamentals, should speedily find ways to take such steps as may be necessary to form a Democrat-Republican party (to revive a name that was in use in this country a century ago), which would represent the predominant liberalism of our people. Over against such a progressive liberal party there would naturally be organized a distinctly radical party, to which should go all those who now call themselves Democrats or Republicans, but who are in reality neither."

"We should then have an honest and sincere division of political forces in this country, and the voters, young and old, would be able to choose, without being misled by false symbols and meaningless traditions, whether they preferred to throw their influence with the progressive liberal group or with the radical group."

"Under such a reorganization of political forces, our constructive liberals would be brought face to face with our destructive radicals, and the question whether the American Federal form of government established by the Constitution should be preserved and extended to meet new needs and to solve new problems, or whether it should be wholly or in part overturned and discarded, would be sharply presented to the American people. Under such circumstances American political education would proceed apace."

"It is my frequently expressed judgment that free institutions can be effectively maintained over any considerable period of time only by the two-party system. The two parties must, however, be really two, and not merely two shades or aspects of one. The appeal to differ must be an honest and sincere appeal, and when a party wins or loses in submitting its programme to the electorate, we must know distinctly what it is that has been won or lost. Otherwise, our political battles are sham battles, our political slogans are meaningless and we are acting in a fashion unworthy alike of our obligations and of our opportunities."

"The overwhelming majority of Americans believe in their Constitution, their Federal form of government, their guarantees of civil and political liberty and their independent judiciary. But this overwhelming majority, by maintaining a purely artificial division among themselves, play directly and daily into the hands of the enemies of America as we know it. The struggle for place and for public authority is so keen that a relatively small minority can by threatening party success or party pride gain marked concessions for its own peculiar views against the will and the principles of the great majority of those who bear the same party name."

"The radical and the destructionist is entitled to his opinions, and to do what he properly can to secure their approval by steadily increasing numbers of his fellow-citizens. But he is not entitled to do all this under false pretenses and while wearing a false uniform. So long as present party conditions continue destructive radicalism will gain increasing influence in this country and will do increasing damage, just because it is in position shrewdly to use one reluctant party organization and then the other, and to play them off against each other, to the great entertainment, you may be sure, of Beelzebub and all his admirers."

Dr. Butler's vision was never more clear than it is in respect of our present unsound political situation.

The conviction has long been in the hearts of the American people that something was wrong with us politically. The sense that our two political parties were not playing straight with us, that the issues between them were manufactured issues, that they were insincere issues, that they were ephemeral issues without bottom and substance, gripped the conscience of the nation.

And it is because of this groping in the darkness that a deadly apathy has possessed the nation in respect of its politics. We say deadly apathy because without keen, individual, vital interest in the politics of a democracy on the part of its citizens no democracy can progress along right lines, no democracy can last.

No expression better fits conditions of today than that wise expression of Abraham Lincoln, "You can fool some of the people all the time, and all of the people some of the time, but you can not fool all of the people all of the time."

And fooling the people, making fools of the people, is what these two old political parties are doing and have been doing for a quarter of a century—doing because there are no longer any genuine, basic issues between them.

The fault isn't so much with the men who dominate these parties today, with the men who live off these parties, with the men who make politics their business, as it is with the American people, who have permitted themselves to become the tools of crooked politics.

The men manning our political parties today are no worse than the men who have manned our political parties in other times. But in these other times the citizens of the country took a vital interest in their government and the machinery that operated their government.

There is no power among men which, unchecked and uncontrolled by a superior power that imposes on it balance and poise, will not gradually become dishonest, overbearing, autocratic, impossible.

The response of the public to Mr. Munsey's address delivered at the American Bankers' Association recently held in this city in which he set forth the dangers of our present political situation and pointed the remedy makes it clear that he gave definite expression to sentiments deep rooted in the hearts of the American people, but as yet indefinite in phrase and name.

And now Dr. Butler, with his keen intellect and power of position, comes forward, eloquently urging the menace of citizenship apathy and of citizenship drifting in our politics. He urges what Mr. Munsey urges, that we must have a realignment in our politics, a realignment true to the sentiments of the American people, true to the belief, the conviction of the American people.

VOICES FROM THE PRESS.

CONGRESS AND THE ELECTIONS.

(Washington Star.)

Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, announcing his programme of progressivism, which includes a determined opposition to certain pending legislative proposals, assails the practice which keeps in Congress for three months after the national election men who have been defeated at the polls. This raises an old question, often discussed, and as often laid aside as involving great difficulties in correction. The Federal election schedule was established at the outset on the basis of existing conditions. Communications were difficult and slow. A complete poll of the balloting could not possibly be had at the time of the organization of the government within one or possibly two months. It was contemplated that the retiring Congress should finish its work while the personnel of its successor was being determined.

As communications have been improved and made more speedy the system has developed differently from the expectation of the founders. The newly-elected Congress is known to a man before the next regular sessions begins. Ever since the telegraph was established, therefore, there has been the possibility of a repudiated Congress continuing for three months or more at work after the verdict of the people has been rendered and become generally known.

To correct this condition it will be necessary to shift the whole political calendar. The Constitution contemplates that the retiring Congress shall be the judge of the election of the President and Vice-President. It therefore must sit after the presidential election. This requirement is based upon a logical principle that the new Congress, chosen at the same time as the President, may itself be subject to the question of legality. Moreover, the vote-canvassing or retiring Congress must be in session before the inauguration of the President in order to certify to his election.

These questions have arisen heretofore in connection with the proposal to change the date of the inauguration. Whenever the more clement date of the last Thursday in April—the time historically appropriate owing to it having been the date of George Washington's induction into office—is proposed objection is raised that this would prolong the term of the retiring and possibly repudiated Congress, and a counter plan is usually advanced to curtail that term and have the new Congress to assemble and the President inaugurated early in January. But this would require the old Congress to assemble at some time subsequent to the election and canvass the vote, unless the system were fundamentally changed and the newly-elected Congress were made the canvassing body. If the newly-elected Congress were charged with this duty it would have to go in session before the inauguration of the President, sufficiently in advance to provide against a hiatus in the presidential office.

Taken altogether, the issue raised by Senator La Follette does not lend itself to easy solution, even if a change in practice were desirable. There are certain advantages in the retention of the old Congress in being after an election just as there are undoubtedly, at least in theory, advantages in immediately putting the popular will into effect through a prompt assemblage of the national legislature.

THE SAN FRANCISCO "ARGONAUT."

(Theodore Price in Commerce and Finance, New York.)

The Argonaut, now in its forty-sixth year, is as vigorous as ever under the editorship of Alfred Holman, who, like his paper, is known throughout the world of journalism and letters. It is to be doubted whether there is another weekly publication anywhere that has a more distinguished body of readers than the Argonaut or wields as much influence in proportion to its circulation.

From the first issue it has been unique in its literary quality, its independence, and its courage.

As a newspaper it has always been conspicuous for its personality and the dynasty of talent by which it has been edited through its now long life. Here is to its continued success and power. It is often ultra conservative, and I frequently differ from it, but my disagreement with its able expositions does not diminish my pleasure in reading them. The Argonaut is a national institution of which San Francisco is and may well be proud.

MEXICO'S MANŒUVRE.

(New York Times.)

The Mexican government seems to think that it has very cleverly scored off the American State Department. It announced in its own Congress, and sent word to all the South and Central American republics, that the United States had been detected in an intolerable attempt to dictate Mexican domestic legislation. If the intention of the Obregon government by this move was to provoke a great outburst of patriotic resentment and to insure an enthusiastic rallying of the Deputies to its support, the success achieved was instantaneous. But in any far-sighted view of the really important questions pending with the United States this adroit diplomatic stroke, as it might be thought by the Mexican government, must be considered highly ill-judged.

Secretary Hughes, restraining his indignation at what he might have denounced as a breach of confidence, gives a plain tale of the actual occurrences. In line with the conciliatory attitude of our government toward Mexico, an alternative to the original demand that a treaty be signed securing American property rights in Mexico had been proposed. It was argued that the end desired could be reached by an act of the Mexican Congress. The suggestion was that by legislation the apparent menace to American interests contained in the famous Article XXVII of the Mexican Constitution could be removed. Thereupon a draft of the bill was shown to our chargé d'affaires at Mexico City and by him sent on to the State Department. Secretary Hughes declares that he supposed his opinion was sought in this way by the Mexican government itself, and that it would not be unwelcome. In deciding that some parts of the measure as drafted were not satisfactory to our government he thought that he was doing only what the Mexican government desired him to do, and that he was merely contributing to the agreed settlement for which both sides were hoping. Far from any idea of intervening or dictating in a matter of internal lawmaking in Mexico, he believed that he was working acceptably for the restoration of better diplomatic relations between the two countries and for the recognition, as soon as might be, of the Obregon government by the United States. But now the Mexican government has made its flamboyant "gesture," and the far is in the fire.

It would be extreme to say, in the light of what we now know, that the Mexicans laid a trap for Mr. Hughes. It might have been more prudent for him not to pronounce upon the bill in the Mexican Congress until it had been given its final form and enacted. But his motives were unquestionably friendly, and he was conscious only of giving the advice and help which he supposed to be requested. The result is unfortunate, for now Mexican pride has been successfully inflamed by President Obregon and the entire negotiation with our State Department given a most unhappy turn. Explanations may follow which will relieve the new tension, but for the present it can not be denied that the whole Mexican negotiation has fallen into a good deal of a mess.

KANSAS AND THE INDUSTRIAL COURT.

(Boston Transcript.)

There seems to be a prevalent impression hereabout that Governor Henry J. Allen of Kansas was defeated for reelection last week. Governor Allen himself was not a candidate for reelection. It is, however, true that the voters of Kansas apparently repudiated his policies in the election by choosing, instead of the candidate whom he favored, a Democrat who is flatly opposed to the industrial court law. But it has been made clear by the Transcript's correspondent at Topeka that this proceeding does not mean the repeal of the law or the abolition of the court, since the Republicans are in an overwhelming majority in the new legislature, and the industrial court is approved by the Republican party in the state. The election of Davis is a feature of the general protest of Republican voters against the management of the party, but there has been no overturn in Kansas, as is clearly evidenced by the election of seven Republican congressmen out of eight.

OLD FAVORITES.

My Lost Youth.

Often I think of the beautiful town
That is seated by the sea;
Often in thought go up and down
The pleasant streets of that dear old town,
And my youth comes back to me.
And a verse of a Lapland song
Is haunting my memory still:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

I can see the shadowy lines of its trees,
And catch, in sudden gleams,
The sheen of the far-surrounding seas,
And islands that were the Hesperides
Of all my boyish dreams.
And the burden of that old song,
It murmurs and whispers still:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

I remember the black wharves and the slips,
And the sea-tides tossing free;
And Spanish sailors with bearded lips,
And the beauty and mystery of the ships,
And the magic of the sea.
And the voice of that wayward song
Is singing and saying still:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

I remember the bulwarks by the shore,
And the fort upon its hill;
The sunrise gun with its hollow roar,
The drum-beat repeated o'er and o'er,
And the bugle wild and shrill.
And the music of that old song
I robs in my memory still:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

I remember the sea-fight far away,
How it thunder'd o'er the tide!
And the dead sea-captains, as they lay
In their graves o'erlooking the tranquil bay
Where they in battle died.
And the sound of that mournful song
Goes through me with a thrill:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

I can see the breezy dome of groves,
The shadows of Deering's woods;
And the friendships old and the early loves
Come back with a Sabbath sound, as of doves
In quiet neighborhoods.
And the verse of that sweet old song,
It flutters and murmurs still:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

I remember the gleams and glooms that dart
Across the schoolboy's brain;
The song and the silence in the heart,
That in part are prophecies, and in part
Are longings wild and vain.
And the voice of that fitful song
Sings on, and is never still:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

There are things of which I may not speak;
There are dreams that can not die;
There are thoughts that make the strong heart weak,
And bring a pallor into the cheek,
And a mist before the eye.
And the words of that fatal song
Come over me like a chill:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

Strange to me now are the forms I meet
When I visit the dear old town;
But the native air is pure and sweet,
And the trees that o'ershadow each well-known street,
As they balance up and down,
Are singing the beautiful song,
Are sighing and whispering still:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

And Deering's woods are fresh and fair,
And with joy that is almost pain
My heart goes back to wander there,
And among the dreams of the days that were
I find my lost youth again.
And the strange and beautiful song,
The groves are repeating it still:
"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

The island of Jersey in the British Channel has had no income tax, and as a result it has been invaded to such an extent from London as to cause a serious housing shortage. California is in no such danger.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Owen Wister, author of "The Virginian" and other novels of American life, is a great-grandson of Charles Kemble, the famous Shakespearean actor.

Professor Ernest L. Bogart of the University of Illinois has recently sailed for Persia to serve for a year as advisor to the Persian government on banking and currency.

Maxim Gorky, the Russian novelist, and Chaliapin, the newest great discovery in the operatic world, were brought up in the same poorer-class street in Kazan, the capital of an eastern province of Russia.

Mrs. Grafton Minot, the brilliant granddaughter of Henry Cabot Lodge, is manifesting her heredity of five generations of political pedigree. Two years ago she took a course in public speaking in the interests of her frequent addresses before the voters of the Bay state, and she has recently matriculated in a school of political economy and civil government. She is rarely absent from either Senate or House gallery when a notable speech is announced and is a devoted reader of the Congressional Record.

Clemenceau's appearance is being described copiously in every paper in the country, but whatever his personal idiosyncrasies, according to a New York "film editor" who has edited miles of war film, the "Tiger" is only infallibly recognized by his extraordinary soft hat which he wore in every picture taken of him during the war, and which is described by the film expert as follows: "It looked as if the famous statesman had carefully sat upon it and then rolled it up in his pocket for a time before donning it."

E. Scrymgeour, prohibitionist and political dark horse of the recent British elections, who defeated Winston Churchill at Dundee, is said to be quite as picturesque a figure as the former secretary for the colonies—though in a different fashion. Scrymgeour, who is noted as the soap-box orator of Dundee, is described by the Pall Mall Gazette as "a man of fanatical convictions, with a raucous voice and a violent style of oratory." Now that a few years have elapsed since the war and a few memoirs have been published about it, the inevitable reaction has set in against the men who ran the war. Hence the rise of the Scrymgeour type of politician.

Robert Low Bacon, who was elected to the lower house of Congress from the first district of New York State, thus succeeding Frederick C. Hicks, is the son of Robert Bacon, Secretary of State under Roosevelt, and afterward ambassador to France. Mr. Bacon's youth was spent in Washington, D. C. He was graduated from Harvard in 1907, and has been quietly training for a political career ever since. During the world war he was a major of artillery in the New York division under General Cornelius Vanderbilt. Mr. Bacon was married in 1913 to Miss Virginia Murray and has since resided in Westbury, where he has an extensive estate.

Dr. Carl Joseph Wilhelm Cuno, director of the Hamburg-American steamship line, who succeeds Joseph Wirth as premier of the German Republic, is popular with the majority of Socialists as well as with the Central, Industrial, and Democratic parties. Dr. Cuno had resigned from the service of the German government in 1917, where he had rendered valuable assistance in the unraveling of the intricate valuable assistances that resulted from the world war. In 1918, on the death of Albert Ballin, Cuno became director-general of the Hamburg-American line. In 1919 and 1920 he was called upon by his government to participate as one of the German experts in the armistice negotiations at Treves and Brussels and later in the peace negotiations at Versailles and the reparations conference at Brussels. Dr. Cuno was born in Suhl, Thuringia, Germany, July 2, 1876. His father was a privy councillor in the German ministry. Cuno, who is interested in a number of German shipping concerns, has many friends in shipping circles in the United States.

Prince Gelasio Caetani, a member of the Italian royal family and one-time a "mucker" in the California Grass Valley mines, has been appointed Italian Ambassador to Washington. The prince has been the mayor of Rome for the past year or two. Caetani was an architect by profession, but was bitten with the idea of frontier life upon meeting Cecil Rhodes in Paris some where around 1900. Rhodes discouraged South Africa, but introduced the young Italian to Henning Jennings, a Californian. Jennings gave the prince letters to John Hays Hammond and Fred W. Bradley, and in 1902 Caetani came to America. In one year he had graduated from Columbia University and then he wired Bradley for a job. He came West and for three years worked as a regular miner in the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mines in Idaho. Later he worked underground in Mexico, Alaska, and Grass Valley. In 1910 he opened an office as a mining engineer in San Francisco, and in 1912 went into partnership with Albert Burch of this city, where he remained until the outbreak of the war. During the war Caetani saw real service and was decorated by his government, and in December, 1920, he was elected mayor of Rome, having been active in Italian politics. The prince is a son of the late Duke of Sermoneta. He was a member of the Pacific Union, Bohemian, and Engineers' clubs while a resident of San Francisco.

THE VOICE THAT BOUGHT A CASTLE.

Autobiography of Emma Calvé Depicts the Career of a Great Stage Artist.

Suppose a poor child in France said to her playmates: "Some day I shall buy me that castle." And suppose "some day" came, and she bought the castle. Would that be Romance, with a large, upper-case R? It would—unbelievable Romance, which as Dunsany would say is the very best sort, and in fact the only thing that is Romance: the realization of the impossible. That happened.

Suppose you were half a honeymoon couple, either half you are qualified to be, and you and the other half were floating in a gondola on the Grand Canal, floating amid palaces, under a silver moon, in a city of unearthly beauty. That would be Romance, too; and, one would think, quite enough at one time, and more than one really deserved. But suppose in addition there came floating across the dreaming waters, from another gondola, a wondrous, velvet voice, one of the great voices of the world, pouring out golden arias from the world's greatest composers, melodies that welled from the heart of a hurt nightingale, rendered with the truest art of a matchless singer; songs after song until the sorrow that impelled them was exhausted. That happened, too. It must have been earth's highest hour of art. It could happen once, but every chance and probability are against its ever happening again. Not a box-holder in the Diamond Horseshoe of the Metropolitan could buy that magic hour, or bring its poignant beauty back to earth.

Emma Calvé was the poor little French child, and the singer of the Grand Canal. In "My Life" she tells us of both these incidents. Her song that wondrous night was forced from her by some one of those sorrows that persist in invading the lives of the most envied women, against which not even the ballot seems able altogether to protect them. She does not tell us just what grieved her, but gives us this account of its extraordinary result:

Ah! To sing! To sing once more before I died! To cry my anguish to the night before the eternal silence should engulf me!

Like one distraught, I threw my cloak about me and went out into the night. A barque lay at the foot of the stone stairway outside my door. I found myself seated in it, floating along the still canal, between the dark water and the darker sky. I began to sing, madly, passionately, all the songs I had ever known. Gay or sad, tender or tragic, they poured from my lips in a turbulent flood. I sang as though I would never sing again, spending my strength, my grief, my life; giving to the unresponding shadows all that I had of beauty and of art.

Only when my voice died in my throat, and my parched lips could make no further sound, did I realize my strange situation. As one who painfully returns to reality from the uncharted seas of fever and delirium, I looked about. I saw where I was, and became conscious of what I had been doing.

All around me a moving mass of small boats pushed and jostled. They had gathered from every side like spectre ships filled with whispering, wondering people. In a barque that almost touched my own, I could see a young couple, closely embraced, watching me with a startled, ardent gaze. How long had my voice been leading this phantom procession through the night?

I shrank back under the hood of my gondola, my one desire to hide from these people I had so strangely evoked! I gave my gondolier the address of a friend whom I knew to be absent and in whose empty palazzo I could take sanctuary. Many hours later, when I thought the way was open, I left my place of refuge. As I stepped into the waiting gondola, a black shadow slipped out from the protection of the building opposite and followed me to my hotel. The lovers on the lagoon had not given up the vigil, and had waited to discover my real abiding place!

The next morning a bouquet of flowers was brought to me with this message:

"From Paul and Jeanne, who love each other greatly and to whom you have given an unforgettable night! May the blessing of God be upon you, you who are the bearer of the Fire Divine."

No matter in what part of the world the singer may be, the anniversary of that night brings a message of love and gratitude from the mysterious Paul and Jeanne. To sweeten life in such fashion is given to very few. It is poetic justice that one who can so sweeten it should own a castle.

Mme. Calvé has written a good piece of autobiography, one that shows a reliable sense of values. About such a person there are certain things one naturally wishes to know, and she tells them, simply and directly, and with no effect of egotism, pardonable though it might have been. True, the book contains much about Calvé. But there is nothing here that modesty should have concealed. We naturally like to learn of the early manifestations of such abilities, and she gives us this among other incidents of her childhood in a remote district of southern France:

Once back at the convent, it was my turn to make my comrades tremble. I told them the tales I had heard, with additions and amplifications of my own. I finally discovered a way of singing them in a weird minor key, a sort of melodious chant, which I improvised as I went along, and which added greatly to the effect.

I remember hearing a colloquy between one of the sisters of the convent and a small comrade of mine.

"What is the matter with you, my child?" the sister asked.

"Why are you crying?"

"Oh, ma sœur!" the child answered, all in tears. "What fun we are having! Emma Calvé is making us cry with her songs!"

The great "Carmen" was born in the Department of Aveyron, "on a wild and rocky upland of the Cevennes Mountains, where my forbears had lived for countless generations." One of her earliest recollections is of a bit of play acting under critical circumstances. Her parents moved into Spain, and there she had to serve, at the early age of five years, as a blind for a wounded young Carlist her mother had hidden in the child's bed. It was a "sleeping part." She felt a great responsibility, and played it well, and the wounded Carlist got away in safety from the Spanish soldiers. Soon after she strayed into a gipsy camp, and from that adventure she learned the wandering people and their ways. Later it served her in good stead when she came to costume and interpret "Carmen." But there was a long novitiate. She was taken from the convent to Paris by her mother, who had determined that her daughter's voice should be cultivated. But she had to use credit, a promise to pay when the pupil should earn the money. Calvé says:

She was most fortunate in finding a well-known singing teacher, Jules Puget, a retired tenor of the opera, who was willing to accept these conditions. The lessons which he gave me were excellent. He taught the principles of the Italian bel canto, with which he was thoroughly familiar. He was a talented artist and had created several important rôles during his long career.

At the end of three years of study, he advised me to obtain some concert engagements in order to accustom myself, little by little, to singing in public. My very first appearance was therefore on the concert stage in the tiny hall of the Théâtre de la Tour d'Auvergne. The building has long since disappeared, but at that time it was a favorite place for young singers to make their debuts. I was given fifty francs for my songs. With what pride, with what triumph, I carried my earnings back to my mother!

Like all singers, I have been asked repeatedly at what age I began to sing. It seems to me I have always sung! In my earliest childhood I used to hum all day long, imitating everything I heard around me. My mother had a very beautiful natural voice. Although not a musician, she sang charmingly all the old songs of France, folksongs in the dialects of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, shepherds' songs from our own country of Aveyron. She had an enormous repertory. One day we tried to count and classify them. We found that, between us, we knew about two hundred!

In Paris we lived, my mother, my brothers and I, very modestly indeed, in a little apartment on Montmartre. I left home before 8 every morning, walking halfway across Paris to my lessons, through rain or snow, in soaking shoes. I grew rapidly and was very thin.

Next door to us was a market run by a burly butcher and his wife. They greatly enjoyed listening to my singing when, during the hot summer days, I practiced with my windows open. One day my mother stopped at the shop to do her marketing.

"Your daughter has a pretty voice," the butcher remarked, as he prepared the order. "My wife and I think she is a wonder!"

"It's very kind of you to say so," my mother answered.

"She works very hard, and I hope some day—"

"Yes, she's a fine singer," he interrupted, "but she's too thin. Much too thin! She ought to eat lots of beefsteaks and cutlets!"

My mother was taken by surprise at what appeared to be a rather crude way of increasing trade. Before she could answer, however, the astonished man continued:

"I'll tell you what I'll do," he said. "To prove to you how much confidence I have in your daughter's future, I'll open an account for you at this shop. You can pay me when she makes her debut!"

I have never forgotten these good people. When I was singing at the Opéra Comique, we always sent tickets to the musical butcher and his family. I have no doubt he sat there, telling any one who would listen to him:

"Do you see that wonderful singer? It is entirely due to me that she is in such fine form!"

Then came the Brussels début, and her early stage experiences. Here is one of them:

I remember that I made a great hit at my first performance of Cherubin. Such an absurd incident! I laugh to this day when I think of it.

I was, as I have said, very slender at this time, and the appearance of my thin legs, spider's legs as my mother called them, gave me the gravest concern. I hit upon a brilliant plan of overcoming this defect; and when I appeared on the stage the first night of the "Noces de Figaro," enormous calves of cotton swelled the dimensions of my silken tights! The old gentlemen in the front row trained their opera glasses on these superb affairs. I was conscious of their attention and proud of my success until I left the stage at the end of my first scene. In the wings the infuriated director was waiting for me.

"Ah, ça!" he shouted, pointing at my unfortunate legs. "What are those hideous lumps, I'd like to know! I am tempted to stick pins into them! Stupid child! Don't you know that every one is laughing at you? Do you expect any one to believe that those fat excrescences belong to you? Take them off instantly!"

And so it was that for the second act I had to make my entrance with my poor beanstalk legs all unadorned! My mortification was intense. I tried to cover my legs with my cloak, but it was impossible. The audience saw the change instantly, and was highly amused. I was applauded and cheered uproariously, and indeed I doubt if I ever created quite so much excitement at the Monnaie as I did on that night of painful memory!

To the successful, "old home week" is like to be as trying an experience as the first venture out of the old nest into the unfeeling world. "I knew him when" has become a proverb, and the old environment is seldom comfortable, often disappointing. Not even our divine Calvé escaped that old-home chill. This is how they received her who was to become a star of the Metropolitan:

The most curious thing of all, however, happened the day that I visited the little village from which our family came. The mayor ordered the tocsin rung to call the peasants in from the fields. They came running from all sides, just as they were, carrying their pitchforks, their rakes and scythes, expecting at the very least to find the town hall in flames! The mayor leaned out of the window and addressed the crowd in the square below.

"I have made you come here," he proclaimed in stentorian tones, "to listen to a little nightingale of these parts. It will sing to you from this very window. Listen well, and I am sure you will acclaim our accomplished compatriot, Mademoiselle Emma!"

Standing at the window, my eyes raised to the beautiful mountains, I sang with all my strength, with all my heart, gay songs and sad songs—everything I knew. I did my best, wishing to show all my skill to these men and women who had known me since my birth.

Finally I stopped. A dead silence greeted my efforts. Astonished, a little hurt, I went down among my listeners, addressing myself to my old friend the shepherd.

"Blaise," I said, "what is the matter? Why don't you applaud me? Did I sing as badly as all that?"

The old man was hardly able to hide his emotion.

"Poor child! Poor little girl!" he stammered, his voice breaking with tears. "How you scream! How it must hurt you! You are wearing out your life! You are wearing it out! Such waste of strength! It is dreadful."

So was the news that filled my mother and myself with joy and pride received by our people! Every one was heartbroken, even to my cousin, the canon, who, that I might enter into paradise, said his mass every morning for twenty years for the salvation of my soul!

But Russia! Ah, Russia was different. We can perhaps understand a little more about bolshevism when and we learn that the Russian temperament expressed itself in an attempt to eat her. They sent her water lilies for Ophelia's mad scene, and she twined them in her long, black hair. She says:

The effect was apparently excellent, for I was recalled twenty times after the curtain went down. The Russian public is very artistic, very sensitive, and, above all, very enthusiastic. The last time I came out, I found the cadets climbing up on to the stage! They had chased the musicians from their places, swarmed into the orchestra pit, and were clambering over the footlights to get at me. The first thing I knew, I was surrounded by the young madcaps, who kissed my hands, my scarf, the sleeves of my dress, overwhelming me with compliments and exclamations of delight. I could not get away from them. Finally, in an excess of an enthusiasm, one of them bit my arm!

"Fiends! Savages!" I cried. "Are you going to devour me? Let me pass!" And with a heroic effort I succeeded in reaching my dressing-room and shutting myself behind locks and bars!

There are many nuggets of stage experience and anecdote in the book, some of them most diverting. Mme. Laborde, one of Calvé's teachers, knew her world and what had happened in it, and retailed this incident:

She had known the mother of Patti, apparently a most disagreeable woman. One evening this fiery lady was singing with a companion who had false eyebrows. At that time it was the custom to shave the natural eyebrows and glue on false ones at a more dramatic angle. Patti's mother, jealous and furious at the success of her comrade, began to stare at her fixedly.

"What is the matter?" the other whispered under her breath.

"Your right eyebrow has fallen off!" came the answer, sotto voce.

The poor victim, horrified, tore off her left eyebrow, and remained for the rest of the act with only her right one!

And here is a typical bit of European humor, the sort of old-worldly playfulness that surprises us at times with the proof that they are human, after all:

Apropos of Lablache, I recall a most diverting incident. He was staying at one time in the same hotel in which General Tom Thumb, the dwarf, had an apartment. Tom Thumb was very popular and had many visitors. One day a lady, seeking the General, entered Lablache's apartment by mistake. She found herself face to face with the enormous singer, who, beside being very tall, was corpulent as well.

"I was calling on General Tom Thumb!" the astonished visitor stammered.

"I am he," answered the giant gravely.

The lady, thoroughly bewildered, protested in surprise. "But, monsieur, I was told that Tom Thumb was the smallest man in the world!"

"Ah, yes," Lablache answered. "That is true, in public. But when I am at home, I make myself comfortable!"

There is even a Turkish feature, and since Turks are much in the public eye just now, this will have its interest, especially as it affected Calvé's own technique:

During my sojourn in the Holy City I often went to hear the choir of the Sistine Chapel, which was at that time under the direction of the last of the eunuchs, Mustapha, a Turk, like all his companions. He had an exquisite high tenor voice, truly angelic, neither masculine nor yet feminine in type—deep, subtle, poignant in its vibrant intensity. He sang the classic church music admirably, especially Palestrina. He had certain curious notes which he called his fourth voice—strange, sexless tones, superhuman, uncanny!

I was so much impressed by his talent that I decided to take some lessons from him. The first question I asked was how I might learn to sing those heavenly tones.

"It's quite easy," he answered. "You have only to practice with your mouth tight shut for two hours a day. At the end of ten years you may possibly be able to do something with them."

That was hardly encouraging.

"A thousand thanks!" I exclaimed. "At that rate, I will never learn! It takes too much patience!"

Nevertheless, with the tenacity which is a fundamental part of my character, I set to work. My first efforts were pitiful. My mother assured me that they sounded like the miauling of a sick cat! At the end of two years, however, I began to make use of my newly acquired skill; but it was not until my third year of study that I obtained a complete mastery of the difficult art.

These special notes, which I have used since then with great success, are rarely found in the ordinary run of voices. I have tried repeatedly to develop them in my pupils; but, in spite of hard work and close application, I have never found one pupil who has been able to imitate them.

What a far cry it is from the Paris opera to a little town in California! Here a postal clerk refused to give Calvé her mail. He had seen her the night before, and she was much prettier. So she must identify herself. Luckily she had the means to do it, and in a convincing manner. She stood there in the little postoffice and sang him the "Habañera." And if we were that clerk we should go on refusing strange ladies their mail until Dr. Work fired us, just on the chance that it might happen again. Probably the Victor Company would have paid her ten thousand for what the postal clerk had for refusing her a letter.

It is not often so great an artist gives such an intimate glimpse of her aims, her efforts, her work, her joys and sorrows, her life. The narrative is well composed, the book as a whole very enjoyable.

My LIFE. By Emma Calvé. New York and London: D. Appleton & Co.; $4.

BANKING AND INVESTMENT NEWS.

San Francisco bank clearings for the week ending November 25, 1922, were $149,600,000, as compared with $120,500,000 for the corresponding week of five days last year; an increase of $29,100,000.

Will the maelstrom of inflation move westward over Europe? That is the question that is disturbing financial observers.

With the continued decline of the mark fostering unsettlement in all other exchanges, with the fall of the coalition government in move the first cause of rising prices. Although the decline in coal movements up to October 1st was about 950,000 cars, half of which must be made up before the end of this year, and the car shortage has recently been reported at fully 140,000 cars, it has been estimated that the traffic can all be moved. If the railroads accomplish what they have set out to accomplish, the final three months of this year will witness the heaviest movement of freight in the history of American railways, with a total of 11,450,000 car-load shipments. Such a movement does not seem to be so difficult of accomplishment when comparison is made with the 11,329,907 cars moved in the last three months of 1920, and the 10,174,297 in 1921.

The labor outlook is not so promising. In regard to the shortage of common labor, President Grace of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation recently declared that "it was becoming a very serious matter in the steel industry, causing in many instances curtailment in operations and delay in construction work." As a remedy Mr. Grace favored "a selective system of immigration, safely protecting the United States against the importation of undesirable, but a system which would admit desirable workmen, particularly from Central European countries." There can be no doubt that such a remedy would be effective, but at best it will be a long time coming and may be expected to receive unintelligent handling at Washington. The labor shortage, therefore, is likely to become the most serious of our domestic problems and may exert a pernicious influence on our entire price structure. If such should be the case we may run once more through the circle in which high wages bring about higher living costs, which are in turn used to boost wages again. It is more logical, however, to believe that a let-down in the urgent demand for goods, once stocks are brought back to normal, will ease the labor demand and allow a gradual readjustment of the situation.

Continued strength in the cotton and grain markets is one of the most encouraging developments. Wheat has advanced fully 16 cents a bushel since September, and cotton is up more than $20 a bale. So far the rise has not been sufficient to overcome the discrepancy between the prices the farmer receives for what he has to sell and the prices he pays for what he has to buy; but it has been a movement in the right direction. And it must be remembered that we are dealing with the third largest output of farm products in the history of the country. The latest estimates of the world's wheat crop indicate that there will be a shortage of about 230,000,000 bushels in Europe, which in a measure accounts for the resumption of export buying here which did not cease with the passing of the Near East war scare. If the price of wheat holds or continues to rise it will be one of the most favorable auguries that we could have for the future of general business, for the farmer's purchases make up about 30 per cent. of our total domestic trade.

The general business outlook continues excellent. The Federal Reserve agent at New York reports that sales of sixty-four department stores in this district "were larger than in September, 1919, 1920, or 1921," and that "the gain over September last year was 16.1 per cent., the largest increase over the corresponding month in the previous year since July, 1920, when an increase in prices was a factor in the advance." The September volume of wholesale trade in the New York district was larger than in any month since September, 1920. It is particularly interesting to note that the machine tool trade, which was hardest hit by the depression of 1920-21, is now reporting the largest increase in sales.

The stock market, after a sharp rally, quickly traversed a second period of general reaction. This tends to bear out the assumption that the upward swing has reached a temporary halting place and that reactions may be expected to become more frequent and more serious. Whether or not there will be protracted reaction still remains to be seen. It must be admitted, however, that the market slows up perceptibly on the declines and that there has yet been nothing to indicate anything more serious than a temporarily overbought condition.

Since the railroads will move a record volume of freight in the last three months of this year, it follows that their profits will gain substantially. If the market develops no more weakness than has yet been seen, it will be logical to anticipate that the railroads will, within the next few weeks, turn the general list upward again. Such rails as New York Central, Chesapeake & Ohio, Reading, Atchafalpa and St. Louis & Southwestern preferred, which is likely to go on a 5 per cent. dividend basis next January, and Southern Railway preferred, which recently resumed payments, look particularly attractive. Until the general market situation clears it would be wise to restrict new commitments to such good rails as these.

In simple unmistakable language decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission show that separation of Central Pacific from Southern Pacific lines would result in higher freight rates.

The proposed separation of the interwoven lines would make necessary two-line hauls where freight is now handled direct by a one-line haul. The principle that two-line hauls necessitate higher freight rates is clearly set forth in the Piedra Rock Company case, Decision No. 10,619 of the California Railroad Commission, Case No. 645, decided June 23, 1922, wherein the commission cites a number of decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In this decision the California Railroad Commission said:

"Railroad commissions generally, as well as the Interstate Commerce Commission, have recognized the principle that a two-line haul is entitled to a proportionately higher rate than a one-line haul.

"In 33, I. C. C. 163, in the case of Meridian Fertilizer Factory vs. A. and S. Railway Company, an arbitrary rate of 2 cents per 100 pounds for a two-line haul over a one-line haul was established. In that opinion it was stated the commission on various occasions recognized it is just and reasonable for two or more independent lines, not part of the same management or making up a through route, to charge a somewhat higher rate for a two-line haul than would be deemed reasonable for a single-line haul of equal distance.

"In 28, I. C. C. 264, being a rehearing in the matter of Sheridan vs. C. B. & Q. Railroad in the above entitled proceeding, the commission confirmed its previous conclusion allowing a higher rate for a two-line haul than for a one-line haul for distances within 500 miles.

"In 39, I. C. C. 124, the commission says: 'It is a well-established principle of rate-making that ton-mile earnings properly may decrease as the length of the haul increases, and that ordinarily rates for a one-line haul may be lower than for a movement over two or more lines.' The commodity involved in that proceeding was brick.

"In 43, I. C. C. 632, the commission says: 'Other things being equal, the rate for a two-line haul may properly be higher than the rate for a single-line haul.'

"In 44, I. C. C. 669, the commission says: 'Ordinarily the rate for a one-line haul should be lower than the rate over a three-line route. . . .'

"Furthermore, a two-line haul rate that is less than a combination of locals is obviously less remunerative to either participating company than a haul local to one line. The revenue must be divided and in all cases when such two-line haul revenue is split, one or the other or both of the lines must shrink their locals."

Exports from the United States to our neighbors in South America show remarkable gains in the new fiscal year which began with the month of July. This is more remarkable because of the fact that the fiscal year ending with June had shown a reduction of more than 60 per cent. in our exports to that continent. Every month since the opening of the new fiscal year, according to the Trade Record of the National City Bank of New York has shown big increases in the value of exports to South America despite the fact that most of the merchandise leaving the country is going at lower prices than a year ago. In fact, the value of the exports sent from the United States to South America in the three months of July, August, and September, 1922, totals 36 per cent. more than in that same period of last year, while the total value of the exports to North America in the same period show a decline of 11 per cent.; to Europe a reduction of 19 per cent.; and to Asia and Oceania no change when compared with the same months of last year. The South American market therefore is the one in which our exports show big gains in the new fiscal year 1922-3.

This increase in our sales to our South American neighbors is especially interesting in view of the fact that manufactures form the bulk of the materials which they buy from us. And it is in the exportation of manufactures that we are most concerned in considering the future of our export trade. All the world comes clamoring to our doors for our foodstuffs and raw materials, especially bread and meats and cotton, of which our surplus is constantly growing less with our increase in population, but it is in manufactures that we must make our fight in world markets. On the other hand, we clamor at the doors of other countries producing tropical foods and manufacturing materials such as coffee, cacao, india rubber, wool, nitrates and other of the natural products of South Amer-

Long Term—Non-Callable Income Tax Exempt
FLORENCE, ARIZONA
General Obligation 6% Bonds to Yield 5.25%.
Ask for Circular

FREEMAN
SMITH
&
CAMP
CO.

GOVERNMENT
BONDS
MUNICIPAL CORPORATION

SECOND FLOOR
FIRST NATIONAL BANK BLDG.
Douglas 2121

England and the rise of the Fascisti in Italy, the bear speculators in foreign exchange have everything their own way, says Forbes Magazine. And on the Stock Exchange the renewed decline in European rates—especially as the causes have remained obscure—has inspired vague misgivings, with the result that, although alarm over the Near East has rapidly subsided, stock market operators are still closely watching Europe.

While further inflation in Europe is not reassuring, progress toward the old war-time level of prices appears to be welcomed at home—at least from the stock market viewpoint. But, thanks to our far-sighted banking policy, what little inflation we may be in for appears to be something which may not rightfully be called inflation. Price advances here

H. M. Hinchman    W. R. Wentz    W. L. W. Miller

Hinchman, Wentz & Miller
General Agents

Fire
Automobile

INSURANCE

Liability
Plate Glass
Compensation

30 Leidesdorf St. SAN FRANCISCO
Telephone Sutter 437

have not been caused by a debased currency nor by redundancy of our circulating medium.

There have been two main causes, and, as these causes are temporary, we may hope that whatever sharp price advances may result will also be temporary. One cause has been railroad congestion, which has made it difficult to get commodities from one part of the country where they are not needed to other parts where they are needed—even the advance in the grain market has gathered no little of its force from slow deliveries. Another cause has been the growing scarcity of labor, which has resulted in wage advances all along the line, from the common laborers of the United States Steel Corporation, receiving less than $5 a day, to building trades workers, who are now getting as much as $20 a day.

The railroads are striving manfully to re-

McDONNELL & Co.

STOCK
NEW YORK
EXCHANGE

And Other Leading Exchanges

633 Market St., at New Montgomery
SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE SUTTER 7676
N. Y. Office, 120 Broadway
Los Angeles, 634 So. Spring St.

PRIVATE WIRES

CARSTENS & EARLES, INCORPORATED

GOVERNMENT, MUNICIPAL AND CORPORATION BONDS

ESTABLISHED 1891

Ground Floor
California Commercial Union Building
San Francisco

Telephone Douglas 6050

SEATTLE    LOS ANGELES    SPOKANE    SAN FRANCISCO

$980—plus accrued interest, will yield $60.00 yearly in

TOOLE COUNTY
IRRIGATION DISTRICT
6% GOLD BONDS

Phone Sutter 334

G. E. MILLER & COMPANY

105 Montgomery St.    229 First Nat. Bank Bldg.
SAN FRANCISCO    OAKLAND

PORTLAND    SEATTLE    BOND'S Gov't. Mun. Corp.    SAN FRANCISCO    LOS ANGELES

ica, and as it happens that our South American neighbors have not yet become manufacturers in any large degree the interchange between the two continents is a perfectly natural one, for we of the United States are now the largest manufacturing country in the world.

So it is interesting to see that the quantity of cotton cloths sent to South America in August, the latest month for which details are available, was 50 per cent. more than in the same month of last year; newsprint and book paper more than doubled that of the same month last year; galvanized iron sheets over 4,000,000 pounds against one-half million in August, 1921; tin plate three times as much in value as a year ago; wire over 13,000,000 pounds against less than 1,000,000 in August, 1921; and of automobiles sent to South America the value in August, 1922, was ten times as much as in August, 1921. And these are merely examples of the increasing popularity of American manufacturers with our South American neighbors.

We are reciprocating, too, their generosity by taking increased quantities of their merchandise, for in July of the current year our

STOCK
NEW YORK
EXCHANGE

Private Wires
Coast to Coast

E. F. Hutton & Co.

MEMBERS
NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE
HUTTON BUILDING
Montgomery and Bush Sts.
HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
DEL MONTE HOTEL

imports from that continent showed an increase of over $10,000,000 when compared with the same month of the preceding year, August a gain of $5,000,000 and September a gain of $10,000,000 over the same month of 1921, these increases in our purchases of their products including coffee, cacao, wool, hides and skins, india rubber, nitrates and many other articles of tropical and sub-tropical growth for which we are dependent and must always be dependent upon other countries. And the increase in the exchange of the products of our factories for those of the fields and forests of our nearest neighbor, South America, is an encouraging feature of our after-the-war trade.

After a trip of seven weeks' duration, in which all the large cities of the South and East were visited, F. A. Freeman of the Freeman, Smith & Camp Company, investment bankers, has returned to Portland. Mr. Freeman visited California, spent several days in Arizona and Texas, and made the trip from New Orleans to New York by boat. He spent most of his time to get an insight into financial conditions as they actually exist and now he declares that the nation is in for a protracted period of easy money conditions and that with the enormous banking reserves on hand a sharp and sustained advance of money rates is highly improbable.

"There is a tremendously greater amount of cent. for bringing out of default their four quarterly unpaid dividends and are declaring their regular 1 1/4 per cent. falling due. This improved condition is particularly pertinent as it evidences the fact that the buying power of the agriculturist is again becoming a strong factor in the business conditions of the country.

"Profitable employment of our surplus capital at what is deemed reasonable rates of interest in consideration of our tax situation is a coming problem. Europe and South America need our support badly. If we will permit ourselves to be scared by the propaganda of professional traders running down fifteen to twenty points the market value of the dollar bonds of the nations of the world with hitherto unsullied reputation and perfect records of performance those nations are not going to be able to trade with us. The defects of our recent tariff are already showing up and merchants and bankers are strong in their criticism of the new tariff.

"New York has the only real stock and bond market in the country and now the bond trading, which a few years ago was of comparatively small consequence, has with the great increase in banking capital of the country assumed very great proportions. That accumulation of investment capital devoted to fixed income securities as contrasted with stock speculation has created opportunity for a new game—'shaking down the investor.' The public mind being occupied with our general election gave the bear trader a great opportunity. He filled the public press with alarm regarding Europe and South America, taking advantage of every available straw. It was the time of customary seasonal increased demand on account of crop movement. There had been heavy speculation in stocks. A huge volume of stock dividends were being declared (to defeat the announced policy of the government to levy a surtax on surplus earnings not required in the business) creating a readjustment in the market value of the stocks, often creating an assumption of great depreciation, France and England were indulging in their usual sparring match for position and the organs of each political party were holding out to the people prospects of the nation going to the bow-wows commercially and financially if their respective candidates were not elected. Otherwise level-headed and conservative investors swallowed whole predictions of world-wide calamity and the dollar bonds of many of the nations were hammered down to prices yielding 8 1/2 to 9 per cent. and better. The advantages that were taken of the gullibility of the public is almost unbelievable. There was a long 'special' published in the New York Times predicting revolution and bloodshed in Brazil upon the inauguration of the new president November 15th. November 15th Brazil bonds that had already been going down took another violent fall running down totals of fifteen to seventeen points from the high price of the year. Immediately following the peaceable inauguration of the new president accompanied by statements in the press lauding his character and past record, Brazil bonds rose ten points in a single day. Somebody made a great deal of money.

"It must not be overlooked that there is a commission paid both by the seller and the purchaser on all securities traded in on the New York Exchange. When an investor is scared into selling the broker gets his commission. When the investor gets tired of having his money lie idle or, after reasoning out his mistake, comes back into the market and buys through a brokerage house, he pays another commission. It is good business for the broker, going and coming."

On small volume of transactions bond prices moved lower, reversing their movement of the past two weeks. The recession has amounted to a little over two and a half points from the high registered in September and is very small when the advance during the past year and a half is considered, say McDonnell & Co.

The greatest recession was in the foreign government group, which has reflected the economic conditions in Europe and the unsatisfactory news from the Near East.

Particular groups have responded, more or less, to local conditions, but in general the utility bonds have shown the greatest stability, industrials second and rails third.

Irregularity may continue for several weeks, but there are many bargains for the investor, and those with available funds would do well to consider the opportunities of the present moment, since indications point to an advance in bond prices after the turn of the year.

One of the new first mortgage bonds which has many attractive features is the Camaguey Sugar Company first mortgage 7s, due 1942. These bonds are secured by a direct first lien on all the mortgageable property of the company, which comprises about 26,000 acres of land, three mills, railroads and necessary equipment.

The capacity of the three mills owned by the company will amount to about 600,000 bags during a normal season when improvements contemplated and provided for by this financing are completed. They are capable of producing raw sugar at an operating cost as low as the average of the best fifty mills on the island. Much of the company's land ranks with the best sugar lands in Cuba, and the cane planted and available is more than sufficient to supply of the company's mills at the rated capacity.

For the past nine years operation of the Camaguey mill shows an average income available for depreciation, interest and income taxes of $4.28 for each bag of sugar produced. Income of the company from current crop available for these charges is estimated at $3.57 a bag, which is equivalent to more than four and a half times the annual interest requirements on these bonds.

This issue is very attractive, not only from the earning capacity of the company, but from the large assets behind the issue. At current quotations it yields about 7 1/4 per cent.

A bond which offers not only a short-term privilege, but may also be classed among long-term investments, is the Southwestern Bell Telephone 7 per cent. convertible gold notes, due 1925. This concern was incorporated in Missouri in 1882 and is one of the largest constituent companies making up the Bell Telephone System in the United States.

The territory which it serves is one of the most rapidly growing sections of the United States and covers half a million square miles. The earning power has been exceptionally steady, and during the past few years has increase very satisfactorily.

This bond is convertible at par into the company's 7 per cent. cumulative preferred stock with adjustment to interest and dividends. Should the notes be called for redemption the convertible clause remains in force to the date of such redemption.

No prior lien can be placed on the property, and due to the large equities behind this issue and to the good earning power of the company a high rating is accorded these notes.

Of interest to investors are the seven major provisions of the Montana irrigation laws under the act of 1909, which have been tabulated by Mr. George H. McKaig, manager of G. E. Miller & Co., San Francisco, and published in

BONDS

$850,000

Fifth Street Building

First Mortgage 6% Gold Bonds

(Secured on a 99-Year Leasehold Estate)

Due Serially 1925-47

George H. Burr & Co.

KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

NEW YORK    LOS ANGELES    CLEVELAND
BOSTON       ATLANTA       DETROIT
PHILADELPHIA    CHICAGO       PITTSBURG
SCRANTON       ST. LOUIS       SEATTLE

"A National Yet Personal Service"

money in America than there is any utility for," says Mr. Freeman. "The reserves of the commercial banks and the Federal Reserve Bank will make this perfectly evident to any one who takes the trouble to look. Liquidations of merchandise stocks and of bank loans has taken place with unforeseen rapidity and as the result banking reserves have accumulated enormously in excess of reasonable requirements. The peak of seasonal demand for crop movements has been reached. Business has been retarded by car shortages, but the railroads are handling traffic now of an aggregate amount as great as at any time in the history of the nation. "Many of the great corporations, by economizing and exercising great energies in sales, have gotten out of the precarious condition in which they found themselves and as the result are moving forward by leaps and bounds. An illustration of this is Montgomery, Ward & Co., the big mail-order house. A few years ago they discontinued dividends on their 7 per cent. preferred stock. Just recently they declared a dividend of 7 per

A Bond
We Advise You to Buy

A CALIFORNIA public utility, whose first mortgage bonds we are offering, is making net earnings of over three times the interest requirements on all its bonds. These bonds are legal for savings banks. Purchased now, they will yield about 5.80%.

WM.R. STAATS CO.

Established 1887

Alexander Bldg., Montgomery St., cor. of Bush

SAN FRANCISCO

Telephone Kearny 301

LOS ANGELES    SAN DIEGO    PASADENA

Over Half a Century of Service

Since its establishment in 1858 Sutro & Company has served three generations of investors.

Sixty-four intervening years have brought many changes in market and investment practices. Because Sutro & Company have kept pace with these changes and because the highest standards of service and advice have always been maintained, new names have constantly been added to our list.

Fast private wires connect our customers' room with all Eastern and Canadian markets. You are invited to use this service, to consult our chronological files, and to talk with us regarding any market or investment matter that interests you.

Call Sutter 3434

SUTRO & CO.

ESTABLISHED 1858

410 MONTGOMERY STREET

Members of the San Francisco Stock and Bond Exchange
Direct Wires to All Eastern Centers and Canada

Send for copy of our Investor's Manual.

INVESTMENT SECURITIES

Government, Municipal
and Corporation Bonds
for the investment of
Banks, Trust Companies
and Individuals

Inquiries invited

HUNTER, DULIN & Co.

256 MONTGOMERY ST.

Telephone Douglas 166

SAN FRANCISCO

Los Angeles    Oakland Office    Santa Barbara Pasadena       500 Syndicate Bldg.    San Diego connection with the final release of the remaining Toole County Irrigation District bonds.

The laws as applying to this and other similar districts in Montana are as follows:

- (1) That these districts are municipal corporations with full taxing powers.
- (2) That the tax for the payment of interest and principal of bonded debt be levied against the irrigable lands, but that this tax shall become a lien against the entire lands of the district of which such irrigable area forms a part.
- (3) That the county treasurer collect and be custodian of the tax funds.
- (4) That any interested party may start mandamus proceedings to compel the making of the levy and collection of the taxes.
- (5) That delinquent sales shall be made in the same manner as for state and county taxes.
- (6) That no land shall be discharged from the lien of these bonds until the entire indebtedness has been paid.
- (7) That these bonds shall be exempt from Federal income tax and Montana personal property tax.

INVESTMENT SECURITIES

COMMERCIAL PAPER
AND ACCEPTANCES

GOVERNMENT
MUNICIPAL
AND CORPORATION
BONDS

BOND & GOODWIN & TUCKER

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES    SEATTLE    PORTLAND

BOOKS ON THE TABLE.

Balloons.

It is evident that the Princess Bibesco has profited by the criticism, especially the harsher criticism, that her former book called forth. For "Balloons," her second aerial flight of fancy, is notably lacking in the more garish hues of its predecessor of the self-accusatory title. Needless to say, the score or less of pointed episodes—they are more like sky-rockets than balloons in their precision and vehemence—that Margot's sprightly daughter has here loosed for our delectation are fully as piquant as the more experimental collection of "I Have Only Myself to Blame." The two books are similar enough to cause confusion in even an accurate memory, the differentiation being that "Balloons" has been culled of the grosser features of its twin. It is a wise author who remedies his faults so speedily.

Despite their flippant ephemeral nature and their—we grieve to admit it—flagrantly decadent tone, the princess' stories have one or two real merits. It is not even fair to call them decadent because they are sincere, whereas true decadents are poseurs and fanatics. The princess is eminently sane: she calls things by definitive names, but she never applies sophistry—that earmark of decadency. For instance, she recognizes virtue not as a stage prop or a comedy lay figure, as is the custom with books claiming Mayfair as their natural habitat. We stress the sincerity rather than the superlative, the almost diabolical, cleverness of Elizabeth Bibesco because cleverness, when it is made a cult, sometimes defeats its own ambition and becomes wearisome rather than stimulating. Besides, every other review in the English-speaking press can be depended on to acclaim or exorcise the Asquithian brand of cleverness.

However, the real claim to distinction that "Balloons" and its predecessor have is one that we wholeheartedly endorse for writers of short stories—that is the absolute elimination of trite explanatory material that is better imagined than rendered into prose. We would willingly back the Princess Bibesco to rewrite any full-sized novel in one-fourth the space, keeping all relevant material and thereby making the synthesized product just four times as readable. In fact much of this author's effect of scintillating cleverness is owing to her omission of everything but the cleverness. We commend the method to the school of American short story writers who describe the inside of offices, probably for the benefit of future archaeologists. R. G.

BALLOONS. By Elizabeth Bibesco. New York: George H. Doran Company; $2.

Four and Twenty Minds

If one is satiated with the genteel mediocrity of Brander Matthews, the emasculated academicism of Mr. Canby, and the Puritanical superficiality of Paul Elmer More, he will look in vain for criticism so stimulating and original as that of Giovanni Papini in "Four and Twenty Minds." Truly, here is "God's plenty." If one is interested in philosophy he should read what Papini has to say about Berkeley, Hegel, Spencer, Nietzsche, and Croce. If one's interests are literary, he should read the essays on Dante, Swift, Calderon, Maeterlinck, Henry de Gourmont, and Walt Whitman. He may find his favorite idol knocked into a cocked hat, or perhaps his pet aversion lauded to the skies. No matter. He should read the last essay in the book—the author's caricature of himself. He can then no longer take himself seriously; he can merely thank Professor Wilkins for giving him this excellent translation of Italy's foremost living essayist.

FOUR AND TWENTY MINDS. By Giovanni Papini. Translated from the Italian by Ernest H. Wilkins. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell Company; $2.50.

The Optimist.

It is said that every dog has his day, an aphorism that we are inelegantly reminded of in the outcropping of a school of followers of Trollope and his ecclesiastical novels. Fiction is given to fashions and the present one is a cathedral background. There was Compton Mackenzie's "The Altar Steps" and Hugh Walpole's "The Cathedral" and now Miss Delafield's "The Optimist" makes a triangulation sufficiently firm to support the verdict that the church is the thing, literarily and momentarily speaking. Perhaps the novelists have only come to it as a last resort, having exhausted all other quarries.

"The Optimist," which is by the observing and dispassionate young woman who wrote "Humbug," a study in parental preference, has leant rather heavily on the recognized fact that a parson's children, for whatever reaction, are apt to be unorthodox in mental and moral tone. The psychological thesis thus baldly stated is rather thin, but Miss Delafield's adroit handling of variegated personalities justifies her choice. Any one may write a good book if he has a good story; it is the greater triumph to find interest where the vein is not promisingly abundant. We particularly like Miss Delafield's restraint. For instance, she has humor, but she does not capitalize it. There is nowhere in either her comedy or pathos a forced note—she is more inclined to dim her high lights than to polish them. But though she may lose a few customers by this reversal of the modern spirit of publicity, her work is undoubtedly the fresher for the rest of us—that is to say, the discerning.

THE OPTIMIST. By E. M. Delafield. New York: The Macmillan Company.

Notes of Books and Authors

Edward Simmons, the famous mural painter, whose memoirs have just been published by the Harpers under the title of "From Seven to Seventy," confesses that breaking into print at his age has its inconveniences. "In fact," he says, "it is a bad thing to tell all you know in one book. A friend looking over my book the other day, stopped and said in a frightened tone, 'But, Simmy, this is terrible. You have put in all your pet stories. Don't you know that you will never be able to talk again?' Never be able to talk again! What an awful thing to contemplate! Half my life gone, as it were, with one swoop of my pen."

Alan Odle, an artist who is beginning to attract attention in London, where he is compared sometimes to Audrey Beardsley, sometimes to Hogarth, has illustrated Voltaire's "Candide" with nine full-page plates and many decorations. He is a great and subtle satirist.

Among the many interesting people with whom ex-Ambassador Straus was associated in his long diplomatic career was the beautiful Queen of Roumania, who is known so widely under her pen name of Carmen Sylva. The woods always appealed to her, so when she began to publish her work at the age of thirty-five she decided to take the Latin name for "woods." That gave her "Sylva." To associate with the woods she wanted the word for "bird," but "Avis" did not suit her, so she took "Carmen," or "song," instead.

"Almost all good workers live long," says G. Stanley Hall in that remarkable work on "Senescence: The Last Half of Life," recently published by the Appletons. "The blind Dandolo, elected Doge at eighty-four, storming Constantinople at ninety-four, and afterward recalled, again victorious, was elected at the age of ninety-six to the throne of the empire, which he declined, and died Doge at ninety-seven. Newton made important discoveries for every one of his eighty-five years. Washington, the perfect citizen; Wellington, the perfect soldier; Goethe, the all-knowing poet; Humboldt, the encyclopaedia of science—all were old. John Quincy Adams fought the House of Representatives at eighty-three; Josiah Quincy attacked the Know Nothings at eighty-five—said the bats were leading the eagles. He broke his hip at ninety-two, and when Dr. Ellis called he was so charmed that he forgot to ask him how he was and went back to do so. Quincy said, 'Damn the leg.' Gladstone at eighty-three faced a hostile government, House of Lords, press, aristocracy, university, and, perhaps, a hostile queen, and said: 'I represent the youth and hope of England.'" Dr. Hall himself rounded out his three-quarters of a century when he wrote this remarkable work, "Senescence."

Dr. Henry S. Canby, editor of the Literary Review of the New York Evening Post, in addition to his other duties, is to become literary advisor to Harper & Brothers, with reference to their choice of manuscripts for publication. Dr. Canby is a lecturer in English at Yale University, American editor of the Kings Treasures Series for E. P. Dutton & Co., and author of "Definitions," a volume of critical essays recently published by Harcourt, Brace & Co.

In a widely published interview during her recent visit to America, Mrs. Asquith remarked that she did not like American women because they asked such intimate questions—which gives interest to the following excerpt from Mrs. Patrick Campbell's memoirs, "My Life and Some Letters" (Dodd, Mead & Co.): "The first time I met Mrs. Margot Asquith I was very young. I went to tea with her shortly after Pat's return from Africa. She pulled me down on a couch by her side, and said: 'Tell me, dear, tell me, I am to be trusted, are you happy with your husband?' For some reason or other for quite a long time I thought this the funniest thing that had ever happened to me. I always felt sure Margot Asquith, did I know her well, would peel my skins off one by one quickly and put a well-made crust of her own upon me. Life is too short for peeling off crusts and rearranging one's skins!"

Judge Simpson's opinion in the recent trial involving the morality of three publications of Thomas Selzert is probably unique in the history of literary inquisitorial. For the first time in the history of such trials the deciding magistrate was not content, as in the final trial liberating Flaubert, with delivering a merely negative opinion. Of the three books in question—"Casanova's Homecoming," by Arthur Schnitzler; "Women in Love," by D. H. Lawrence, and "The Diary of a Young Girl," by an anonymous writer, Judge Simpson said: "I have read the books with sedulous care. I find each is a distinct contribution to the literature of the day. Each of the books deals with one or another of the phases of present thought." It is a remarkable instance of judicial clairvoyance. But what will become of subsidized vice commissions if judges can not be relied upon to be devoid of any sense of literary values? Judge Simpson, by his opinion in this case, has likely won for himself the sort of immortality that would have accrued to the French judge in Flaubert's trial if he had said: "No, gentlemen; I do not agree with you. I think 'Emma Bovary' is a pretty good book."

Five girls from Ohio State University—Misses Katherine Bowler, Florence Ames, Elizabeth Marshall, Mary Wiendt, and Charlotte Schuster—bought a brand new flivver, toggled themselves out in knickers, and set out for a tour of the Eastern states. At Washington they got the "thrill of their lives" when Mrs. Harding took a personal interest in them. They also had an interview with the President.

The White House

Dust of the Desert

By Robert Welles Ritchie

Mr. Ritchie has given us pure romance—a welcome interlude in these days of realism and problem novels. A stirring story with a dramatic, swiftly moving plot—a vivid picture of the strange beauty of the desert that will ever be remembered. $1.75

Book Department, Main Floor
Phone Kearny 5000

Raphael Wall & Co. Inc.

Bonds for Investment

MUNICIPALS IRRIGATION DISTRICTS CORPORATIONS

Specialists in Safety

Anglo London Paris Company

One Sansome Street San Francisco
Phone Kearny 5600

The French American Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO

108 SUTTER STREET

Commercial—Checking—Savings

Resources Over $16,000,000

A General Banking Business Transacted

Commercial and Personal Checking
Accounts Solicited

Savings Accounts receive interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum

SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES $3.50

OFFICERS

Leon Bocqueraz ..... President
J. M. Dupas ..... Vice-President
J. A. Bergerot ..... Vice-President
W. F. Duffy ..... Vice-Pres. and Cashier
A. Bousquet ..... Secretary
J. T. Trillary ..... Asst. Cashier
Chas. L. Ebner, Jr. .... Asst. Cashier

Member Federal Reserve System and
Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco
The San Francisco Savings and Loan Society
(THE SAN FRANCISCO BANK)

SAVINGS COMMERCIAL

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

MARK BRANCH ..... Mission and 21st Streets
PARK-PRESIDIO DISTRICT BRANCH ..... Clement and 7th Ave.
HAIGHT STREET BRANCH ..... Haight and Betfreds Streets
June 30th, 1922

Assets ..... $76,170,177.18
Deposits ..... 72,470,177.18
Capital Actually Paid Up ..... 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds ..... 2,700,000.00
Employees' Pension Fund ..... 385,984.61

A dividend to depositors of FOUR AND ONE QUARTER (4 1/4) per cent. per annum was declared for the six months ending June 30th 1922.

The Gasoline of Quality

More mileage— the result of complete vaporization

Red Crown gasoline vaporizes completely. It forms a homogenous mixture that is consumed cleanly and powerfully, leaving comparatively little carbon residue on valves, spark plugs and cylinder walls. That's why you get better mileage out of "Red Crown"—and a cleaner, sweeter-running engine. Fill at the Red Crown Sign—at Standard Oil Service Stations, garages and at other dealers.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(CALIFORNIA)

BRIEFER REVIEWS.

Meade's Headquarters.

The continuous interest of Americans in our civil war guarantees a reception for "Meade's Headquarters, 1863-1865" (The Atlantic Monthly Press; $4), which are the letters of Colonel Theodore Lyman from the Wilderness to Appomattox. This volume, which is issued on behalf of the Massachusetts Historical Society and which is edited by George R. Agassiz, consists of letters of a young American scientist, a Harvard classmate of Alexander Agassiz, and a friend of General George Gordon Meade. Theodore Lyman, who was fortunately an admirable letter writer as well as a successful geologist and zoologist, had a post of great advantage for seeing the war from the outbreak to the conclusion of hostilities. These letters of Colonel Lyman, which constitute an unbroken record of the war, were written to his wife, who was a sister of Mrs. Alexander Agassiz. They are now selected and edited by Mr. George Agassiz, the son of the great Swiss-American geologist.

Two Juveniles.

Two attractive Dutton juveniles are "The Pinafore Pocket Story Book" ($2.50), by Miriam Clark Potter, and "The Bird-Nest Boarding House" ($2.50), by Verbena Reed. The latter is dramatized natural history for the youngsters, with fantastic illustrations in color and black and white by Oliver Herford. "The Pinafore Story Book" is also delightfully illustrated as all children's books should be, and is a collection of story and verse suitable for rather young children of the age who still demand entertainment before going to bed.

The Bookman Anthology of Verse.

A gorgeously tinted cover is the first notable thing about "The Bookman Anthology of Verse, 1922" (George H. Doran Company), which is edited by John Farrar. If you can detach your attention from the purple and scarlet irises on a Chinese yellow background long enough to open the book, you will find a representative assortment of the poetic celebrities, all the way from the three Benets to our own Witter Bynner. Others are Florence Ayscough, collaborator with Amy Lowell on "Fir Flower Tablets," Amy, herself, Zona Gale, John Dos Passos of "Three Soldier" fame, Edwin Arlington Robinson, and Joyce Kilmer.

Ice Ages.

One of the sciences to have longest withstood the era of scientific popularization is physiography, a fact the more remarkable because of the dramatic interest inherent in the subject. Joseph McCabe, who has given the public popular histories of evolution and civilization, has now published "Ice Ages" (G. P. Putnam's Sons), which is a brief and highly commendable history of the earth, with particular emphasis on the four great ice ages and their significance in the earth's evolution. Mr. McCabe, whose twenty years of lecturing has trained him in transmuting technical language into idiomatic English, states that his primers of science are meant primarily for workers who have no time to unravel technical language or masses of detail.

Ancient Man.

Boni & Liveright's Modern Library supplies many a long-felt want for the truly nominal sum of 95 cents each. The latest is Hendrik Van Loon's "Ancient Man," a classic that bid fair to follow the traditional course of classics on dusty library shelves till Dr. Van Loon sprung into fame, like Byron, overnight with his best-selling "Story of Mankind." Since then the public has discovered "Ancient Man," which was first published in 1920, and which is the same sort of thing, only more so. That is to say, Dr. Van Loon is here concerned with man from our prehistoric ancestor to the rise of modern races. "Ancient Man," like the author's more recent book, is copiously illustrated with the funny little diagrammatic sketches upon which some of the critics poured contumely. They are really indispensable to the informal and very clarifying quality of Dr. Van Loon's work.

Old Testament History.

A valuable epitome of "Old Testament History" has been recently published by the Scribners in their Life and Religion Series, which is edited by Frank K. Sanders and Henry A. Sherman. All of the handbooks in this series are concise and complete, but the present one is even more than usually interesting to the general reader. A knowledge of biblical history is indispensable to the educated person, yet the habit of Bible reading is waning and the busy layman can not but be grateful for a summary of the subject in 150 well edited pages. An appendix, a chapter on Old Testament history by its natural periods and a bibliography.

New Books Received.

OLD CROW. By Alice Brown. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.
A story of New England.

NEIGHBORS HENCEFORTH. By Owen Wister. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.
The doughboys in France.

MARY IN CALIFORNIA. By Constance Johnson. New York: The Macmillan Company; $1.75.
For girls from ten to twelve.

THE BOY WITH THE U. S. MARINES. By Francis

Rolt-Wheeler. Boston: Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company; $1.75.
Juvenile.

1492. By Mary Johnston. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.; $2.50.

A novel dealing with Columbus and his achievements.

WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS. By Delmar Gross Cooke. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $3.
A critical study.

MODERN ENGLISH ESSAYS, 1870-1920. Edited by Ernest Rhys. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; 5 volumes, $6.

THE BOOK OF A NATURALIST. By W. H. Hudson. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $3.
By the author of "The Naturalist in La Plata."

ACROSS AMERICA BY MOTOR CYCLE. By C. K. Shepherd. New York: Longman's Green & Co.; $4.

The record of a three months' motor bike journey from New York to San Francisco.

GLINT OF WINGS. By Cleveland Moffett and Virginia Hall. New York: The James A. McCann Company; $1.75.

The story of a modern girl who wanted her liberty.

ALEXANDER'S BRIDGE. By Willa S. Cather. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; $1.50.
New edition with an introduction by the author.

ROMANTIC DAYS IN OLD BOSTON. By Mary Caroline Crawford. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.; $3.

The story of the city and of its people during the nineteenth century.

DAVID LUBIN. By Olivia Rossetti Agresti. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.; $3.50.
A study in practical idealism.

REPRESENTATIVE ONE-ACT PLAYS. By Continental authors. Selected with biographical notes by Montrose J. Moses. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.; $3.

A companion volume to Mayorga's "Representative One-Act Plays by American Authors."

THE ROADMENDER. By Michael Fairless. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $6.

A new edition illustrated with photographs by W. F. Taylor of the South Downs.

THE ADVENTURE OF LIVING. By John St. Lee Strachey. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; $5.
A subjective autobiography (1860-1922).

THE SECOND EMPIRE. By Philip Guedalla. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; $5.
A review of the Second Empire.

OVINGTON'S BANK. By Stanley J. Weyman. New York: Longmans, Green & Co.; $1.90.
Another historical novel by the author of "A Gentleman of France."

THE HEART'S JUSTICE. By Amanda Hall. New York: George H. Doran Company; $1.75.
"The story of an unmeasured devotion."

BODY AND SOUL. By Arnold Bennett. New York: George H. Doran Company; $1.50.
A play in four acts.

THE LIFE OF LIVES. By Louise Morgan Sill. New York: George H. Doran Company; $1.50.
"The story of our Lord, Jesus Christ, for young people."

FANTASIA OF THE UNCONSCIOUS. By D. H. Lawrence. New York: Thomas Seltzer; $2.25.
A statement of the philosophy of D. H. Lawrence.

ENGLAND, MY ENGLAND. By D. H. Lawrence. New York: Thomas Seltzer; $2.
Short stories.

AFTER THE PEACE. By H. N. Brailsford. New York: Thomas Seltzer; $1.50.
A survey of the present condition of Europe.

THE ADVENTURES OF MAYA THE BEE. By Waldemar Bonsels. New York: Thomas Seltzer; $3.
Juvenile.

SUPPORT. By Margaret Ashmun. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.
The story of a family living in a Middle Western town.

THE CROCK OF GOLD. By James Stephens. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.50.
A new edition with illustrations by Wilfred Jones.

THE KEY OF DREAMS. By L. Adams Beck. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.; $2.
A romance of the Orient.

EMILE COUÉ. By Hugh Macnaghten. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.; $1.
The man and his work.

THE HISTORY OF MEDICINE IN ITS SALIENT

HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA
THE AMERICAN PERIOD

By Robert G. Cleland

Is ready and completes our history of the state.

The first volume is

HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA
THE SPANISH PERIOD

By Charles E. Chapman

Price $4.00 Each

The Macmillan Company
Publishers San Francisco

IT'S THE WATER.

Prepared with Glacier Water from Shasta Springs

AT ALL DEALERS

SHASTA WATER COMPANY

FEATURES. By Walter Libby. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; $3.

THE YOUNG ALASKANS ON THE MISSOURI. By Emerson Hough. New York: Harper &amp; Brothers; $1.75.

Juvenile.

SAM BLICK'S DIARY. By Stephen C. Noland. New York: Harper & Brothers; $1.90.
"Humorous realism."SPEAKING OF THE TURKS. By Mufti-Zade K. Zia Bey. New York: Duffield & Co.; $1.75.
Another version of the Near East situation.THE BALANCE SHEET OF SOVIETISM. By Boris L. Brasol. New York: Duffield & Co.; $2.
Conditions in Russia today.THE HOUSE THAT DIED. By Henry Bordeaux. New York: Duffield & Co.; $1.75.
Translated by Harold Harper.THE BIRD-NEST BOARDING HOUSE. By Verbena Reed. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $2.50.
Illustrated by Oliver Herford.

All Books that are reviewed in the Argonaut can be obtained at

Robertson's

222 STOCKTON ST.
Union Square San Francisco

THE HOLMES BOOK CO.

707 Market St. 152 Kearny St. 22 Third St.
Largest variety of new and second-hand books in the city. A visit to our stores will convince you of the truth of this assertion. We buy libraries or single books for cash. See us before selling. Phone—Douglas 3283.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

IF YOU ARE A REAL BOOK-LOVER

Spend a pleasant hour in the real "Old Book Shop" at 2 TILLMAN PLACE, OFF GRANT AVENUE—below Union.

Rare Old Books Bought, Sold and Hunted For by GEORGE HARGENS (formerly of the White House)

BOOKS
AT
PAUL ELDER'S
239 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

NEWBEGIN'S BOOKSTORE

358 POST STREET SAN FRANCISCO

Opposite Union Square

A Shop known for its courteous service, and a pleasant place to browse.

Information on books, authors and editions gladly given. Books bought and sold. Buyer will call.

Telephone Douglas 2810

JOHN HOWELL

IMPORTER BOOKS PUBLISHER

RARE BOOKS and FIRST EDITIONS

Libraries Bought and Sold

328 Post Street Union Square

Sutter 3268

SAN FRANCISCO

BALFOUR, GUTHRIE &amp; CO.

SAN FRANCISCO AND LOS ANGELES,
PORTLAND, SEATTLE, TACOMA,
AND VANCOUVER.

MERCHANTS

EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS

MARINE AND FIRE INSURANCE

AVERAGE ADJUSTERS

Agents of
HARRISON DIRECT LINE OF STEAMERS
TO AND FROM EUROPEAN PORTS

Redwood Export Company

California Redwood
Lumber and Ties

Cargoes and Parcels

"To off shore markets only"

260 CALIFORNIA STREET

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

Phone Sutter 2163

UNION LUMBER CO.

CROCKER BUILDING

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

MANUFACTURERS and WHOLESALERS

—OF—

REDWOOD LUMBER

RAILROAD TIES

TELEGRAPH POLES

SHINGLES

—AND—

SPLIT REDWOOD PRODUCTS

Geo. E. Billings Roy C. Ward Geo. B. Dinsmore
J. C. Muessdorffer Jas. W. Dean

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE
EFFECTED312 California St., San Francisco, Cal.
Phone—Douglas 6400BONESTELL & CO.
PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is

furnished by us

CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE

118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna,
San Francisco

The Wright Magazine

("Not for self, but for others")

Only $1.00 a Year.

Besides a serial and short stories it contains departments for literary and music, women and children, farm and garden, a people's forum, manuscript markets, radio notes and other interesting features.

THE WRIGHT MAGAZINE

P. O. Box 894 Little Rock, Ark.

A CRITICAL
FABLE

Who Wrote It?

MITZI AND "LADY BILLY."

Mitzi is as fetching as ever. She seems to have settled down into being a boy, as in "Lady Billy" she is garbed as a boy during nearly the whole performance, cultivating a boy's attitude and walk while retaining many bewitching little femininities.

Mitzi's rôle depicts her as a poverty-stricken Roumanian countess who has only two servants, a cook and a paternal English secretary. The cook giving warning, Mitzi, who does the gardening, and appears in the first act as a quick-witted overalder garden boy, fools everybody—the usual tribe of American tourists that swarm all over the place in musical comedy—and when she sings an ancient legend the prophecy on the part of the nice young multimillionaire civil engineer who is destined to be Lady Billy's fate that she can earn lots of money on this side transports the young patrician to New York.

Here we see knowing little Billy as the successful boy soprano, kissing chorus girls, and very much at home among worldly New Yorkers.

The plot plays around Lady Billy's state of in-loveness with Multimillionaire Smith, who, of course, will promptly reciprocate as soon as he discovers Billy is a girl; and in the meantime he remains constant to the memory of the lucrative Roumanian ghost in Billy's castle, impersonated by the enterprising young countess in order to keep the pot a-boiling. The story is so amusingly touched up with Billy's adventures, the alarms and excursions of the paternal secretary—played in the best spirit of genuine comedy by that sterling actor Mark Smith—and so attractively set off with pretty girls, tuneful love lyrics, and quantities of genuine humor that the large first-night audience came forth in the best of spirits laughing reminiscently over Mitzi's roguish ways and humming the tunes.

"Lady Billy" is well named a musical romance, as it has a very romantic coloring. But the wit and humor of Zelda Sears—who wrote the book and lyrics—never fails, at the most romantic moments. We are spared the usual comedy squash and Billy has a roguish comment on each situation.

Zelda Sears, in fact, refuses to be stereotyped in the musical-comedy style. Billy is recognized—sometimes, anyway—even though she is a girl dressed as a boy. And instead of Lady Billy languishing with feminine timidity in alarming situations the boyish daring of the little countess carries her through with wit and dash.

The music of "Lady Billy" is very tuneful and easily caught; partly because it is not wholly original. But the lyrics are sweet and dreamy, attuning themselves to the romantic sentiment, and there is plenty of lively dance music for the quartet of lively dancers, with whom Mitzi occasionally throws out a series of easy and agile kicks. Mitzi, in fact, is a very clever little woman. Her pretty voice has diminished in volume from steady service before an approving public, but it is sweet and clear, and she sings always with charming sentiment. She is an expert dancer, her face is as roguishly expressive as they make them, and whatever she sets out to do she does well.

She was surrounded by a lot of smartly-gowned, pretty girls—among whom Vera Kingston shone supreme—but Mitzi holds every eye.

As the boy soprano she had her hair marvelously well arranged to look boyishly short, and then—presto!—with a deft gesture and two or three hairpins out she had it in a golden flood down her back; and the boy Billy had become that deliciously taking little siren Lady Billy, combing her really growing hair with a Lorelei's magical comb. Clever Mitzi!

A very good burlesque of the society mother clucking over her marriageable debutante was done by Vira Rial.

The only unsatisfactory representation was that of the ex-cook become a New York courtière. It seemed as if an understudy must have been utilized, for Mme. Kosianowsky surely should have been either a screaming burlesque, or a very smart, ultra-fashionable figure, whereas she was presented as a nondescript.

Edward Ciannelli, a very personable young actor, gave an excellent and vigorously depicted burlesque impersonation of the jealous Spaniard, and Boyd Marshall, though rather a throaty singer, was most agreeable in person and manner as Lady Billy's swain-to-be; easy, likable, and with more than a touch of the necessary romantic charm.

"Lady Billy" is a Henry W. Savage production, which means that the singing, the orchestra, all the accessories and the general finish of the performance are irreproachable.

"HEARTBREAK HOUSE."

After seeing this play, and hearing of the several installments of "Back to Methuselah," the New York production of which by the Theatre Guild scooped a large, hefty gob out of that organization's saved-up profits, one rather gives Shaw up. I can imagine him saying, "Well, I'm Shaw, aint I? G. B. Shaw. Everybody's heard of me. Almost the entire world sits up and takes notice when I speak or write. When I address a public meeting crowds come to hear me. When I dip my pen in playwrighting ink the theatre managers push forward, jostling each other, to snatch at the result.

"Well, then! Since I am It, I'll be blanketty dashed if I am going to be tied down to wise saws and modern instances, when I write a play.

"Away with your set technique, your ruled and regulated action, your family resemblances in the hierarchy of dramas! I'll have none of it! Henceforth I will write what I jolly well please, and I will make it as long, as obscure, and as uncabined, uncribbed, and unconfined as I jolly well please. I'll make these fat wits that hate to think begin to prick their brains with a divining rod, and say, 'What does the sage mean?' For I'm Shaw, G. B. Shaw, the free lance, and don't you forget it!"

Hence "Back to Methuselah" and "Heartbreak House."

What does "Heartbreak House" mean? No body knows. Does it entertain? It does. Why, then, nobody knows what it means? Nobody knows that either.

Well, what's it all about? People, of course, and, strange to say, Shaw doesn't put himself into the play. The people are odd, interesting, individualistic and epigrammatic, and let me see, no, I don't remember one of them speaking with the unmistakable voice of Shaw.

The characters engage in such unending discussion that you might call the play a prolonged conversation.

Ellie, the principal character, whom heartbreak over a snapped-off love affair with a philanderer transforms from an idealistic and trusting girl to a hard, resigned, mercenary husband-hunter, discourses from that point of view. Hesione, the sunny siren, speaks as an amused and indulgent contemplator of life. Boss Mangan shows us the soul of the business magnate: that of a confirmed and instinctive grabber. The burglar cheerfully reveals the trade psychology of his species, and Captain Shotover, who seems to be own brother to Galsworthy's Sylvanus Stone, professor of natural sciences, in "Fraternity," utters, like that venerable and apparently slightly cracked philosopher, many luminous comments on life and its conduct, both of the famous authors remaining reticent in regard to the cold, plain truth that he who utters true and illuminating comments on life and human conduct is generally regarded by composite Man as being somewhat fissured in his cerebral dome.

Shaw himself said of "Heartbreak House" that "it is cultured, leisured Europe before the war." And all the time, in listening to the play, we are irritatingly conscious of an underlying symbolism. Now, symbolism in the drama is a nuisance, for it won't let you rest. It challenges, teases, sends exasperating half flashes of its meaning, and, unless it is kindergarten symbolism, it leaves you unsatisfied.

When they put "Heartbreak House" on in New York everybody puzzled as to what it was all about. Those of us who have seen it here are in a similar state of mind, even while we enjoyed the racy wit of the dialogue.

At times, more particularly in the last act, it seemed as if "Heartbreak House" typified the ship of state. But beware of rash conclusions.

The Plaza company made a very good appearance in the play, Mary Morris doing her usual conscientious and intelligent best as Ellie. Florence Locke played, with professional ease and considerable charm, the rôle of Hesione, giving that delightful lady all the good looks due her. Hilda Denivelle was appropriately aristocratic as the didactic Lady Uterword.

Lloyd Corrigan was excellent in his depiction of the hide-bound city magnate, Harold Minger was a thought too fatuous as Ellie's father, and Everett Glass only approximately grasped the appropriate conception, though not the appearance—at least in Hector's ordinary habiliments—of Hushabye, the philanthropist. Irving Pichel has the voice and personality appropriately to convey both the impressive individuality and sometimes cryptic, sometimes interpretative sayings of Captain Shotover; and two or three others completed the cast of ten.

"And do you advise me to take in the play?" you ask. Not on your life I don't. You will have to deduce from this and other similarly be-fuddled reviews whether you want to go or not. The dialogue is brilliant, but the play is all dialogue except for a Zeppelin bombardment; and even that is more dialogue than bombardment. And, by the way, why did Shaw make the cautious business man and the gun-shy burglar go out in the open and get killed? For during the war profiteers like Mangan were very keen at getting out of fighting, and very voluble in pointing out to the other fellow that it was his plain duty to fight. So there you are. I give up all the conundrums in "Heartbreak House," but as Shaw brought an interesting group together and made them say interesting things, you can't wave him off the map; a place to which Shaw has a marked talent for adhering.

THE THOMAS CONCERT.

People who stick to San Francisco have been saying, "Who is John Charles Thomas?" (The baritone, I mean, who, under the Frank Healy management, gave a song recital last Sunday afternoon.) It turns out that Mr. Thomas was a prominent and popular musical-comedy star, and that, his voice being almost too good for that line of vocalism—that is, according to popular standards—he decided to equip himself to become a legitimate concert vocalist. He has now turned entirely to recital work, and the indications are that the singer is going to be a great concert favorite.

Mr. Thomas has a fine appearance and an agreeable personality. Sunday afternoon he won his audience with his very first number, Handel's beautiful and impressive "Care Selve." Following this number all of the four Italian selections were characterized by the same solemn and exalted sentiment, the young baritone having, apparently, a taste for songs expressive of deep and sustained emotion.

He further gave a French group and two in English, and was lavish with the encores demanded by a notably responsive audience, who not only manifested the liveliest delight over his more serious numbers, but were equally approbative of the popular ballads and the famous Pagliacci "Prologue."

Mr. Thomas has a fine, ample, ringing organ of beautiful tone, more particularly in its upper reaches and is well acquainted with the art of dramatically setting free its fullest reserves at the appropriate moment. His ambition, it is evident, is to walk in the footsteps of such as David Bispham, judging from the particularity of his diction and his choice of popular and varied concert numbers. Not yet can he be regarded as a peer of Bispham in respect to his diction, but he is well on the way, and in dramatic expression, as shown in his "Dannie Deever," "Mother o' Mine," and the "Pagliacci" Prologue, he is able to stir up the receptivities of his auditors to enthusiastic expression.

The singer phrases with taste and judgment, and has his voice under such good control that he can always color the fullest flood of its finely virile and sonorous tones with warm dramatic hues. But in the piano and pianissimo passages his voice has not yet acquired the velvet smoothness necessary to convey with appropriate delicacy the sentiment of

Government
Municipal and Corporation
Bonds

The less you have the less you can afford to lose

YOUR DUTY to yourself and family is to know how to invest wisely—to get the maximum income without hazard or speculation.

Many people think the other fellow's game is easier than their own and they pay high to find out that there may be some things about it they don't know.

What you and every investor want is good income and freedom from worry. To be sure of this you should thoroughly understand the few basic underlying principles of sound investment.

You should know, for instance, why bonds are the safest of all investments; why some bonds are much better for you than others.

Ten minutes of easy reading will prime you on these major points of sound investment. Don't be caught off your guard by not knowing. Send for WEALTH THAT ENDURES (just off the press), which explains briefly and interestingly the essential points of bond investment that everyone should know and understand.

BRADFORD KIMBALL & CO.
BONDS

SECOND FLOOR INSURANCE EXCHANGE BUILDING
San Francisco
Sutter 5200

Tear out this coupon—
fill in and mail in envelope or paste on back of postcard

BRADFORD, KIMBALL & CO.
Insurance Exchange Building, San Francisco

I should like to have a free copy of this new reference booklet, WEALTH THAT ENDURES, sent without obligation to anyone interested in better and safer investment.

Name _____

Address _____

ESMOND'S

"THE CAKE SHOP"
253 Grant Ave.

Mince Pies made from
our own home-made mincemeat. Genuine English
Plum Puddings and Fruit
Cakes.

"ECCLES CAKES" Our Specialty

AGENTS WANTED.

DEFLEXOGRAPH fits any phonograph.
Stops scratch and surface noises. Softens tone.
Immense profits. VANTONE CO., Dept. 102,
Box 1244, City Hall Station, New York.

such numbers as Duparc's "Lamento," Goosen's "Melancholy," Bonner's "Phantom" and D'Erlanger's "L'Abesse"; all very interesting selections, by the way, and sung with notably refined feeling.

As yet Mr. Thomas as a recitalist does not move in well-oiled grooves. But that seemed to recommend him all the more to his audience, who took him so completely into its favor that one felt sure the pleased singer was saying to himself, "Well, I didn't attract a very large audience, but by the holy smoke I've got 'em!" And he certainly had.

AT THE ORPHEUM.

They have more than the usual variety at the Orpheum this week, Thompson "the Egyptian" giving a queer hodgepodge of health talk and nonsense. Claiming to be seventy years of age, the self-styled health sage gives, in a mellow voice, a lot of easy trifling acts, such as pressing finger ends together and the like, which, he promises, will accomplish wonders by "nerve pressure." One true word he said: that everybody would try them. Hope springs eternal in the human breast, and he gave an easy finger formula for curing falling hair and baldness that the baldheads will hopefully try.

Henry Santrey presented a good jazz act very much touched up by the pervasive presence of the dapper Mr. Santrey, whose trousers are superbly creased and who lights a cigar with special grace. His musically commented story is amusing, and "my boys," as he calls his group of jazz experts, have lots of snap.

Evidently somebody has told Anna Seymour that she resembles Fannie Brice. But the resemblance wholly ceased when she tackled "My Man," during which song, instead of appearing in homely guise, she was in bare-backed, aggressively evening dress. Nor did she introduce that note of pathos with which the lively Fannie surprised and captured New York. Who wants to take a bet that Anna never heard Fannie sing this song?

Besides the jazz orchestra—which, by the way, played very well quite a lot of real music; "Chanson Hindoue," for instance—the best acts of the week are Dooley and Sales in "Will Yer, Jim?" and the "Jewel Box," a beauty and costume revue, in which pretty girls, gorgeously costumed in a bewildering series of toweringly head-dressed affairs, peacock prettily before us, glowing with color, and glimmering with silver, gold, and radium lights.

Dooley and Sales radiate nonsense, and if they didn't occasionally have recourse to vulgarity—always a cheap device—one would approve the cleverness, the quickness, and the lightness of the pair. Both have humor and personality, and the ability to catch and hold the favor of their audience, Corinne Sales having the sex lure very markedly, and doing that light French touch at the beginning so cleverly that it was difficult for the few moments it lasted to realize that she is—presumably—an American. It certainly is odd that clever people who can amuse an audience by legitimate means would feel it necessary to fall back on purely vulgar suggestion, however cleverly it is suggested.

JOSEPHINE HART PHELPS.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE.

"Bohemian Girl" at the Rivoli.

Notable both musically and scenically is the Hartman-Steindorff production of "The Bohemian Girl," which will go into its second week at the Rivoli Opera House starting Monday. The piece offers both Steindorff as a musician and Hartman as an actor splendid possibilities, and the old songs through which its score achieved popularity a generation ago are today as appealing as they ever were.

Among the old melodies which are arousing the audiences to enthusiasm and which are compelling encore after encore are "The Heart Bowed Down," "When Other Lips," "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls" and "A Soldier's Life."

Lillian Glaser, John Van, Robert Carlson, Lavinia Winn, Nona Campbell and Rafael Brunetto score heavily in the various solos and duets which fall to them, and Paul Hartman and Edna Malone lend a touch of modernity to the piece with their eccentric dance numbers.

There will be a regular matinee performance on Saturday and Sunday and seats will go on sale for "Robin Hood," the next production, on Thursday.

The Orpheum Next Week.

George McKay and Ottie Ardine have a collection of fun entitled "The Night Watchman." They are both excellent singers and dancers.

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," a farce produced by A. H. Woods, has been rewritten and boiled down with the funny situations intact and following each other in fast succession. The cast is an excellent one, consisting of seven players headed by Miss Helen Goodhue.

James P. Conlin and Myrtle Glass have a new vehicle, a miniature musical comedy entitled "The Four Seasons and the Four Reasons."

Dooley and Sales are a successful comedy duo.

Neal Abel with his personality, his stories about "cullud pussons," and his mobility of countenance, brings an exceptional single turn.

Count Perronne and Trix Oliver are a baritone and soprano of exceptional voices.

The Juggling Nelsons have a highly trained, carefully educated, and thoroughly submissive set of hoops. Their work is astonishing.

The Columbia Theatre.

David Belasco's production of Avery Hopwood's comedy, "The Gold Diggers," will be the next attraction at the Columbia Theatre. Also coming to this theatre is the great colored star, Charles Gilpin, in the sensational success, "The Emperor Jones." May Robson in her new play and William Gillette are among the stars booked for this playhouse.

Second Pop Concert.

A musical treat is in store for the patrons of the second popular concert of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, Alfred Hertz conductor, to be given under the direction of the auditorium committee of the board of supervisors at the Exposition Auditorium on Saturday evening, December 9th.

It will be a Tchaikowsky-Wagner night and an added feature will be the farewell San Francisco appearance this season of the prima donna soprano, Mme. Johanna Gadski, who will be heard with the magnificent orchestra of 100 picked musicians. Mme. Gadski created a furor when she sang in recital here last week and her appearance with the orchestra will be of peculiar interest, from the fact that Conductor Hertz directed the orchestra at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, when she sang the Wagnerian rôles in which she excels.

There will be no increase in prices for this occasion and seats at most reasonable rates may be obtained at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

Second People's Symphony.

Tickets are now on sale at the box-offices of Sherman, Clay & Co. for the second educational concert of the People's Symphony Orchestra, Alexander Saslavsky conductor, which will be given next Tuesday night, December 5th, at the Scottish Rite Auditorium.

Alice Mayer, professionally known as Alice Frisca, San Franciscan by birth, will be the soloist on this occasion. Following her appearance in Paris Miss Frisca went to London, where she made a success as soloist with the Queen's Hall Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Sir Henry Wood.

Our Most Valuable Trees.

It is held by competent authorities that the most valuable trees ever discovered by man are some that were four or five years ago discovered among the carnotite radium beds in Montrose County, western Colorado, according to the Washington Star.

Carnotite ore is found in western Colorado and eastern Utah, along a belt at the foot of La Sal Mountains. It is productive of radium, and is sometimes found in the form of petrified trees encased in beds of sandstone. Sometimes the trees are within a foot of the surface, in other cases they are buried thirty feet deep.

Walking over the sandstone, one would never guess that a treasure lay beneath his feet. The first evidence that carnotite is locked in the sandstone comes from the discoloration of the upper rock by the uranium ore with which carnotite is almost always associated.

The tree formations are the richest of any of the forms in which radium-bearing carnotite is found. One of the biggest trees produced 9000 sacks of high-grade ore, or 275 tons. In some cases the ore is worth $10,000 a ton, but that is only near the heart of the tree.

The trees are wonderfully preserved. The limbs, roots, knots, bark and even the grain of the wood can be distinguished.

The Hollinger mine, in Ontario, Canada, has an output of 120,000 tons of ore monthly. It was discovered thirteen years ago by Ben Hollinger, a prospector, and now runs neck and neck with the great Modderfontein of the Rand, South Africa.

Novel in the musical instrument line is a violin that can be folded, inclosed in a case and carried like a walking stick.

Of English invention is a motor-driven wheel to be attached to baby carriages to propel them.

The City of San Francisco Presents the

SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

ALFRED HERTZ - CONDUCTOR

Second Popular Concert
EXPOSITION AUDITORIUM
Saturday Evening, Dec. 9 at 8:30
WAGNER-TSCHAIKOWSKY PROGRAM
Mme. Johanna Gadski
 Prima Donna Soprano
GUEST ARTIST

Reserved seats, $1, 75c, 50c, 25c (no war tax)
 Now on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

Auspices Auditorium Committee
 Board of Supervisors

COLUMBIA THEATRE Leading Playhouse of the West
 Geary at Mason Phone Franklin 150

Second Week Begins, Sunday, Dec. 3
 Matinees Wednesday and Saturday
 Henry W. Savage Offers

MITZI

"LADY BILLY"
 A Musical Romance
 Metropolitan Cast—Enlarged Orchestra

CURRAN THEATRE Geary Street Near Mason Phone Prospect 9300

Now Playing for a Short Engagement
 A Picturization of Charles Major's Story of Love and Romance

"WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER"

Prices for All Performances
 50c and $1 (tax extra)
 Matinees Daily

RIVOLI OPERA HOUSE
 Market at Seventh. Phone Market 373

Matinees Saturday and Sunday

Next Opera "Robin Hood"

FERRIS HARTMAN AND PAUL STEINDORFF
 Offer a Magnificent Revival of Ballo's Comic Opera

"THE BOHEMIAN GIRL"

Best Seats One Dollar

THE BEST IN NAUDEVILLE
Orpheum
 Orpheum Circuit

MATINEES 25 and 50c
DAILY
 EVENINGS 25c TO $1.25
 Except Sats., Suns. and Holidays
ALWAYS A GREAT SHOW
 SMOKING PERMITTED IN DRESS CIRCLE AND LOGES

PEOPLE'S SYMPHONY

ALEXANDER SASLAVSKY, Conductor

SCOTTISH RITE

Next TUESDAY at 8:30 P.M.

Soloist, ALICE FRISCA

Education Program Includes Symphony, G Minor.....Mozart
 Piano Concerto No. 1.....Liszt
 String Orchestra, Andante Cantabile.....
 Overture, "Tannhauser".....Tchaikowsky
 Overture, "Tannhauser".....Wagner

Also comment by conductor on instruments of the orchestra and special characteristics of the music played.

Tickets at Sherman-Clay's, 50c, 75c, $1

California Limited

East

daily to Denver, Kansas City and Chicago

Solid Pullman train with buffet smoker and Observation cars

Fred Harvey dining car service

Exclusively for first class travel

Grand Canyon Line

Tickets to and from Europe via all Trans-Atlantic Lines

Ask any Santa Fe Agent

R. D. Johnson, Div. Pass. Agt.
 601 Market Street
 Phone Sutter 7600
 or
 Market Street Ferry
 Phone Sutter 7600

OAKLAND
 434 13th St.
40th St. & San Pablo Ave.
BERKELEY
 University Ave. & West St.
SAN JOSE
 48 Ryland Block
SACRAMENTO
 201 Calif. Fruit Bldg.

VANITY FAIR.

Efforts to invest with the halo of romance the second marriage of Wilhelm Hohenzollern, erstwhile Emperor of Germany and still claimant to the throne of Prussia, are meeting with chill receptions which the attitude of the once imperial family has done little to thaw out. It is difficult, almost impossible under the circumstances, to divest the affair of the kraut-and-sausage quality of a commonplace German wedding. There has been some attempt to present the ex-Kaiser, not as a middle-aged man taking his warmed-over affections to the most convenient market, but as an impetuous lover with the spontaneous arts and graces and poesy of Romeo. But it goes hard, especially when one learns that instead of engaging in lover-like pursuit of a fleeing object of volcanic passion, he summoned the lady to the house by the woodpile, and there charmed her Teutonic soul by explaining his reasons for seeking her hand; about as romantic a transaction as asking your banker for the privilege of renewing your over-matured paper. It is said that he also laid before the lady the objections of his family, or several members thereof, and that they weighed as nothing beside the honor he did her in informing her he would marry her, and the prospects of his recovering his throne and his place at Potsdam by grace of the Ludendorff and other monarchist conspiracies. Well, that makes it fifty-fifty, and what could be fairer? But romantic it is not, any more than a weiner wurst. It is said that the reason why the several members of the ex-Kaiser's family developed sprained ankles, sprung knees, felons on fingers, styes, and the like afflictions painful and disabling so they could not get over to Doorn was that they had picked out a candidate and the ex-Kaiser had rejected her. That, at least, shows some preference. The old court crowd is said to be disgusted, but it takes a great deal to disgust an imperial German entourage, so that rumor may be exaggerated; but they do say the new princess is having her troubles. One correspondent declares that certain men and women formerly high in court circles have refused to speak to her. The crown princess is especially grouchy. If the princess becomes Kaiserin of a new German Empire, however, they will get over it.

The discovery of the French Senate that French women do not need the vote because they are so much better treated than English women or American woman has been followed by the discovery of a noted London correspondent that English men are imitating American men and spoiling their women with too much kindness. People are asking what is the matter with English women, and getting no satisfaction out of the guesses. An "expert" has explained it as above—too much leisure, too much care, too much consideration on the part of husbands, and especially on the part of fathers, who once were stern to the fairer sex, but seem lately to have come under some enfeebling spell that causes them to loosen all the bonds of masculine control. This particular expert appears to rank as a psychologist, and he says women are petted too much, and that they soon tire of being petted. Perhaps that is true. Far be it from us to differ from a psychologist, especially in the matter of that uncertain element female psychology. But on the other hand, it may be that they only weary of being petted by the same man and in the same old way. The introduction of ingenious variants might do some good, and the psychologist might render himself more serviceable by inventing a few. Our limited observation is that properly and variously petted they do not tire. Of course, as some men administer the treatment, it is a good deal as though you sat down to a banquet and the waiter brought you soup, and when you were ready for the salad he brought you soup, and for the fish he brought you soup, and then cleared away and for the entrée brought more soup—you would soon advise him that he could omit the desert and keep the nuts and black coffee. But that would not be imitating Americans. They have been petting their children, their sweethearts, and their wives so long that they have made an art of it, and it is an art no Englishman can hope to acquire under seven generations. On the other hand, why should he wish to? He and his women were getting along very well on the other basis. English women did not expect much, and what you don't expect you don't miss. They are getting into Parliament on a basis of give and take, and in politics that is the best foundation. Perhaps it is because they are getting into Parliament that English men are cultivating them.

Paris is beginning to rebuke sin. It no longer desires to be known as a sinful city. The Petit Parisien voices the urban ambition to be known for virtue instead of vice, and that has made a sensation in every café along the Boulevard des Italiens. Ah! Virtuous Paris, moral Paris? A new idea. Let us try it. Says this bold and startling journal:

"When people tell us that we are imperialistic we protest with energy. This legend is so grotesque, so false, that we can not support it—we get angry. But we smile, we hum a pretty air when a Spaniard, an Englishman, or any other foreigner informs us, with a wink of the eye, about Montmartre. 'Ah! Montmartre! The Folies Bergere! The petites mademoiselles! Ah! France is the country of the world where there exists such a levity of morals! Oh! Oh! Paris! Babylon! Ah! Ah! The petites mademoiselles! Montmartre! The revues! The theatres!' And so they go on and on. When one speaks to us of the French debauchery we do not get angry. We do not put our foot on this infamous legend. We feed it thereby and so the legend grows. 'Poor France!' they say.

'It is the country of vice and license!' France has her champagne and her petites mademoiselles—that is all. Pious dames make the signs of the cross in hearing the name of Paris pronounced—modern Babylon. Men with enormous eyeglasses brand the frightful morals of the women. And we do not protest. We smile. This legend makes enemies for us everywhere—and friends. We are wrong not to protest. We are wrong not to be angered when foreigners tell us that we are a lost people because of our vices. We are wrong not to respond: 'And you? Do you really believe that you are less debauched than we?' There are certain spectacles in Paris which are frivolous, very frivolous. But these were made, above all, for you. Of course there is such a place as Montmartre, but how many French people go there?' We are wrong not to kill the legend. When one has traveled in Spain, Germany, the Orient, the Occident, when one has seen certain spectacles at Seville, Salonica, Berlin, Amsterdam or Naples, one knows that France is the most decent country and the most proper country in the world. We must say so." And so it seems that wonders will never cease, and innovation is always with us. A moral Paris—that might come to be known as the San Francisco of Europe.

It is said that in Italy the only escape from matrimony would be suicide if Fiume were not just across the Adriatic; for the civil law is one shade worse than the ecclesiastical, and the ecclesiastical never did encourage divorce. American women that have married Italians have found that unmarrying them was another and far harder matter—in fact just about impossible. But as for almost every intolerable condition there comes a cure if you don't die first, the storied Adriatic has developed a Reno, and Fiume is it. It may be that D'Annunzio began it by proclaiming himself king and then granting himself a divorce, but however that may be, the situation exists today in even more convenient form than in Nevada. Divorce is now Fiume's chief export, and that in a literal sense, for they have so arranged it that you don't have to go there to get it. Before the war Fiume was part of Hungary, and Italians used to go there and become naturalized Hungarians, get a decree in about nine months, return to Italy, resume their citizenship, and all was well. But independent Fiume has abolished such a tedious and obstructive process. If Pietro Parente is tired of Mrs. Pietro, and Mrs. Pietro reciprocates his distaste, Pietro writes about it to a lawyer in Fiume, who has him naturalized, and then writes to Mrs. Pietro sending her a legal summons to join her husband at his new address. She fails to join. Who wouldn't? Maladetto! Well! Well! She has deserted him! One divorce, sunny side up! It is prepared and mailed to the new citizen. Could anything be more convenient? It is said there are now more citizens of Fiume in Italy than there are in Fiume. If Fiume is annexed it will, of course, break up the divorce business, for Italians are afraid of a general divorce law. They say it would tend to break up the Italian home. With Fiume just across the narrow sea, that is an Italian joke, but the Italian takes it seriously. What a tip this is for Reno!

Yesterday the mayor of New York and the aldermen to the number of twenty-five or thirty conducted us with great ceremony to all the prisons or houses of charity in the city, says a French visitor of the early nineteenth century in a letter now printed in the Yale Review. After this they invited us to an immense dinner, the first of the sort that we have attended. I should very much like to describe it for you, but it is difficult to do so. Imagine a long table like a refectory table at the upper end of which the mayor, flanked by your two servants, was seated; after which came the other guests, all personages grave enough to make one weep, for they laugh very little on this side of the Atlantic.

As to the dinner itself, it was in the infancy of the art, vegetables and fish before meat, oysters at dessert—in a word, completely barbarous. The first glance I cast at the table relieved me of a great weight. I did not see wine, but only, as is the custom, water and brandy. I sat down with the proper gravity at the right of monsieur the mayor and awaited the course of events. Unfortunately when the soup was carried away they brought wine. The mayor drank to our health in the English fashion, which consists in filling a small glass, raising it, looking at the person the while, and drinking it—the whole procedure accompanied with great solemnity. The one to whom this politeness is addressed must respond to it by doing exactly the same thing. Therefore each of us drank his glass to the mayor, and with suitable dignity. Up to that point all went well. But we began to tremble when we saw that all the guests felt it their duty to do us the same honor. We had exactly the air of hares with a pack of hounds at their heels, and the fact is that they would soon have broken us if we had allowed them to do so. But at the third glass I adopted the plan of taking only a swallow, and I thus got through very happily what we call in France the end of the dinner, but here is only the first act. Most of the dishes then being taken away, they brought lighted candles and served very properly on a napkin a certain number of cigars. Every one took one and, the company enveloping itself in a cloud of smoke, the toasts began. Every one's muscles relaxed a tiny bit, and they delivered themselves up to the heaviest gaiety in the world.

One of the features of the historical exhibition which will form part of the second International Silk Exposition to be held at the Grand Central Palace next February, says the New York Times, will be a group of dolls portraying interesting periods in the story of silk. The dolls will be twenty-four inches high and will depict silk costumes from the time of the mythical Chinese empress who is credited with the discovery of silk to the latest vogue in evening gowns. Mme. Bennati, a leading costume designer, will dress the dolls from sketches provided by the committee in charge of the historical side of the exposition.

Included in the other historical exhibits, which will occupy five of the window spaces on the mezzanine floor of the Grand Central Palace, will be coronation robes from Japan, embroidered cloaks from Bokhara, a bathrobe made of native silk in Guatemala, and the costume worn by a Chinese actor who took the part of the Chinese emperor several centuries ago. A new map made of silk will be shown in the central window, bordered by two curtains, one with a design of old Peking and the other with a silhouette of modern New York. It is expected that the exhibit will be sent to some of the leading retail stores here to be used as a window display after the exposition.

According to the Treasury Department a dollar note only lasts two and three-hundredths years. We have had some that didn't last that many minutes.

It was an ancient notion that the touch of a sovereign would cure scrofula. Nobody ever supposed it would cure insolvency.

Do Your Christmas Shopping Now

SING FAT CO.

The Leading Chinese Bazaar

S. W. Cor. California St. and Grant Ave.
Chinatown

BRANCH STORE

Geary Street, at Grant Avenue

MAIL ORDERS ATTENDED TO PROMPTLY

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE CHARLES NELSON CO.

MANUFACTURER AND WHOLESALE

REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR, SPRUCE, HEMLOCK, SUGAR & WHITE PINE, CEDAR SHINGLES & POLES.
230 California St. San Francisco

E. C. EVANS & SONS, Inc.

(Established 1881)
STEAMSHIP AGENTS
SHIP AND INSURANCE BROKERS
260 California Street, San Francisco
Phone Douglas 8040 Cable Address "DEWGRIP"

GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION

Offices at
SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES
Alaska Commercial Bldg. Higgins Bldg.

HAMMOND LUMBER COMPANY

260 CALIFORNIA ST.
REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR AND PINE

Press Clippings

Are money-makers for Contractors, Supply Houses, Business Men and Corporations
ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Phone Douglas 5119 121 Second Street

4-Passenger Touring Phaeton

Those who ride in the New Peerless commonly refer to its luxurious ease as unequalled in their previous experience. The front springs are three feet, five inches long, and the rear springs five feet long. The seats are delightfully flexible and buoyant. Moreover, the balance of the New Peerless is practically perfect.

1900 Van Ness Ave.

Phone Prospect 8800

The New
PEERLESS

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

Lord Derby said that Gladstone's jokes were no laughing matter. "On one occasion, when being entertained by the head of a great condiment-making firm, he did, however, sum up the situation very neatly. A long string of Colmans having been led up to be introduced to him, the Grand Old Man, as he sat down to dinner, said: 'I see we are all "mustard here."'"

A tourist in Scotland came upon a farm in a remote Highland glen. "How delightful to live in this solitary spot," he remarked to the farmer. "I'm na sae sure about that, sir," replied the farmer. "Hoe wad ye like to hae to ga fifteen miles for a glass of whisky?" "Oh," said the tourist, "but you could keep a bottle." The farmer shook his head mournfully. "Ah, mon," he said seriously, "whisky'll na keep."

Senator Simmons was talking about the tariff war between Spain and France. "These two nations are hurting each other so ingeniously through their tariffs," he said, "that it reminds me of little Willie. Little Willie pointed at his sister's sweetheart, Mr. Jones. 'Mr. Jones kicked me yesterday,' he snarled, 'but I got even with him, you bet your life. I mixed up quinine with my sister's face powder.'"

Brown, a newly-wedded suburbanite, had promised to be home from town at 6 o'clock. At midnight his wife frantically sent six telegrams to as many of his friends living in town, asking each if her husband was stopping with them over night. Toward morning hubby and his broken-down auto were approaching the house when a messenger boy rushed up with six telegrams. All of them read: "Yes, John is spending the night with me."

Crawford M. McCullough, the Rotarians' international president, said at a dinner in Washington: "Rotarians are optimists, of course, but theirs is not the blind, foolish optimism that prevails in certain stand-pat quarters. One of these stand-pat optimists slapped a merchant on the shoulder and said: 'How's business?' 'On its back,' said the merchant gloomily. 'Aha! Looking up, eh?' said the optimist, and he walked off with a laugh of delight."

"It was a woman from Boston," says a member of the bar of Denver, "who, when she received a legal summons to appear in court at a certain period was much agitated thereby. She explained the matter to her dearest friend thus: 'Certainly, I have received the citation, but I shall just as certainly not appear. In fact, I could not. Not only am I socially unacquainted with Judge Smith, but the whole tone of his communication is so impossible that I absolutely decline to know him.'"

A bishop who was crossing the Atlantic on a big liner delivered a sermon and took for the subject of his discourse the exhortation, "Trust in Providence." The captain, who was present, was greatly impressed. That night a very bad storm arose, and all the other passengers asked the cleric to find out for them if the danger was great. The bishop asked the captain, who replied, "I've done all I can. You must trust in Providence." "Good heavens!" said the bishop, "is it as bad as that?"

Ralph Nevill, an English raconteur of international fame, has a pet grudge against the new rich. "The second generation," writes Mr. Nevill in his new book, "Yesterday and Today," "which often shows little trace of any foreign origin, is apt to consider itself superior to the founder of the family. An instance of this was the host who, when giving a great party, upon being asked, 'Is your father here?' replied: 'Well, no; hang it all, you know one must draw the line somewhere.'"

A youth who had accomplished a good deal in football, but little in his studies, was dropped from one preparatory school and immediately invited to enter another. He had been there but a few days when he met a member of the faculty. "Well," said the professor, "how do you find it here?" "Pretty fair," said the boy. "That's good. Find it smooth going, eh?" The boy reflected. "Well, I shouldn't like to say that exactly," he remarked. "The field's sort of rough yet in places, sir."

A Highlander who prided himself on being able to play any tune on the pipes perched himself on the side of one of his native hills one Sunday morning and commenced blowing for all he was worth. Presently the minister came along and, going up to MacDougall with the intention of severely reprimanding him, asked in a very harsh voice: "MacDougall, do you know the Ten Commandments?" MacDougall scratched his chin for a moment, and then, in an equally harsh voice, said: "De think you've beat me? Just whistle the first three or four bars, and I'll hae a try at it."

A parish church was being beautified with a stained-glass window. The old sexton was watching the work. The rector, seeing him thus intent, remarked: "Well, John, and what is your opinion of the window?" "Weel," was the reply, "in ma opeenion they micht hae been content wi' the glass as Gad made it."

Will H. Hays, the new movie king, was talking about America's export trade. "No wonder we succeed as exporters," he said. "Our methods are very large and generous in comparison with European methods. The European, beside the American exporter, is like the young heckler who went into a shop and bought a pair of ear-tabs. He planked down a dollar and got the change, and then he counted this change, and then he counted this change over and over again, and all the time his face kept getting blacker and blacker. The storekeeper got a little impatient at last. 'Well, Reuben,' he said briskly, 'is your change all right?' 'Yes,' said Reuben, 'but only just.' And he walked out frowning and shaking his head."

In the old days of amity between the British and the German empires a number of Teutonic princelings were trained as midshipmen in the royal Navy, Prince von Leiningen of Prussia among others. The King of Prussia, wishing to communicate with his young relative, instructed his ambassador, who was visiting Portsmouth, to call on the prince. The ambassador accordingly donned his court regalia and was pulled off to the ship. Arriving on board the ambassador introduced himself to the midshipman at the gangway and announced that he desired an audience with His Serene Highness, Ernest Leopold Victor Charles Auguste Joseph Emich, Prince von Leiningen. The midshipman was momentarily dazed by this bombardment, but coming to, understanding dawned upon him, and going over to the open gunroom skylight he called out, "Hi, Sausage, you great fat slug! Here's a bloke in a gold waistcoat wants to see you."

It was the second lieutenant's unlucky day. Crossing the parade ground, he happened to meet the colonel, who snapped at him, "Is that the proper way to salute?" and left the lowest commissioned officer in the midst of his apology. A little further he met the major, who addressed him as follows: "Lieutenant, your uniform is a disgrace to the regiment. Don't appear in that condition again!" Shortly after his path crossed his captain's. "Brace up!" shouted the latter. "Try to look like a soldier!" Even the first lieutenant, encountered later in the day, took it out on his inferior officer. "Next time you pull a boner like you did this morning," said the first lieutenant, who was unofficially a pal of our hero's, "I'll take it up with the colonel."

Crushed and humiliated, the second lieutenant stood with downcast eyes. Then a snappy little Boston terrier, the property of an enlisted man, ran at him and growled. "How-thahel did you know I was a second lieutenant?" he muttered.

THE MERRY MUSE.

Ship Ahoy!

I'd like to own a barge of booze
And anchor three miles out,
I'd make more coin than I would lose
With it just three miles out,
Because my friends and neighbors all
Would climb in rowboat, punt and yawl,
Would swim, fly, paddle, row or crawl
To me, just three miles out.

The tinkling glasses on the bar
Would jangle three miles out,
I'd sell liquor just at par
Or strangle three miles out.
Believe me if I took the notion
I'd line the whole Pacific Ocean
With barges filled with k. o. lotion
Anchored three miles out.

—Nebraska Awgawan.

ORNAMENTALS, FRUIT TREES,
VINES AND FIELD GROWN ROSES

Open Daily and Sunday to visitors and purchasers

GEO. C. ROEDING, Pres.

California Nursery Company

(Founded in 1865 by John Rock)

NILES, CALIFORNIA

The
MOTOR OIL
FREE FROM
DESTRUCTIVE
"SULPHO"
COMPOUNDS

Produced Under the New HEXEON Process

ADDING A NEW CHAPTER TO THE BOOK
OF ACHIEVEMENT

How We Overcame
the cause of motor oils
breaking down rapidly under engine heat

DESTRUCTIVE "Sulpho" compounds are the cause of motor oils breaking down rapidly under engine heat. An enormous amount of money is annually lost through the presence of these unnecessary properties in oils.

CYCOL will save engine owners this tremendous amount of money lost through wasted oil, wasted fuel, preventable repairs, because it is free from destructive "sulpho" compounds. These have been removed by the new Hexeon Process used exclusively by us.

When your oil contains destructive "sulpho" compounds it breaks down rapidly under engine heat. Its lubricating value becomes quickly impaired. The oil film is broken and serious damage may result.

Have your crank case thoroughly flushed—not with kerosene. Use the correct grade of CYCOL as shown on the CYCOL Recommendation Chart. Use Associated Gasoline. Then notice the improved performance of your motor.

ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY
SAN FRANCISCO

CYCOL

MOTOR OIL

FREE FROM DESTRUCTIVE "SULPHO" COMPOUNDS

PERSONAL.

Social Notes.

At a luncheon at which Miss Margaret Breedlove and Miss Lillie Sherman entertained jointly the engagement of Miss Marjorie Scott, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. K. Scott of Berkeley, was announced. Miss Scott is the fiancée of Mr. Alfred Ried Matthews, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Matthews of Berkeley. The guests at the luncheon at which the news of the engagement was told were Mrs. Lloyd Wayne Stewart, Mrs. Philip Gier, Miss Jean Scott, Miss Phoebe Matthews, Miss Ella Barrows, Miss Ruth Le Hane, Miss Ruth Valentine and Miss Eleanor Barnard.

The engagement of Miss Margery Lovegrove and Dr. Dohrman Kasper Pischel was announced during the week at a tea given by Miss Lovegrove at her home on Washington Street. Miss Lovegrove is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Walter Lovegrove, and with her parents recently returned from several months spent in Europe. Dr. Pischel is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Kaspar Pischel, and the grandson of the late Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Dohrmann. Dr. Pischel is now an intern at the Stanford Hospital. The wedding will take place in the early summer.

The marriage of Miss Minerva Lovell and Mr. Gordon Angus Nicholson was solemnized on Friday evening, November 24th, at St. Luke's Church, Bishop Parsons and the Rev. Webster Jennings officiating. Miss Mabel Hathaway was the only attendant to the bride, and Mr. Nicholson was supported by Mr. Lawrence as best man. Following the ceremony the immediate relatives of the two families were entertained at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield Lovell, in Pacific Avenue. On the completion of their wedding tour, Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson will reside in Berkeley.

At a tea given by Miss Cornelia Gwynn at the Jackson Street home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Gwynn, the news of the engagement of Miss Helen Hawkins, the daughter of Mrs. James Hawkins, to Mr. Thornton High, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Z. High, was told. Assisting Miss Gwynn in receiving were Mrs. A. Z. High, Mrs. A. Z. High, Jr., Mrs. James Lee Schlesinger, Mrs. Frances Lent, Miss Helen Head and Miss Dolly Madison Payne.

Complimenting Miss Leonore Armsby, who recently made her debut at a large ball given by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George N. Armsby, at the Burlingame Country Club, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Drum entertained at luncheon on Sunday afternoon at the Burlingame Club. The debutantes of the past and the present season were included in the guest list with an equal number of young men—Miss Josephine Drown, Miss Alice Moffitt, Miss Frances Ames, Miss Edna Taylor, Miss Edith Grant, Miss Josephine Grant, Miss Lawton Filer, Miss Jean Howard, Miss Adrienne Sharp, Miss Ruth Hobart, Miss Eleanor Martin, Mr. George Pope, Jr., Mr. George Montgomery, Mr. Richard Schwerin, Mr. Leroy Nickel, Jr., Mr. Cyril McNear, Mr. Charles Martin, Mr. Wendell Kuhn, Mr. Coy Filmer, Mr. Russell Wilson, Mr. Wendell Kuhn and Mr. Jerd Sullivan were included in Mr. and Mrs. Drum's guest list.

Mr. Gordon Armsby and Mr. Raymond Armsby, uncles of Miss Leonore Armsby, have issued invitations for a ball at which they will entertain in her honor on Thursday evening, December 14th, at the Hotel St. Francis. Soon after the affair Miss Armsby with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George N. Armsby, will leave for the East to spend the remainder of the winter at their New York home.

Mrs. Charles Gould Morton was the guest of honor at a luncheon party at which Mrs. Robert H. Noble entertained in her honor. Bidden to meet Mrs. Morton were Mrs. Seward McNear, Mrs. Kenneth R. Kingsbury, Mrs. Willard O. Wayman, Mrs. Silas Palmer and Mrs. Alexander Keyes.

Mrs. Preston Drown and her daughter, Miss Josephine Drown, will entertain at dinner on December 22d, honoring Miss Adrienne Sharp, who will make her debut on that evening at a ball to be given by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Sharp, at the Hotel St. Francis. All of the season's debutantes will be at the dinner party.

For the benefit of the Protestant Episcopal Old Ladies Home the board of directors arranged a charity bazaar, which took place on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons, at which bridge and mah-jongg were popular features. Several attractive booths offered Christmas wares for sale, and tea was served on both afternoons. The card tables were in charge of Mrs. John B. Wright, and Mrs. Seward McNear took charge of the tea service, with a group of young girls to assist her in serving. Mrs. Jerome Politzer had the boudoir booth, some of the debutantes of this winter acting as models. The Antoine Borel home was used for the occasion. Splendid success was reported from all activities by the women in charge of them. Among the women who entertained on the two afternoons were Mrs. Lewis Hobart, Mrs. Warren Spieker, Mrs. Porter Pfingst, Mrs. Samuel Buckbee, Mrs. William Hendrickson, Jr., and Mrs. William H. Taylor.

Miss Margaret Buckbee was the honored guest at a luncheon given by her cousin, Miss Laura Currey, on Thursday afternoon. Miss Currey entertained among her guests Mrs. Donald Lamont, Mrs. Henry Jackson, Mrs. Louis Ghirardelli, Mrs.

Harry Magee, Mrs. Albert Coogan, Miss Elizabeth Moore, Miss Helen Perkins, Miss Margaret Scheld, Miss Frances Pringle, Miss Corinne Dillman, Miss Geraldine Grace.

Miss Maye Colburn entertained at tea on Wednesday afternoon at the Fairmont Hotel in honor of Mrs. Anne Waters Stimson of Los Angeles, who is being extensively entertained during her stay in San Francisco. Invited to meet Mrs. Stimson were Mrs. Wendell Hammon, Mrs. James Steel, Mrs. Jerome Politzer, Mrs. James Ried, Mrs. George Robbins and Mrs. Frank Shaw. Another recent hostess in Mrs. Stimson's honor was Mrs. George Romanovsky.

Tables for the supper-dances at the Hotel St. Francis on the evenings of December 11th and 12th, following the Junior League performances, are proving very popular. Miss Jane Carrigan is heading the committee for table reservations, while the supper-dance committee is composed of Mrs. Alfred de Ropp, Mrs. Marshall Madison, Miss Jean Howard, Miss Josephine Grant, Miss Josephine Drown, Miss Mary Martin, Miss Frances Ames and Miss Lawton Filer. The patronesses for the affair are Mrs. Horace Pillsbury, Mrs. C. O. G. Miller, Mrs. Joseph Grant, Mrs. George Pope and Mrs. Henry Crocker.

At the St. Francis.

Mrs. Harry Horsley Scott was hostess at a luncheon party last Monday in the Fable Room of the Hotel St. Francis, which included her mother, Mrs. Edgar F. Preston, and Miss Frances Ames. Miss Ames is the debutante daughter of Mrs. Scott. Mrs. Charles Virden and her daughter, Miss Ernestine, entertained a small party of friends in the Garden at luncheon. Mrs. Charles Josselyn had a family gathering at luncheon on Monday, which included her two daughters, Mrs. Ettore Avenali and Mrs. Gerald Rathburn. Mrs. George Cameron and Miss Marjorie Josselyn dined informally in the Fable Room of the Hotel St. Francis on Monday. Mrs. John McNear entertained at lunch on Monday in the Fable Room with her son and Mr. Howard Spreckels. Another party at luncheon in the Fable Room included Mrs. George Newhall, Mrs. Thomas Eastland, Mrs. Walter Martin, Mrs. Walter Filer, Mrs. Herbert Allen, Mrs. Mountford Wilson and Mrs. D. C. Jackling. Another group consisted of Miss Eleanor Spreckels, Miss Edna Taylor, and Miss E. McIntosh.

Special Winter Rates

$1.50 and up per day, without bath,
$10.00 weekly rate, $3.00 and up per day, with bath, $15.00 weekly rate. All rooms steam-heated and modern in every respect.

Sunday Dinner $1.50

HOTEL RAFAEL is but 50 minutes
from San Francisco via ferry and train or auto. Delightful, invigorating trip.

W. C. JURGENS SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

THE HILLCREST

American and European Plan
CALIFORNIA AND JONES STS.
Phone Franklin 3240

DEL MONTE

The Largest Resort Hotel Plant in the World
Where "Thinking People" can find Recreation
in "Hotel del Monte's" Comfort, Service and Outdoor Life. "Here every sportsman can find his chosen recreation."

TWO CHAMPIONSHIP GOLF COURSES
CARL S. STANLEY, Manager
DEL MONTE CALIFORNIA

San Ysidro Ranch

Furnished bungalows of various sizes;
situated on the foothills among the orange groves, overlooking the sea. Central dining-room, electric lights, hot and cold water. Good tennis court. Six miles from
Santa Barbara, two miles from ocean.
Booklet. Address MANAGER

San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara

Clark's Leadership

WE are Cruise Specialists who alone
possess actual experience in cruising
Round the World and have successfully managed Eighteen Mediterranean
Cruises during 28 years in business.
Reasonable rates for superior inclusive arrangements over itineraries of much charm in great steamers offering luxurious comfort. Secure our rate sheets for comparisons.

3rd Cruise
Around the World

S. S. "Empress of France," Jan. 22d
Four months travel, first class, $1000 upward
(vacancies from $1500).

19th Cruise
to the Mediterranean

S. S. "Empress of Scotland," Feb. 3rd
65 wonderful days, first class, $600 upward
(vacancies from $900).

With Both Cruises

Rates include hotels, guides, drives, fees;
stop-over privilege in Europe.
Shore excursions at all points.
Complete program and rates of the Cruise
that interests you; free upon request.

FRANK C. CLARK

Times Building New York
M. T. WRIGHT, Agent
American National Bank Building
485 California Street San Francisco

American Beauty Roses
For the Debutante.JOSEPH'S
FLORISTS

Phone Sutter 423 233 Grant Ave.

Fine old copper lustre Tea Set for sale. Real antique.

P. O. Box 184, Sausalito

7 TRAINS DAILY to LOS ANGELES

| Leave San Francisco                               | Arrive Los Angeles |
|---|--------------------|
| 8:00 A. M. Shore Line Limited (Third St. Station) | 10:30 P. M.        |
| 10:40 A. M. Los Angeles Express (Ferry Station)   | 7:40 A. M.         |
| 4:00 P. M. Tehachapi (Ferry Station)              | 9:40 A. M.         |
| 5:00 P. M. Sunset Limited (Third St. Station)     | 7:45 A. M.         |
| 8:00 P. M. Owl (Ferry Station)                    | 8:50 A. M.         |
| 8:00 P. M. Lark (Third St. Station)               | 9:30 A. M.         |
| 9:15 P. M. Sunset Express (Third St. Station)     | 12:10 P. M.        |

Our Agents will gladly furnish further information.
50 Post Street.

Ferry Station Third St. Station

Tell your troubles to Wurra
Wurra. All questions answered.

For sale at all leading art stores

"Travel Without Trouble"

COOK'S TRAVEL SERVICE

World wide—Complete—Efficient

Inclusive Tours for Individual Travel arranged, to start any day by
any route.

Explanatory circular on request

THOS. COOK &amp; SON

(Est. 1841)

Agents for the best lines for travel by
Land, Water or Air

128 SUTTER STREET

(COOK'S BUILDING) Phone Kearny 3512

SERVICE

To Sacramento

Observation Cars.

Dining Car Service on Meteor
leaving 4:40 P. M. through to Chico.

We Carry Baggage

SACRAMENTO SHORT LINE

Have you stood on the ACROPOLIS at ATHENS with ARISTOTLE, ARISTOPHANES, ST. PAUL, DEMOSTHENES?

One of the many rare experiences offered by the AMERICAN EXPRESS Luxury Cruise on the

Mauretania
to the Mediterranean

From New York February 7th—66 Days of Enchantment

The MAURETANIA your home all the way

Visiting Azores, Madeira, Cadiz, Seville, Gibraltar, Tangier, Algiers, Monte Carlo, Nice, Naples, Pompeii, Rome, Athens, Constantinople, Palestine, Egypt, Corsica, Lisbon, Southampton, London (5 days), Cherbourg.

Send for illustrated announcement

AMERICAN EXPRESS

Travel Department

Market St. at 2d, Kearny 3100, or at the
Emporium, Market St. near 4th, Douglas 1

STRINGER STORAGE COMPANY

Sutter near Fillmore
and
Steiner near Sutter

Conducting a Storage
Business Founded
in 1880

Storage---Shipping

Expert Packing, Protection
and Dispatch

A fully informed representative, anxious
to give you any desired information,
will respond to your phone call.

Phone West 999

PERSONAL.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Dixon have recently returned from their wedding trip and are established for the winter in San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Haldorn and Mrs. James Murray are in New York for several weeks, not expecting to return to California until after the Christmas holidays.

Mrs. Arthur Redington returned to her home in San Mateo, after several weeks spent in the East. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Rosenblatt returned during the week to their home in Pacific Avenue, after a trip of several months in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Gardener of Los Altos are spending the winter in Florida. Before returning to California they will visit in New York for a short time.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Goldsmith sailed on Thursday for the Atlantic coast by way of the Panama Canal. Mr. and Mrs. Goldsmith have sold their San Mateo home, and in the future will make their home in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tobin arrived from New York and Europe last Friday and are at their home in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Templeton Crocker are in New York, and will return to California the first part of December.

Mrs. Harry Hill is expected in California during the week, after a six months' absence in Europe. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Filer and their daughter, Miss Lawton Filer, will remain at their Burlingame home for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. George Cameron are planning to spend the winter at their Burlingame home.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Bowles have returned from their month's trip to New York. They will spend a few weeks in town, planning to return in the early spring to their Piedmont home.

Mrs. William J. Younger is established in Paris for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Welch will return from Europe this week.

Mrs. Beverly MacMonagle recently returned to San Francisco from Paris to pass the winter here.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Lent will return to San Francisco December 4th.

Judge and Mrs. Frederick Henshaw will leave in February for Europe with a party of relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lewis Coleman sailed on Wednesday for the Hawaiian Islands, where they will spend a month.

Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Brown are again occupying their apartments at the Fairmont Hotel, after a two months' Eastern visit.

Mr. and Mrs. George N. Armsby and their daughter, Miss Leonore Armsby, will leave the middle of December for New York, where they will spend the remainder of the winter.

Colonel and Mrs. John B. McDonald and their daughter, Miss Sue McDonald, will sail in December for the Philippines.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Clark recently returned from Europe, and are at their home in San Mateo.

Mr. and Mrs. James Schlesinger and Mr. and Mrs. Lee Schlesinger spent a few days at Del Monte last week.

Captain Fredrick Randall has bought an adobe house in Monterey and is remodeling it for a residence.

Recent arrivals at the St. Francis include Mr. Arthur Lee, Mr. W. H. McDonough, New York; Mr. E. J. Hardiback, Los Angeles; Dr. F. J. De Borta, Reno; Dr. W. W. Beattie, Sacramento; Mr. William Murray, Mr. D. P. Harris, Mr. John Rose, New York; Mr. Dwight Whiting, Los Angeles; Mr. R. A. Fletcher, McCloud; Mr. and Mrs. A. W. O'Brien, Seattle; Mr. and Mrs. William Young, Jr., Brooklyn.

At the Palace.

Mr. Eggert Helwigh, Danish minister of foreign affairs, entertained informally at dinner in the Palm Court at the Palace Hotel Tuesday evening, having as guests Mr. and Mrs. Milo Robins, Miss Pauline Wheeler, Miss Catherine Wheeler and Mr. Harold Carl. Mrs. John H. Baxter, who is passing the winter at the Palace Hotel, was hostess Monday at a luncheon given in the Rose Room. The party included, Mrs. Alfred Hammersmith, Mrs. Warren S. Quinn, Mrs. George Bancroft, Mrs. George Dyer, Mrs. Arthur Letts, Mrs. Henry Ohlandt, Mrs. M. Badger, Mrs. L. D. Jacks, Mrs. William Cluff, Mrs. Barton Bean, Mrs. Madeline Sisson. Mr. and Mrs. Anson Herrick presided at an attractive dinner in the Palm Court Tuesday evening, entertaining their guests at a performance of Gorcham's Follies. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. George Dempsey and Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Worden. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Henry Brown of Tonopah are guests at the Palace. Their two young sons, who are attending the Montezuma School, joined them for the Thanksgiving holidays. On Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. John D. McGilvary, Jr., entertained informally at dinner, having as guests Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Claus Hueter and Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Hueter. Miss Alice Morse and Mr. Joseph Brent Banning, Jr., were the complimented guests at a beautifully appointed dinner given in the Palm Court Monday evening by Captain William Banning, uncle of the groom-to-be. The table was artistically decorated with a centre basket of gold chrysanthemus and shallow baskets of pom-pom chrysanthemums in the same shades. Enjoying the hospitality of the occasion were Mrs. John Frederick Morse, Mrs. Joseph Brent Banning, Sr., Mr. and Mrs. Francis Porter Graves, Mr. and Mrs. William Banning, Mrs. George S. Patton, Miss M. A. Crowley, Miss Annie Wilson, Miss May Banning, Miss Anita W. Patton and Mr. Joseph Brent Banning, Jr.

Monterey's Anniversary.

City officials and residents of the Monterey Peninsula are preparing to celebrate the 320th anniversary of the discovery of the peninsula and the subsequent development of Monterey, Del Monte, Pacific Grove, Carmel and Pebble Beach. The celebration is to take the form of a "postcard week" to tell the world of the picturesque romance, climate, and scenery of old Monterey.

On December 10, 1602, eighteen years before the Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock and eight years before Jamestown was founded, Don Sebastian Viscaino entered Monterey Bay, and landing with two priests and a body of soldiers took possession of the soil in the name of his king. The mouth of the little cañon was his landing spot; and under an oak nearby stands the cross where Father Junipero Serra landed on June 3, 1770.

The old custom house in Monterey is perhaps one of the most historic buildings in the far West. As near as can be determined, building was begun in 1814 while this country was under Spanish rule. Somewhere around 1822 the building was completed. In 1846 additions were made, bringing the structure to its present picturesque proportions.

Aitken on the Solar System.

The first lecture of the present popular series under the auspices of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific will be given on Thursday evening, December 7th, at Native Sons' Hall, by Dr. Robert G. Aitken, astronomer in the Lick Observatory. He will speak on "The Solar System and What We Know of Its Origin."

Dr. Aitken, in addition to his preëminent work on the double stars, of which he has discovered more than 3000, has given much attention to the observation of comets, satellites, and other bodies in the solar system. In lecturing to popular audiences he has been successful in avoiding technical terms and in making his subjects clear and interesting. The present lecture will be illustrated with lantern slides, and will be free to the public.

just 40 minutes
from San Francisco

HOTEL OAKLAND, conveniently located near both shopping and resident districts of Oakland. Comfort, homelikeness and cheer, plus an atmosphere of refinement.

Truly, "one of America's most satisfying hotels."

HOTEL
OAKLAND
OAKLAND · CALIFORNIA

Management
W. C. JURGENS

California LIP-READING
School of
FOR THE HARD OF HEARING
MISS KENFIELD MRS. POINDEXTER
Co-Principals
Demonstration classes Tuesday, 7:45 p. m.
Friday, 10:30 a. m. Representing Nitchie
School of New York. Awarding Nitchie Normal Diploma.
916 Shreve Bldg. Ph. Kearny 1666
Berkeley Branch—107 Wright Building

THE SANTA BARBARA GIRLS' SCHOOL
Resident and Day Pupils. Eleven acres.
Country Life and Sports. Sleeping-porches.
Open-air school rooms. Riding. Swimming
all the year round. Basis of work, clear thinking.
MARIAN L. CHAMBERLAIN, A. M., Principal
P.O. Box 548, SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

FERNAC SCHOOL OF LANGUAGES
Class or Private Instructions
Prepares for All Colleges
Kohler & Chase Bldg. 26 O'Farrell St.
Phone Douglas 6732

MOST BEAUTIFUL
Rota-Gravure
Section
in the world
Published Each Sunday
by the
San Francisco Chronicle
ONLY
$5.20
a
Year
Including Every Sunday Feature
of the CHRONICLE

GORHAM'S FOLLIES TO-NIGHT PALACE HOTEL

World's greatest hotel attraction
every evening, except Sunday, seven
to one, in the Palm Court, Palace Hotel.
Well known cast of Broadway
favorites. Famous American Beauty
Chorus of twenty.

John Breuner Co.
of San Francisco

281 Geary St., nr. Powell

—Console tables occupy an important place in this store's merchandise.

—There are many beautiful examples worked out in wrought iron and marble; antique, tuscan and Italian mahogany; also walnut.

—Aside from their unusual beauty the small details that underlie the construction, usually not apparent to the casual observer,
are fundamental factors that enter into all furniture offered by the John Breuner Co. of San Francisco.

—To make it more interesting the pieces are very reasonably priced.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Fifty—Is the pleasure of the next dance to be mine? Twenty—Yes, all of it.—California Pelican.

Jones (to college senior)—When do you expect to graduate? College Senior—Every year.—Judge.

Teacher (to class in natural history)—What kind of birds are frequently kept in captivity? Tommy—Jail birds.—Christian Sun.

"My dear, she is one of the smartest women in town. She is being sued by three dress-makers and two milliners."—Life.

"Jack isn't the same to me any more." "Did you see him with another?" "No, he saw me with another."—Paris Sans-Gêne.

Irate Farmer—Say! Do you think you own this road? Cool Auto Driver—Why, no. There are other motorists.—Boston Transcript.

Art Editor—But this drawing is absurd. Gentlemen don't walk across the road in dressing-gowns. Artist—Yes, they do. I do.—Punch.

"A beggar at the door, ma'am. He has a sign, 'Deaf and Dumb.'" "Tell him it's impossible for me to listen to him."—New York American.

"That guy's a blamed hypocrite." "What makes you say that, Jim?" "See him go into that math. class with a grin on his face."—Brown Jug.

"Phyllis looked a perfect fright when she returned from that hunting trip." "Yes, there was six weeks' growth of eyebrow on her face."—Life.

"It seems terrible, doesn't it, for a young girl of eighteen to marry a man of seventy." "Still, it might be worse—he might be only sixty-nine."—Life.

Victorian Customer—I want a dainty scarf for a lady, in some pretty color. Assistant—Certainly. We have them in mud, rust, clay and old brick.—Punch.

He—Hey, there's no swimming allowed here. She—Why didn't you tell me before I got undressed? He—Well, there's no law against that.—New York Medley.

O'Smith—Do you think the women of today are good housekeepers? Bumpers—Yes, indeed—once they get the house in their name.—New Bedford Evening Standard.

Buck—Can you give a definition of an orator? Private—Sure. He's a fellow that's always ready to lay down his life for his country.—American Legion Weekly.

Hubby (driving the car)—I wish you would sit up here in front with me. Wife (seated in tonneau)—Are you ashamed for people to know we are married?—New York Sun.

Vergor (to visitor)—That wasn't our parson preachin' this morning. He be up in Lunnon. They've sort of exchanged dooties for a month. Visitor—A nice change for each of them. Vergor—They've both got their missuses with 'em.—Punch.

Mrs. A—I see you have a new cook. Is she experienced? Mrs. B—I believe so. She started the first day by coming late and then asking the afternoon off.—Boston Transcript.

Peggy—Had a wonderful time at the fraternity dance the other night. Polly—So I heard. How was the music? Peggy—Oh, did they have music?—George Washington University Ghost.

The minister was speaking to the small daughter of the house: "You say your sister Helen is the oldest. And who comes after her?" "Oh, a different fellow most every night."—Judge.

First Feline—Mrs. Bargayne-Hunter married a shopwalker at Gimbel's. Second Feline—So I heard. First Feline—And now she thinks she could have done better at Macy's.—London Mail.

"Do you think motion pictures are educational?" "Yes," replied Mr. Stormington Barnes; "although I won't say they have gotten so far along as to teach people how to act."—Washington Star.

"Pa, where was Babe Ruth born?" "Couldn't tell you, son." "Where was Jack Dempsey born?" "Don't know that either." "Pa, will you buy me a history of the United States?"—Denver Post.

Customer—I want to get a diamond ring—platinum, if you please. Salesman—Certainly, sir. Let me show you our combination sets of three pieces, engagement, wedding, and teething rings at 10 per cent. discount.—Judge.

Daughter of the House (introducing dancing partner)—This is Tibby, mother. Mother—Any friend of my daughter is welcome, Mr.—er—Mr.—Daughter—Speak up, Tibby, you ass! I suppose you've got some sort of other name?—Punch.

Mr. Toppitt—Sorry I did not give you a better game. The fact is, I had rather a bad headache. Mr. Plus-Play—I have never yet beat a man who was in perfect health.—Life.

Women as Citizens.

The last of legal distinctions between men and women which possess more than ephemeral significance is obliterated by the Cable bill, which the President has signed and which is now the law, says the Portland Oregonian. It provides that a woman shall not lose her American citizenship by marrying an alien and as a logical corollary that separate measures must be taken by husbands and wives in obtaining naturalization. The husband is no longer sponsor for the fitness of the wife for the high privileges to which he may aspire, citizenship becomes a matter of individual capacity and responsibility, there may indeed be instances in which the wife can qualify though the husband can not. But the old lord of the manor, if he has a shred of pride remaining, can be trusted, we think, to see to it that his spouse does not outdistance him in the race.

Perhaps the number of instances in which individuals will be relieved from actual hardship is smaller than the advocates of a separate citizenship law have represented it to be, and so also the obstacles created by conflict with the citizenship laws of other nations have been exaggerated. These are but matters of detail and of no consequence by comparison with the principle invoked. This is that men and women now stand side by side in their relation to the government, that the latter are recognized as having rights derived from their own qualifications and not solely from their capacity as wives. The voting privilege, which is an important part of citizenship, but not all there is of it, having been extended to equal terms to both sexes, the Cable bill eradicates the last line of political demarcation.

It is bromidic to suggest that the right thus you have any favor to extend your loved ones none would be more appreciated than placing your valuable papers, etc., in a Safe Deposit Box, where after your death your heirs may get same without any trouble.

Boxes $4.00 a Year

Crocker Safe Deposit Vaults

Crocker Building

Post and Market Sts.

bestowed entails corresponding responsibilities. Nor are we inclined to write a preachment on the subject, in view of the circumstance that the nineteenth amendment has by this time wholly justified itself. No man has been able to put a finger on the political chart and say that here is a point where women have taken the voting privilege less seriously than men have done. They are altogether likely to be as discriminating in choosing the flag they wish to follow, and in the cases of the newly naturalized will value citizenship obtained in the new way more highly than the old.

Canada's Minister.

As a representative of a dominion of the British Empire, a Canadian minister in Washington would be rather like an ambassador extraordinary from the State of Texas to the Court of St. James, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. As the minister of a Canada that is a part of the British Commonwealth of Nations, such an envoy will seem natural enough.

Ambassador Geddes having withdrawn his objections and those of Downing Street having trailed off into the silence, Canada is about to open her own diplomatic establishment in Washington. She now has a high commissioner in Paris as well as London; but the Canadians hardly will be satisfied with anything less than a minister in the American capital.

This will establish a precedent. Yet it is in line with the trend of the newer British conception of the old empire as a group of nations, free peoples, masters of their own destinies, but bound by common kinship, traditions, and their long hopes for the future to the English throne. It is another nail in the coffin of the old eighteen-carat British imperialism.

Canada ceased long ago to be no more than a colony, or dominion, or group of provinces. It is a nation and feels, acts, and has its being as a nation. Soon it will be a great nation. Its interests are not always the interests of Great Britain or of its sister commonwealths. Canada is an empire within itself, with its furs, its cattle, its metals, oil, timber and its wheat lands. Canada feels it more and more awkward to deal with the United States, its nearest and great neighbor, by way of London. Canada is growing up.

Other peoples in the British commonwealth will watch the experiment. South Africa's Union, the Australians, the New Zealanders and the Irish Free State will mark the move.

If it works well, the Canadian example will be followed. There will be work then for that Council of Empire that met last year in London. If there is not a general, guiding, and policy-shaping body, something like chaps in the diplomatic affairs of the British Empire may come to pass.

Beethoven was the great master of jazz, according to Armand Vescey, writing for the Daily Express of London. Mr. Vescey is a Hungarian musician, now a naturalized American, who began as a violinist in a restaurant orchestra, and is now reputed to be a millionaire. He says that present conditions in the musical world would have been favorable for the great masters. "Beethoven was in the last analysis a master of jazz. We took up Brahms, Grieg, Mozart, Beethoven and other classical masters, accelerated the tempo of their works, accentuated more the motives, and the result was that the American public now has not only the best dance music, but also is getting interested in the classical composers and is learning to know their work. No, no, we do not let music decay, we enable it."

Instead of an hour hand, a new clock carries a revolving dial which indicates the time in all parts of the world in relation to any standard time in this country.

The Catacombs of Cypress Lawn

Comparable with the luxurious tombs of ancient Egyptian kings, yet within the means of people of moderate circumstances.

A stone edifice, highly artistic in appearance, containing a magnificent chapel. Eleven Tomb Rooms, 425 Crypts.

Cypress Lawn Cemetery Association

Phone Douglas 4772P

995 Market St.

Many in Use Around San Francisco

4 ACRE POWER LAWN MOWER

Cuts 24 Inches

H.V. CARTER MOTOR CO.
52 Beale St. SAN FRANCISCO
(Hand, Horse and Power Mowers)

KING COAL

High in Heat Units
Low in Ash

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS
IN CALIFORNIA

KING COAL CO.
Main Office
EXCHANGE BLOCK
San Francisco

Wholesale Only

TO LEASE
Entire Top Floor
IN
Wells Fargo Building
Second and Mission Streets
(Will Sub-Divide to Suit)

consisting of about 12,000 square feet; unlimited light, surrounded 4 streets. Janitor service and all modern conveniences. Will construct partitions or remodel to suit. Rent only 15 cents per square foot.

Apply Your Own Agent or Express Building Co.
Care of E. TROPP, Owner,
Kearny 316 129 Sutter St.

FOR A
CLEAR COMPLEXION
and a
HEALTHY COLOR
eat
FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST
Three Cakes a Day

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXXXI. No. 2385.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 9, 1922.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE: The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $5.00 per year; six months, $2.55; three months, $1.50, payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $6.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communication to The Argonaut, Alto Building, 381 Bush Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco Postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue; and at Daws Steamship Agency, 17 Green Street, Leicester Square, and can be ordered from any of the news-stands of W. H. Smith & Son. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-Fourth Street. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at Adams' News Agency, Ninth and G Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & Orear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Van Noy-Interstate Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Telephone, Sutter 6373. Publication office, 381 Bush Street.
WM. J. MILLIKEN, Business Manager.

FORTY-SIXTH YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

|  |         |
|--|---------|
| EDITORIAL: Senator Johnson's Opportunity—The Stadium Controversy—A Greek Blunder—Family Linen—Lightnin' Bill Is Gone—Reducing Feeble-Mindedness..... | 369-371 |
| LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.....   | 371     |
| VOICES FROM THE PRESS.....   | 371-372 |
| OLD FAVORITES.....   | 372     |
| INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes About Prominent People All Over the World.....  | 372     |
| AS OUR AMBASSADOR SAW IT: Letters of Walter H. Page Reveal the Peculiar Conditions Preceding America's Entry into the War.....                       | 373     |
| BANKING AND INVESTMENT NEWS.....   | 374-375 |
| BOOKS ON THE TABLE: Notes of Books and Authors.....  | 376     |
| BRIEFER REVIEWS: New Books Received.....   | 377     |
| DRAMA: "The Bohemian Girl"; Darkest Pessimism; Let Us Give Thanks; French Drama in New York; "Babbitt." By Josephine Hart Phelps.....                | 378     |
| FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE.....  | 379     |
| VANITY FAIR: The Sacred Horseshoe—Yachting Near the Bahamas—Society in Winter.....   | 380     |
| STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.....   | 381     |
| THE MERRY MUSE.....  | 381     |
| PERSONAL: Social Notes—Movements and Whereabouts.....  | 382-383 |
| THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....  | 384     |

The office of THE ARGONAUT in all its departments has been re-established in the Alto Building, 381 Bush Street—southeast corner of Bush and Kearny.

Senator Johnson's Opportunity.

In the roll-call of that bright and hopeful band of patriots led by a Republican whose course the socialists of Wisconsin once refused to endorse because it was too radical, the so-called "Progressive" bloc that has declared war on the Harding administration in many of its more important conservative and constructive courses, we do not find the name of Senator Johnson. We know not if this be due to jealousy on the part of Senator La Follette for a rival Giant Killer, or whether Senator Johnson was invited to foregather with the Progressive Band of Hopefuls and refused, or whether the invitation went astray in the mail, or whether they just forgot to invite him; but his absence from their council table leaves him "wearing no man's collar," and in position to prove to the Republicans of California who voted for him that he is a Republican, too; a proof which, the Argonaut feels and has long felt, is needed, and one which will depend, in the language of Theodore Roosevelt, on deeds, not words. Opposition to Senator Johnson's reelection was based on the conviction that he was not a Republican and could not be trusted to support a Republican President in Republican policies where they conflicted with Hearst and Hearst policies. He was reelected by a large majority of Republican votes, the votes of those that still had confidence that he was a Republican and would support the President. Here is his chance to show his colors, to justify the faith of his friends and "confound the knavish tricks" of his enemies. The issue has been sharply drawn against some of the outstanding policies of the Republican party. The new bloc, composed of such prophets of the dawn and Childe Rolands of high endeavor as La Follette, who opposed the war, Frazier and Ladd of the Non-Partisan wrecking crew of North Dakota, France of Maryland, Shipstead, the Farmer-Laborite from Minnesota, and several Democrats, stands for recognition of the Soviet government of Russia, the inflation of agrarian loans, the impeachment of the Attorney-General for protecting the country against a transportation chaos and a coal shortage this winter, the defeat of the merchant marine plans of the Administration, tinkering of the Constitution for the useless objects of abolishing the poor old Electoral College and having the new Congress meet as soon as elected, extending the blessings of the direct primary to the election of the President so that everybody with the price can be a candidate, and some more remedies of the sort for whatever ails the country, whether the patient's stomach is strong enough to receive them or not; all accompanied by the regular stock-in-trade denunciation of special privileges and "the interests." In other words, it is war on the Harding administration, masking itself as patriotism, and probably believed by its promoters to be patriotism. But it is not useful and well-considered patriotism, and it is not Republicanism. And here is Senator Johnson's opportunity. If he is a Republican, he will uphold the President when the issues on these and similar questions are joined in Congress. He will justify his supporters by showing that he deserved their votes and did not obtain them by proclaiming himself a Republican when he was not.

The Stadium Controversy—a Symptom.

The precise location of the Berkeley stadium has diminished in public importance to the vanishing point in comparison with the methods employed and the spirit revealed by some of those determined to force it onto the campus. Measures have been taken in that interest that are fully confirmatory of what the Argonaut has previously pointed out about the threatened impairment of scholarly standards within the student body. And their impairment on the part of any members of the student body is indicative in this case of sinister influences proceeding from stations of authority.

After the virtual disapproval of the proposed site in Strawberry Cañon by the chiefs of the Berkeley police and fire departments, because of the threatened dangerous congestion of traffic and contraction of the streets by parked automobiles at the games, it appeared necessary to the projectors of the plan to obtain the approval of the Berkeley town council. Such approval would be and is wholly unnecessary in a legal sense, because the proposed site is for such a purpose within the jurisdiction of the university. But the approval of the council would at least remove an argument of the opposition. So some unimportant modification of the hypothetical parking rules was made, the plan indicated on paper, some guarded questions were asked of the fire and and police chiefs which they necessarily answered in the affirmative, and on that basis the proponents of the cañon site went before the town board and obtained a favorable vote of three in five.

The decision is perhaps not publicly important. The means employed to obtain it are. The student body, young, ardent, its interests largely immersed in football, properly impressionable because the impressionable age is the proper one for education, but also dangerously impressionable under influences at all perverse, was canvassed for the names of "voters" on a petition. The plain purpose of such a selection was minatory, the petition a political threat against the members of the council. The lesson conveyed to the boys was the evil one that you can have your way, regardless of protestants and their rights, if you can marshal sufficient strength. The episode was preceded by rumors that any official of the college city that opposed the placing of the stadium in the cañon would be "broken"; and so the whole transaction takes on the hue of Tammany politics in its most detrimental and socially dangerous form. Ethical considerations were eliminated. No one representing the university appeared at the hearing to suggest that the persons whose homes it was proposed to damage and whose property values would be diminished had any rights to be respected. On the contrary, when they protested they were treated like nuisances themselves. The feeling seemed to be that it was perfectly safe to injure them because they had no redress.

Now if that was the feeling, it does not reflect much credit on the example by which young men are taught to feel that way. If a scholar is useful to the state that has educated him, it is because he is a person of lofty morality equipped with superior powers of making himself felt in the life of the community. The ideal student can only be the ideal citizen, above suspicion and reproach, bringing into public affairs higher standards of conduct and of the relations of man to man than he would have had if he had not been educated. Such an influence became dynamic in the public life of this country, for example, when Harvard turned out Theodore Roosevelt to back up the great fight of George William Curtis for the reform of the civil service and the purification of American politics. We can not conceive of anything more repugnant to those good fighting men than some of the tactics employed in this small but now embittered controversy. And the importance of the matter infinitely transcends the material interests involved. It even transcends the highly important problem of the relation of athletics to scholarship and the right apportionment of these conflicting interests in the minds of undergraduates and the life of the campus. It is not merely that all proper proportion in these matters has been upset by the proposed expenditure of a million dollars subscribed for a football arena on land needed for dormitories—construction and sacrifice of campus location that may aggregate values approaching three millions before the project in its present form is executed, whereas it would be possible and in some respects more desirable to do the whole job elsewhere for something in the neighborhood of $400,000. That, in these times of general financial uncertainty, would alone be and is sufficiently provocative of criticism. But the thing goes farther. It goes to the question of the character of the citizen the university is to turn out. And when the methods employed to jam the scheme through are considered in relation to the most obvious standards of political and social ethics, the picture presented is far from reassuring. Grave moral responsibility rests on the official influence that marshaled those student "voters." To use political power for the oppression of minorities merely because the immediate object seems good is to act upon principles of conduct it should be the first duty of a university to fight, and to fight relentlessly. That is more important than Greek verbs or the breeding of prize cattle, important as both those things are. Football can not be substituted for good citizenship. And if the university is not to produce effective good citizenship, but only successful men, its value to society can be quite properly called in question. We do not say it has ceased to turn out good citizenship. But if the methods employed to win the stadium controversy are to become the general practice it may soon do so. In these matters the university authorities have a higher duty than the locating of the stadium; it is to correct these downward tendencies before they have gone too far.

Family Linen.

Secretary of the Navy Denby has done himself no credit and his country no good by making an official scandal of the alcoholic indiscretion of some members of the Naval Academy at the army and navy football game in Philadelphia. Instead of smearing the whole academy in an official proclamation of wrong doing, he should have recalled the principle laid down by a certain great American who said "guilt is always personal." The Secretary of the Navy does not save himself by his attempted limitation of the charges to a minority. The damage is done, the dignity of his department is impaired, the good name of the Naval Academy is smirched to no purpose.

He says "enough failed of their duty to their uniform and their country to bring shame upon all." Rubbish. The thing that has brought shame upon all is the Secretary's own statement, which did not have to be made, and which will serve no worthy object. He says the whole regiment was in Philadelphia, that a small minority attended the game, and of this minority but a minority committed any excess. But, ignoring the interests and good name of the majority, the Secretary spreads the shame with lavish hand over the entire student body, regardless of the dignity of his station, of the academy, and of the individual innocent cadets. He makes a public scandal of what has occurred again and again at and after football games the country over, something a football game between colleges is almost sure to precipitate to some extent, and which might well have been permitted to pass into the realm of things forgotten after the punishment by suitable disciplinary measures of the students actually guilty. We doubt if the public is going to like such management of the affair, and whether it does or not, we have no doubt that it ought not to like it. The thing savors too much of fanaticism to suit what ought to be the public temper. It is too like the methods of a parent with so little self-control that he goes into a rage and punishes his children in public. If the Secretary can not discipline the Naval Academy in a manner more befitting the dignity of the navy itself he raises doubts as to where the discipline is needed most. He should have taken a leaf from the book of the Secretary of War, who is keeping beautifully still about the business, or of Rear-Admiral Wilson, who was in command of the cadets until recalled to Annapolis by the illness of his wife, and who declines to make any statement. It is said that a searching investigation impends. It is to be hoped it will not result in any more of this washing of the family linen in public.

"Lightnin' Bill" is Gone.

There died at Chicago recently the man that took the Sierra to New York, in a play that showed Broadway in the Sierra. Frank Bacon was not a great actor, and his play, "Lightnin'," was not a great play, but by his portrayal of a simple, homely, and rather winsome character from the great book of human nature, he gave a real delight to people whose environment is artificial and whose lives are a bit over-strained; and Broadway "ate it up."

If you saw a great crowd, about theatre time, blocking the sidewalk near Forty-Third Street, that was part of Bacon's public for the evening, in addition to many that were going to be disappointed about getting in. New York always knows what it wants, and it wanted to see a certain type of American that seems to be passing with the generation that fought the civil war: like the old boys up at Yountville, for example. Here was something totally unlike the usual Broadway show. It had a show girl, but she was a travesty which the public enjoyed. It had a young lawyer, but he was also a logger. It had a poor, faded woman that kept a boarding-house, and there are enough of them in Gotham, but this one kept a boarding-house on top of a real mountain chain in the breezy freshness of the West. And it was not the West of Iowa, nor of Kansas, nor yet of the motion pictures, but of California and Nevada, the common boundary of which ran through the parlor of the boarding-house; with an office on one side for California visitors, and on the other for Eastern people who wished to establish residence in Nevada so that they could cut the bonds of matrimony they had once promised to observe for life. Among the characters Eastern and Western gathered there, moved the perfect type of lazy, good-for-nothing, lovable American, so worthless commercially and industrially as to possess value only as a human being, and gifted with the divine insolence of the man whom nothing can hurt because he has nothing in particular to lose. That was "Lightnin' Bill" Jones, who told the official villain of the piece, the sheriff working for the real stage villain, that he knew all about bees, because he had driven a swarm across the plains in '49 "and never lost a bee."

Bacon did not have to act it. He lived it. The part fit him so exactly it is hard to imagine any one taking the place he has left. Yet he merely portrayed some hundreds of old fellows still to be found in the California mountains, living easily on good terms with life because they ask little of it, and more independent than kings because they have neither crowns nor thrones to be taken away. Bacon, however, had the art to live such a life on the stage. That is not easy.

For laughing purposes, the trial scene was better than the one in which Portia made her legal reputation. Here "Lightnin'" had to try his own case because it was discovered that his attorney had not yet been admitted to the bar. Good comedy was made of his coaching by the embryo lawyer; and every question and motion the practicing client was told to put he prefaced with the remark, "I was jest a goin' to." To the success-mad New Yorker such a figure was rest, relief, refreshment. Downtown merchants and out-of-town buyers had to see "Lightnin'," perhaps to wonder a little at, and doubtless a little regret, the strange, vanishing type. They blocked the sidewalk. They sent seats to a premium. The show ran for a good deal over 300 nights, the longest unbroken run of any play in the country. And finally when John Golden grew ashamed to take any more money with it in that place and decided to let Chicago see it, our fellow-Californian and old "towney" of Napa and Marysville was escorted to the railway station by a brass band and a procession headed by the mayor of New York.

They wished him success and a safe return. Success he had, but he will never go back. Broadway will miss him. And many a care-worn city man whose load was lightened for an evening by the strange "hokum" of the show and the refreshing naturalness of its star will feel that he has lost a friend.

A Greek Blunder.

It is many years since any Central or South American state has exhibited in any revolution the savagery that characterized the execution of the Greek war ministry. It more nearly resembles official assassination than legal execution, although invested with the forms of legality and the ceremonies of a regularly constituted tribunal. The British minister has shown a proper disapproval by leaving Athens, and in that act expresses the condemnatory judgment of the English-speaking peoples. Nothing has happened in the whole course of the war, nor in the subsequent efforts to settle the affairs of Europe, that so sharply indicates the great gulf fixed between Western ideals and those of the Balkans and the Levant—or that so confirms the wisdom of our own leaders in keeping us out of the moral mire of European politics.

The Gounaris ministry was not a good ministry. It seemed thoroughly imbued with the mania for conquest we have generally agreed in stigmatizing as militarism. It engineered the revolution that resulted in the "restoration" of the Germanophile king. It was Kaiser-minded for what there was in it and for what it could get. It may have been guilty, as the military man with Venizelos at Lausanne says it was, of concealing the gravity of the Anatolian situation from the Greek people. But the Greek people were willing to go ahead with the adventure as long as they thought it would succeed. And these men were not shot for treason or for concealment of conditions; they were shot because they failed.

No chivalrous nation will add penalties to the already heavy punishment of mere failure. That they failed was their heavy loss. Had they succeeded, "for them bouquets and ribboned wreaths, for them the shores a'crowding." They would have been acclaimed the creators of Greater Greece. Venizelos and his astonishing achievements for Greek nationality would have been forgotten. And under victorious banners they would have marshaled a people intoxicated with their triumph to fresh conquests or adventures, probably in the Balkans, perhaps against Serbia, Roumania, and Bulgaria, establishing an empire with the great key city of Constantinople as its capital, dominating the Dardanelles, and cultivating an imperialism as dangerous to liberty as Germany's, and not a bit easier to deal with than the present tendencies of the Turks.

Civilization has been saved from that by the breakdown in Anatolia. And that should have been enough. The misguided men that failed were probably as patriotic in their own perverted way as the politicians that led the latest revolution and had them shot. Chivalry to the fallen should have somewhat cloaked their blunders and protected at least their lives. But chivalry is a peculiar mental institution arising out of a long series of historic happenings and developments in Western Europe. It is historical, and so is largely geographical. We doubt if it has ever to any great extent penetrated the East. Its presence in the Occident and its absence from the Orient are the fundamental difference between the two, in feeling, in calculation, in judgment of human values—"and never the twain shall meet." We simply are not of their ethical persuasion, and we are warranted in being perfectly Pharisaical about it and thanking God that we are not.

One that has watched the course of recent events in the Balkans and the eastern basin of the Mediterranean must incline to absolve Venizelos from any guilty participation. He at least has exhibited the character of a patriot, and the foresight and insight of a statesman. He appears to be a person of humane culture. It seems hardly possible that his serene intelligence could have approved this useless act of blood. Such a man does not willingly stain his record. And there could have been no conceivable great cause of state served by taking some desperate adventurers whose unsuccessful adventure had all the marks of popular support and whose failure involved the deprivation of any dangerous public confidence thereafter, and shooting them like a gang of captured bandits. That act will cost Greece dear in the peace conference, and Venizelos probably realizes it. The Cretan lawyer knows Western sentiment better than his countrymen. We could easily imagine him inwardly cursing the rabid zealots that have made his task at Lausanne more trying by lowering the moral level of his country.

Reducing Feeble-mindedness.

Professor A. L. Kroeber of the Department of Anthropology at the University of California is quoted in the daily press as being opposed to the regulation of marriages by prohibiting the unions of all but desirable parties. If he is correctly quoted, he feels it would be useless, since such a trait as feeble-mindedness may be concealed for several generations and then appear, so that it would not eliminate it to prevent the marriage of feeble-minded persons. An application of intelligence tests might show that both parties to the proposed union were normal, yet they might bring forth feeble-minded children. If Professor Kroeber said that, we shall not question it as a statement of fact; and we can even agree with him part way, on practical grounds. But we must dissent from some of his apparent conclusions.

There are persons so constituted that they can not tolerate the thought of governmental interference with the God-given right of the feeble-minded to procreate idiots. Yet the procreation of mental deficiency is a national menace; to the gravity of which the public attention has been directed of late by the reports and analyses of the intelligence tests imposed on nearly two million officers and enlisted men of the drafted army; reports and analyses which show much to our public discredit, for we appear to have done better with cattle and horses and Airedales and Persian cats than we have with human beings.

The subject is certain to come under more and more discussion, and the discussion is certain to be confused by the intentional obscurantism of those that believe the Creator would never make imperfect beings. This is a state of mind corresponding to the theological opinions of the Middle Ages rather than the scientific leadings of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries; a state of mind that might be partly cured in some cases (and in others not at all) by a visit to the freak sideshow of Ringling's Circus next time it comes to town, or by consideration of those unfortunate beings known as Siamese twins. Farther in this direction it is neither necessary nor useful to go. The plain fact is that nature offers any number of examples of imperfection and arrested development, human and animal, physical and mental. And we have as much moral right to determine that her mistakes shall not become further en-

The Germans now have capped the climax with an insolent note voicing their gratification that the Allies are about to withdraw all military control over Germany. Coming, as it does, after the long series of insults to the Allied military officials in Germany and the flat ignoring of the many protests, it finds Allied patience exhausted.

In the sharpest note received in Berlin in many months, Germany is informed that fullest satisfaction must be given for the many insults, the arms sections of the treaty must be met in spirit and in letter and that the instruction of the Military Commission must be obeyed in full.

The German of 1922 is a strange blend of humility and arrogance. He claims the sympathy due the beaten and at the same time walks with the old Prussian swagger. He hopes to escape both the payment of reparations and complete disarmament.

These hopes are not so reasonable as they were a few weeks ago. Poincaré of France is in a better position than he was during the summer. The Italians under Mussolini and the Britons under Bonar Law may be very different propositions than were the Italians under Facta or Nitti and the English under Lloyd George. If the Germans wanted to feel out the quality of the new British cabinet and acted accordingly, they have had their answer. There appears to be a new unity among the Allies, and with this Berlin and the new chancellor, Dr. Cuno, must reckon in the future.

PITY THE POOR SENATORS!

(Philadelphia Public Ledger.)

It was Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan who informed us in verse and music that the policeman's lot is not a happy one. Now comes Senator Pepper and tells in plain prose that a policeman has nothing on a United States senator when it comes to lots. Thus day by day in every way does the condition of public information on vital matters become better and better.

There will be universal surprise at Mr. Pepper's picture of the life of the average senator. "You either have to hit the line and keep on hitting it until you wear out under the strain," he told a dinnerful of Princeton alumni the other night, "or else you do what many a man has done: give it all up as hopeless and take to drink, rum, and amusement."

Who would have thought it? The picture the senator paints is not the one the average citizen hitherto fondly has held in his imagination as the real thing. But, of course, it must be true to life, because Mr. Pepper is a senator and he must know. It behooves us, therefore, to revise our impressions. In the light he has shed we get a new understanding of the men who compose the upper chamber of the Congress at Washington.

There must be two classes of them: those who are still struggling to "serve when bone and sinew have given out and there is nothing left but the will" and those who have given up the unequal battle as hopeless and taken to "drink, rum, and amusement." Partisan adherence, factional alignment, and bloc identification fall before this new system of classification, the falling and the fallen.

One wonders, in the light of this revelation, how any one can be got to accept membership in this official chamber of horrors. What can be the force strong enough to actuate a man like Senator Lodge, for instance, to keep coming back term after term? Think how La Follette must suffer and suffer and suffer and still seem to like it. Martyrs all, and gluttons for punishment!

If the senators themselves will do nothing else to end their being sacrificed ruthlessly on the altar of public service, we, the people, ought in common decency undertake the task. The remedy is simple: we should forthwith cease to elect senators. The Constitution when it forbids the imposition of cruel and unusual punishment points the way. All those in favor please say "Aye!"

TALES OF THE TIGER.

(Washington Post.)

During a visit to the British front in 1918, one evening after dinner, Georges Clemenceau had occasion to leave headquarters for a few minutes, and in the pitch darkness of the night lost his way.

"Halt! Who goes there?" the sentinel's cry suddenly was heard. Clemenceau did not have the countersign and the sentry stubbornly refused to let him pass.

"You don't suppose I'm a German?" the "Tiger" finally asked.

"I don't suppose anything about it," replied Tommy. "I simply don't know." Then after a moment's thought the sentry said:

"All right; just pronounce the word 'squirrel'."

Clemenceau's pronunciation passed the muster of the critical sentry and the premier was permitted to proceed.

When Clemenceau took charge of the ministry of the interior in 1906 he made great slashes in the pay-roll, dismissed more than sixty functionaries whom he considered useless, and, after six months' tenure of office, announced to his chief clerk:

"I've got rid of all the dead wood; those who remain here now should find enough work to do."

Passing through the general offices a few days later, Clemenceau reached a desk in front of which sat an employee, his head on his elbow, sleeping soundly and snoring sonorously. "Don't wake him up," he said; "he might go away."

The sale of tobacco in France is a government monopoly, and the right to keep tobacco stores is granted by the ministry of the interior at the request of deputies, who often desire thus to reward some of their constituents.

Clemenceau was being annoyed by a deputy who persistently claimed one of the largest tobacco stores in Paris, the manager of which belonged to the opposition.

The third visit of the deputy to the ministry of the interior found the "Tiger" in a sarcastic mood. "I can't decide about the tobacco store just yet," Clemenceau said as he escorted him to the door, "but take this; it is a start, at any rate."

And he handed the deputy a very small cigar.

To Clemenceau's numerous accomplishments, writer, orator, journalist, politician, statesman and duelist, must be added that of occasional pickpocket.

French deputies, by paying a yearly compulsory contribution, are entitled to free drinks and sandwiches from the bar of the chamber. An old radical deputy, elected in 1886, was wont to avail himself of the bar privileges without the slightest reserve. Standing in front of the bar one day, after he had absorbed drinks and partaken of sandwiches to the limit of his capacity, the hungry member of Parliament proceeded to fill the spacious pockets of his swallow-tail coat. Clemenceau, standing just behind him, was extracting each sandwich from the pocket of the deputy as fast as they were stowed away. Michou—that was the deputy's name—finally became aware of the "theft" as the sixth sandwich failed to show any perceptible increase in the weight of his coat. Turning around, he beheld Clemenceau in the centre of a group passing sandwiches about amid great mirth. Michou vowed there and then he would avenge himself. In 1888 Clemenceau was a candidate for the position of president of the chamber, with M. Meline as his opponent. Michou, although a political friend of Clemenceau and belonging to the same party, the radical, voted against the "Tiger." Meline and Clemenceau obtained exactly 212 votes each.

According to French parliamentary law, the office went to Meline as being senior to Clemenceau in years of service.

Some years ago Clemenceau accompanied the venerable M. Fallières, then president of the French Republic, on a voyage to the Pyrenees district, during the course of which they reached a small village perched high upon a mountainside.

The statesmen attended the inauguration of a new fountain. The mayor, in welcoming the distinguished visitors from Paris, lauded the republican régime, bestowed great compliments upon the virtues, civic and others, of the president and premier, and spoke at great length. Clemenceau listened with sibilant impatience to the oration until the mayor remarked that the village had been built originally upon a mountainside to protect it against the attacks of the Moors and Saracens.

"You've succeeded remarkably well," Clemenceau cut in, "for since our arrival here we haven't met a single one of them."

The end of the mayor's speech was lost in the storm of laughter that followed.

OLD FAVORITES.

Alnwick Castle.

Home of the Percy's high-born race,
Home of their beautiful and brave,
Alike their birth and burial place,
Their cradle and their grave!
Still sternly o'er the castle gate
Their house's Lion stands in state,
As in his proud departed hours;
And warriors frown in stone on high,
And feudal banners "flout the sky"
Above his princely towers.

A gentle hill its side inclines,
Lovely in England's fadeless green,
To meet the quiet stream which winds
Through this romantic scene
As silently and sweetly still
As when, at evening, on that hill,
While summer's wind blew soft and low,
Seated by gallant Hotspur's side,
His Katherine was a happy bride,
A thousand years ago.

I wandered through the lofty halls
Trod by the Percys of old fame,
And traced upon the chapel walls
Each high, heroic name,
From him who once his standard set
Where now, o'er mosque and minaret,
Glitter the Sultan's crescent moons,
To him who, when a younger son,
Fought for King George at Lexington,
A major of dragoons.

That last half-stanza,—it has dashed
From my warm lip the sparkling cup;
The light that o'er my eyeball flashed,
The power that bore my spirit up
Above this bank-note world, is gone;
And Alnwick's but a market town,
And this, alas! its market day,
And beasts and borderers throng the way;
Oxen and bleating lambs in lots,
Northumbrian boors and plaided Scots,
Men in the coal and cattle line;
From Teviot's bard and hero land,
From royal Berwick's beach of sand,
From Wooler, Morpeth, Hexham, and Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

These are not the romantic times
So beautiful in Spenser's rhymes,
So dazzling to the dreaming boy;
Ours are the days of fact, not fable,
Of knights, but not of the round table,
Of Bailie Jarvie, not Rob Roy;
'T is what "Our President," Monroe,
Has called "the era of good feeling";
The Highlander, the bitterest foe
To modern laws, has felt their blow,
Consented to be taxed, and vote,
And put on pantaloons and coat,
And leave off cattle-stealing;
Lord Stafford mines for coal and salt,
The Duke of Norfolk deals in malt,
The Douglas in red herrings;
And noble name and cultured land,
Palace, and park, and vassal band,
Are powerless to the notes of hand
Of Rothschild or the Barings.

The age of bargaining, said Burke,
Has come: today the turbaned Turk
(Sleep, Richard of the lion heart!)
Sleep on, nor from your ceremonies start)
Is England's friend and fast ally;
The Moslem tramples on the Greek,
And on the Cross and altar-stone,
And Christendom looks tamely on,
And hears the Christian maiden shriek,
And sees the Christian father die;
And not a sabre-blow is given
For Greece and fame, for faith and heaven,
By Europe's craven chivalry.

You'll ask if yet the Percy lives
In the armed pomp of feudal state.
The present representatives
Of Hotspur and his "gentle Kate,"
Are some half-dozen serving-men
In the drab coat of William Penn;
A chambermaid, whose lip and eye,
And cheek, and brown hair, bright and curling,
Spoke nature's aristocracy;
And one, half groom, half seneschal,
Who bowed me through court, bower, and hall,
From donjon keep to turret wall,
For ten-and-sixpence sterling.

—Fitz-Greene Halleck.

Italy.

O Italy, how beautiful thou art!
Yet I could weep,—for thou art lying, alas!
Low in the dust; and they who come admire thee
As we admire the beautiful in death.
Thine was a dangerous gift, the gift of beauty.
Would thou hadst less, or wert as once thou wast,
Inspiring awe in those who now enslave thee!
But why despair? Twice hast thou lived already,
Twice shone among the nations of the world,
As the sun shines among the lesser lights
Of heaven; and shalt again. The hour shall come,
When they who think to bind the ethereal spirit,
Who, like the eagle cowering o'er his prey,
Watch with quick eye, and strike and strike again
If but a sinew vibrate, shall confess
Their wisdom folly.

—Samuel Rogers.

The principal lakes in the Tahoe basin are Fallen Leaf, Watson's, Cascade, Heather, Susie, Rock Bound, Dick, Eagle, Gilmore, Half Moon, Lily, Grass, Angora, Lucille, Medley, Echo, Crystal, Cliff, Le Conte, Devil's, Bryant and Frog. Besides these there are dozens of smaller lakes in Desolation Valley. None of these lakes except Tahoe and Fallen Leaf contained trout until artificially stocked.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Dr. William Wallace Campbell, director of the Lick Observatory for the past twenty-two years, who is mentioned as the probable successor of Dr. David P. Barrows as president of the University of California, is a noted scientist. He was born in Ohio, and educated at the universities of Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin. Dr. Campbell, who has an international reputation as an astronomer, was in charge of several Lick Observatory expeditions before his appointment as director in January, 1901. He was elected to the National Academy of Sciences in 1914 and is a member of many European academies of science. He is the author of "The Elements of Practical Astronomy" and "Stellar Motions."

The new governor of Nebraska, Charles W. Bryan, is a younger brother of the doughty William J. Bryan, who has for the past quarter of a century practically eclipsed his brother and business partner. Those who know the younger man hold him in high esteem for both his ability and loyalty. Unlike his oratorical brother, he has no gifts of eloquence—a fact that may account for his comparative lack of fame. Also, unlike his brother, he is a careful investigator, who goes into problems thoroughly. Nebraskans think that a successful term as governor of their state might land him in the Senate or the Cabinet if a Democrat should succeed Mr. Harding in office.

Vice-Admiral Sir Michael Culme-Seymour, K. C. B., the new head of the British fleet in North Atlantic and West Indian waters, who succeeds Vice-Admiral Sir Willoughby Pakenham, comes of a fighting family. He is the fourth baronet of his line and the head of a family which has supplied a succession of officers to the royal navy without a single break since the reign of Henry VIII. A Seymour served as vice-admiral against the Spanish Armada under Queen Elizabeth. In fact, the name of Seymour has figured on the navy list without any interruption whatsoever since the time of the discovery of this continent by Columbus, and no other name has been "mentioned" so often for distinguished service. Besides commanding the battleship Centurion at the battle of Jutland, Culme-Seymour saw active service during the war as second in command of the Mediterranean fleet and also as admiral commanding the British forces in the Black Sea.

James Robert Mann, noted Republican congressman and minority leader of the House of Representatives during the Wilson administration, died as the result of an attack of pleurisy on the last day of November, aged sixty-six. Representative Mann, who had been a member of the House for the past twenty-five years, first represented the First Illinois District and since 1903 the Second. He was born near Bloomington, Illinois, was a graduate of the University of Illinois and of the Union College of Law, Chicago. He was admitted to the bar in 1881 and has practiced since then in Chicago. A resident and an attorney of the village of Hyde Park, on its annexation to Chicago he became alderman for the Thirty-Second Ward, 1893-96. He was elected to the House of Representatives for the Fifty-Fifth Congress and has remained in Congress ever since, being minority leader of the Sixty-Second to the Sixty-Fifth. His failure to become Speaker of the House in 1918 when the Republicans gained control of the lower house was attributed to his unpopularity with party leaders outside Congress. Nevertheless Mann remained a power in the House, on which he did not lose his hold during even his last week of life.

John Wanamaker, genius of organized commerce and promoter of that modern institution, the department store, is critically ill at his home in Philadelphia. Mr. Wanamaker began life as an errand boy in a book shop at fourteen, and like the heroes of boys' books, rose to political and financial eminence. The veteran merchant was born in Philadelphia, in 1838, educated in the public schools there, and married Mary Brown. At the age of eighteen he was a retail clothing salesman, and at twenty-three he established with Nathan Brown the clothing house of Wanamaker & Brown in his home city. In 1876 he established in Philadelphia his first department store, which was followed twenty years later by a similar business in New York. Mr. Wanamaker was an organizer and director of the Merchants' Bank and for several years was director of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. As a Republican of independent proclivities he became active in politics and was a great opponent of the political "machine." But he was evidently not politically ambitious, as he declined the Republican nomination to the Forty-Eighth Congress and the independent candidacy for mayor of Philadelphia in 1886. In 1888 he was a presidential elector, and from 1889 to 1893 was Postmaster-General of the United States, serving in the Cabinet of President Harrison. Among other distinctions, Mr. Wanamaker was the first salaried secretary of the Y. M. C. A., back in 1858; and from 1870 to 1883 he was president of the Y. M. C. A. of Philadelphia. He has always been an active religious and social service worker. He helped found the Presbyterian Hospital, of which he was a trustee, and with Mrs. Wanamaker built the children's ward. Mr. Wanamaker has erected Y. M. C. A. and college buildings in India, China, Japan and Korea, as well as numerous churches and other institutions. His contribution to war service was to send two relief ships to Belgium in 1914. He was made an officer of the Legion of Honor by the French government in 1912.

AS OUR AMBASSADOR SAW IT.

Letters of Walter H. Page Reveal the Peculiar Conditions Preceding America's Entry Into the War.

The publication of the letters of the American Ambassador to England supplies one of the rare exceptions to the rule that the epistolary form is tiresome. Possibly in the case of Walter H. Page some of the credit for making an intensely interesting book is due to Mr. Burton Hendrick, who has selected the letters and arranged them in such a way as to present a coherent story of the life and public services of a typical American.

Page was born in North Carolina and was old enough to remember incidents of the war that devastated the South. His youth and early manhood were spent in the South, and the story relates his endeavors to revive the energies of his native state in the dark days of the reconstruction period. The field was limited, however, and in 1885 he went to New York. Work on the Evening Post, eight years as editor of the Forum, three years with Houghton, Mifflin & Co., editor of the Atlantic Monthly for nearly two years, and then a member of the firm of Doubleday, Page & Co., makes the record of his labors up to the time of Wilson's election. The new firm started the World's Work and Page was its editor until he left for England. His interest in the South never ceased and he is found active in education, in agriculture, and in fighting disease—the hookworm—interesting Mr. Rockefeller in the last-named undertaking.

It is, however, to his work as ambassador to England that chief interest attaches. A supporter of President Wilson, it was at first supposed that he would be given a Cabinet post. Colonel House showed Page the list of names and solemnly asked him what he thought of them. The first name that attracted Page's attention was that of Josephus Daniels for Secretary of the Navy. Page at once expressed his energetic dissent.

"Why, don't you think he is Cabinet timber?" asked Colonel House.

"Timber!" Page shouted. "He isn't a splinter."

He tried to have the appointment changed, but failed; and Daniels stuck for eight long years, occupying the place that might have been taken by an executive capable of the critical work of Secretary of the Navy.

Page went to England in 1913, and his early letters home were full of judicious appraisals of that land and its people. Of the English he writes:

I can't see that the race is breaking down or giving out. Consider how their political morals have been pulled up since the days of the rotten boroughs; consider how their court life is now high and decent, and think what it once was. British trade is larger this year than it ever was, Englishmen are richer than they ever were and more of them are rich. They write and speak and play cricket, and govern, and fight as well as they have ever done—excepting, of course, the writing of Shakespeare.

England never had a finer lot of folk than these. And you see them everywhere. The art of living sanely they have developed to as high a level, I think, as you will find at any time in any land.

Of Sir Edward Grey, foreign minister, with whom Page came much in contact, he formed a very high opinion:

But I've little hope for a fight of the right kind with Sir Edward Grey. He is the very reverse of insolent—fair, frank, sympathetic, and he has so clear an understanding of our real character that he'd yield anything that his party and Parliament would permit. He'd make a good American with the use of very little sandpaper.

Sir Edward Grey is in the main responsible for the ease with which it is done. He is a frank and fair and truthful man. You will find him the day after tomorrow precisely where you left him the day before yesterday. We get along very well indeed. I think we should get along if we had harder tasks one with the other. And the English people are even more friendly than the government. You have no idea of their respect for the American nation.

The Mexican trouble was one of the first governmental tangles that came to Page's attention. Huerta was then in the saddle and Wilson was trying to unseat him. English oil interests were active in Mexico, and Sir Lionel Carden was the British representative at Mexico City. Writing to House, Page said:

By gradual approaches I'm going to prove that Carden can do—and in a degree has already done—as much harm as Bryce did good—and all about a paltry few hundreds of million dollars' worth of oil. What the devil does the oil or the commerce of Mexico or the investments there amount to in comparison with the close friendship of the two nations? Carden can't be good long: he'll break out again presently.

In the end Carden was transferred, Huerta was forced out, and we had a small war with Mexico; which Page deplored.

Nothing our ambassador found in England prevented the formation of a good understanding more than the Panama Canal tolls affair. President Wilson, early in his administration, took this subject in hand, with the result that the tolls were made uniform and one discreditable episode in American foreign relations was cleared up. Page wrote to House:

DEAR HOUSE: . . . The English government and the English people without regard to party—I hear it and feel it everywhere—are of one mind about this: they think we have acted dishonorably. They really think so—it isn't any political or diplomatic pretense. We made a bargain, they say, and we have repudiated it. If it were a mere bluff, or game, or party contention—that would be one thing. We could "bull" it through or live it down. But they look upon it as we look upon the repudiation of a debt by a state. Whatever the arguments by which the state may excuse itself we never feel the same toward it—never quite so safe about it.

They say, too, "See, you've preached arbitration and you propose peace agreements, and yet you will not arbitrate this: you know you are wrong, and this attitude proves it." Whatever Mr. Hay might or could have done, he made a bargain. The Senate ratified it. We accepted it. Whether it was a good bargain or a bad one, we ought to keep it.

The American ambassador had occasion frequently to complain of the conduct of the State Department under Bryan; and his correspondence with the President and with Colonel House contains many allusions to the confusion that prevailed. He said:

DEAR HOUSE: Couldn't the business with Great Britain be put into Moore's hands? [John Bassett Moore, then counselor of the State Department.] It is surely important enough at times to warrant separate attention—or (I might say) attention. You know after eight or nine months of this sort of thing the feeling grows on us all here that perhaps many of our telegrams and letters may not be read by anybody at all. You begin to feel that they may not be deciphered or even opened. Then comes the feeling (for a moment) why send any more? Why do anything but answer such questions as come now and then? Corresponding with Nobody—can you imagine how that feels? What the devil do you suppose does become of the letters and telegrams that I send, from which and about which I never hear a word? As a mere matter of curiosity I should like to know who receives them and what he does with them.

Now the State Department seems (as it touches us) to be utterly chaotic—silent when it ought to respond, loquacious when it ought to be silent. There are questions that I have put to it at this government's request to which I can get no answer.

While we are thus at work the only two communications from the department today are two letters from two of the secretaries about—presenting "Democratic" ladies from Texas and Oklahoma at court! And Bryan is now lecturing in Kansas.

Since I began to write this letter Lord Cowdray came to the house and stayed two and a half hours, talking about possible joint intervention in Mexico. Possibly he came from the foreign office. I don't know whether to dare sending a dispatch to the State Department, telling what he told me, for fear they'd leak. And to leak this—Good Lord! Two of the secretaries were here to dinner, and I asked them if I should send such a dispatch. They both answered instantly: "No, sir, don't dare: write it to the President." I said: "No, I have no right to bother the President with regular business nor with frequent letters." To that they agreed; but the interesting and somewhat appalling thing is, they're actually afraid to have a confidential dispatch go to the State Department.

The American people never will know what good fortune attended them when on three occasions Bryan was defeated for the presidency. He did enough mischief while Secretary of State, and in the end relieved every one by resigning.

One of the things that mystified the country when the Panama tolls question was up was the statement by the President:

"I ask this of you in support of the foreign policy of the Administration. I shall not know how to deal with other matters of even greater delicacy and nearer consequence if you do not grant it to me in ungrudging measure."

The matter is explained by the visit of House to Germany, France, and England in June, 1914, in an endeavor to bring these countries to an understanding and avert war. House wrote to Page:

DEAR PAGE: I have had a long talk with Mr. Laughlin. At first he thought I would not have more than one chance in a million to do anything with the Kaiser, but after talking with him further he concluded that I would have a fairly good sporting chance. I have about concluded to take it.

Colonel House left Berlin not particularly hopeful; the Kaiser impressed him as a man of unstable nervous organization—as one who was just hovering on the borderland of insanity. Certainly this was no man to be entrusted with such powers as the American had just witnessed at Potsdam. Dangerous as the Kaiser was, however, he did not seem to think Colonel House to be as great a menace to mankind as were his military advisers. The American came away from Berlin with the conviction that the most powerful force in Germany was the militaristic clique, and second, the Hohenzollern dynasty.

House thought that if he had had more time he might have accomplished his ends, but Page wrote him:

No, no, no—no power on earth could have prevented it. The German militarism, which is the crime of the last fifty years, has been working for this for twenty-five years. It is the logical result of their spirit and enterprise and doctrine. It had to come. But, of course, they chose the wrong time and the wrong issue. Militarism has no judgment. Don't let your conscience be worried. You did all that any mortal man could do. But nobody could have done anything effective.

Confusion in politics in France and England discouraged House:

"I feel as though I had been living near a mighty electric dynamo," Colonel House told his friends. "The whole of Germany is charged with electricity. Everybody's nerves are tense. It needs only a spark to set the whole thing off."

The "spark" came two weeks afterward with the assassination of the Archduke Ferdinand.

It did not take our ambassador long to see clearly the object of the war. On September 22, 1914, he wrote House:

MY DEAR HOUSE: When the day of settlement comes the settlement must make sure that the day of militarism is done and can come no more. If sheer brute force is to rule the world, it will not be worth living in. If German bureaucratic brute force could conquer Europe, presently it would try to conquer the United States; and we should all go back to the era of war as man's chief industry and back to the domination of kings by divine right. It seems to me, therefore, that the Hohenzollern idea must perish—be utterly strangled in the making of peace.

The whole world is bound to be changed as a result of this war. If Germany should win our Monroe Doctrine would at once be shot in two, and we should have to get "out of the sun." The military party is a party of conquest—absolutely.

Differences soon developed between the President and the ambassador. The divergence of views began with the neutrality proclamation. Page wrote:

When a war comes, a government must go into it or stay out of it. It must make a declaration to the world of its attitude. That's all that neutrality is. A government can be neutral, but no man can be.

"The President and the government," Page afterward wrote, "in their insistence upon the moral quality of neutrality, missed the larger meaning of the war. It is at bottom nothing but the effort of the absolute Berlin monarch and his group to impose their will upon as large a part of the world as they can overrun."

Page knew that we should some day become involved, and, writing to House after the sinking of the Lusitania, he said:

But looking at the thing in a long range way, we're bound to get into the war. For the Germans will blow up more American travelers without notice. And by dallying with them we do not change the ultimate result, but we take away from ourselves the spunk and credit of getting in instead of being kicked and cursed in. We've got to get in: they won't play the game in any other way. I have news direct from a high German source in Berlin that confirms this. . . . It's a curious thing to say. But the only solution that I see is another Lusitania outrage, which would force war.

As weeks and months went by and the President did nothing but write notes, the disgust and humiliation felt by most Americans was felt more keenly by Page, near to the seat of war. He expressed this feeling in letters to House and to the President and explained to the latter the sentiment in England. As the President seldom tolerated a difference of opinion he ignored his ambassador. The crowning humiliation of the Americans came when the President, in a note to the powers proposing peace negotiations, said "the objects which the statesmen of the belligerents on both sides have in mind in this war are virtually the same, as stated to their own people and to the world." In a previous speech he had said "the United States was not concerned with the causes and objects of the war."

Writing to House, the ambassador gave his opinion. "It is quite apparent that nobody in Washington understands the war. Come over and find out."

Of the President he wrote:

He does his own thinking, untouched by other men's ideas. He receives nothing from the outside. The influence of this lone-hand way of playing the game extends very far. The members of the Cabinet do not seem to have the habit of frankness with each other.

I can see it in no other way than this: the President suppressed free thought and free speech when he insisted upon personal neutrality.

That wasn't leadership in a democracy. Right here is the President's vast failure. From it there is now no escape unless the Germans commit more submarine crimes. They have kept the United States for their own exploiting after the war.

There is a great lesson in this lamentable failure of the President really to lead the nation. The United States stands for democracy and free opinion as it stands for nothing else and as no other nation stands for it. Now when democracy and free opinion are at stake as they have not before been, we take a "neutral" stand—we throw away our very birthright.

"The President," Page wrote to Mr. Laughlin, "dominates the whole show in a most extraordinary way. The men about him (and he sees them only on business) are very nearly all very, very small fry, or worse—the narrowest two-penny lot I've ever come across. He has no real companions. Nobody talks to him freely and frankly. I've never known quite such a condition in American life!"

So it went, through the weary period while Germany outraged our rights at will and finally dragged the President backwards into the war. Disgusted with the wretched preliminaries, Page attempted to resign, but the President would not permit him to come home. So he continued in office, gratified when we finally entered the war and doing his best to get the reluctant pacifists, including the President, in executive posts at Washington to do something.

Our ambassador never lost his faith in his native land. In a letter to his partner he says:

The idea that we were brought up on, therefore, that Europe is the home of civilization in general—nonsense! It's a periodical slaughter-pen, with all the vices that this implies. I'd as lief live in the Chicago stockyards. There they kill beeves and pigs. Here they kill men and (incidentally) women and children.

Our form of government and our scheme of society—God knows they need improving—are yet so immeasurably superior, as systems, to anything on this side the world that no comparison need be made. My first strong impression, then, is not that Europe is effete—that isn't it. It is medieval—far back toward the Dark Ages, much of it yet uncivilized, held back by inertia when not held back by worse things. The caste system is a constant burden almost as heavy as war itself and often quite as cruel.

Page remained at his post until late in 1918, when failing health compelled his resignation. Wilson accepted it in a curt, cold note; but the men in England, from the king down, rendered tribute to his work. Like many another exile in that world, he was ever looking back to his homeland and dreaming of the time when he would return to the sand hills of North Carolina for rest. He reached his home only to die, as truly a sacrifice to the war as his nephew who met his death in Belleau Wood.

These letters of our ambassador should be read by all who desire a view of the realities of our international relations and our war administration during the most critical period of our history. In the Dismal Swamp of the Wilson régime, Page stands out as one of the few officials that saw the real significance of developments and of the issues arising out of them; doing what he could to bring the nation to its proper course while the President floundered about and wrote notes. And one reading the letters arrives at a higher appraisal of Colonel House, the silent citizen who clung to the President until he, too, incurred the jealousy and displeasure that were the reward of almost all who served him.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF WALTER H. PAGE. By Burton J. Hendrick. In two volumes, illustrated. Garden City and New York: Doubleday, Page & Co.; $10.

BANKING AND INVESTMENT NEWS.

San Francisco bank clearings for the week ending December 2, 1922 (five days), were $134,000,000; for the corresponding week of last year, $146,100,000; a decrease of $11,800,000.

At the annual convention of the Investment Bankers' Association of America, in Del Monte, California, in October, the following resolution presented by the committee on to keep the investment banking business on the high ethical plane where it should be maintained. To urge investors to exchange United States government bonds for any other kind of security is to influence people to lower the degree of safety of their investments. The best type of investment banker would not be inclined to urge such a change. When the investor himself expresses the inclination to make the change it is a different matter. Then the investment banker can properly advise with him as to what is best to buy. In individual cases he might even suggest it, but not generally, says World's Work.

During October two printed circulars came to the desk of the investment editor issued by two of the rapidly expanding real estate mortgage bond houses and designed to influence people to exchange Liberty bonds and other securities for the 7 and 7½ per cent. real estate mortgage bonds offered by these houses. There are several points in connection with these circulars that investors should take into consideration before they are tempted to act upon such advice.

Leaving out of consideration the ethical nature of the proposal itself, against which the Investment Bankers' Association has now gone on record, there were certain methods used in making this proposal that seem open to criticism. For instance, one of the circulars has this to say regarding the safety of the investment:

"An easing of the government money market and a bettering of the government's cash position has resulted in many of these government bonds touching par. Thus without any or with practically no loss of principal Liberties and Victories bearing 3½ per cent.-4¾ per cent. can be exchanged for real estate gold bonds bearing 7 per cent.-7½ per cent. and with safety of principal assuredly maintained."

The inference which the uninformed reader would naturally draw from this last clause is that these real estate bonds are as safe as United States government bonds. This inference would not be correct, and when one realizes the number of uninformed investors who own Liberty bonds, the possibility of many people being misled by it can be appreciated.

Following this statement the house presented a table showing a "profit of from $225 to $525" in ten to fifteen years on the exchange of various issues of Liberty and Victory bonds for 7 per cent. real estate bonds. In justice to this house it should be said that this circular has not been used in general mailings since the Investment Bankers' Association, of which it is a member, took action in the matter. The other house included in its circular "An Actual Example" showing the "gain" derived from an exchange of $5000 Second Liberty Loan 4¼s, $6000 United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland 5½s, and $2000 American Telephone and Telegraph 6s for $9000 of one of its 7 per cent. issues and $5000 of one of its 7½ per cent. issues.

This brings up the most important point of this whole matter from the investor's standpoint. As long as one holds United States government bonds he needs no diversification of his investments. He has the diversification of the entire natural wealth of this country and of all of the activities of its hundred and five million people back of his bonds. If they are not good, then what other investment in the country is good? But when he starts down from this highest type of investment to get a higher return on his money, he should at once begin to apply the theory of diversification and distribute the risk in order to maintain as high an average degree of safety as possible consistent with the higher rate of return he desires.

Take the case of this "actual example." Here was an investor who possibly made his first investment in Liberty Loan bonds. Then he added some of the British government external loan 5½s brought out in this country, and later some American Telephone and Telegraph Company 6 per cent. notes. He was getting a higher return each time, but he was diversifying his investment by going into different fields and he chose from among the best of the foreign government bonds and American public utility issues. If he had been seeking a still higher return, he would have needed a still greater diversification of his investment to help compensate for the greater risk.

Now what does the "Exchange Bureau" of this real estate mortgage house suggest to this man? That he give up his well diversified list of the finest investments in exchange for two issues of its bonds, one secured on hotel property, which depreciates rapidly and depends largely on the character of its management for success, and the other on an apartment house property in the same city. It is true the past record of the house and of its issues speaks well for its bonds, but what of the principle of diversification that should be applied more completely when one seeks a higher rate of return on his money such as these bonds offer? To add a few of them to the already well diversified list might be sound investing, but to convert this list entirely into such bonds would be far from conservative. To believe that an exchange of Liberty bonds for such issues would leave one "with safety of principal assuredly maintained," as the other house said, would be to deceive oneself.

This magazine is still receiving so many inquiries regarding real estate mortgage bonds that it seems well to repeat some of the words of caution regarding them that were published on this page a few months ago. In the first place it should be said that there are houses of excellent reputation that have operated successfully in this field for many years and whose issues have won a high place for themselves in the confidence of investors who do not need readily marketable securities. On the other hand many new houses have recently entered the field and are taking advantage of the growing demand for such bonds to bring out issues that are not based on the same amount of experience.

This development has coincided with the advance in building costs and the inflation in real estate values. In other words, many houses have entered the field at the crest and it remains to be seen how they will come through the lower ground that is undoubtedly ahead. It seems likely that there will be failures among them which may result in losses to investors.

And this factor of inflation and high costs creates an uncertain element throughout the entire field. For if properties against which loans are now being made come into competition with pre-war constructed buildings the time will very likely come when their earnings will be reduced. And if real estate values fall from their present levels, the equities behind many real estate bonds will suffer. The real estate man of experience, of course, realizes all this and his issues should be protected against it. But he has to compete with these other houses in making his loans as well as selling them, and the borrower frequently wants to get as large a loan as he can. For the investors, therefore, it seems that it might be well, for the time being at least, to confine his purchases in this field to bonds of the earliest maturities, which are less likely to be affected by any change in real estate values, and to houses of the longest experience and best reputation in the field. And he should never forsake the principle of diversification.

During the last thirty days commercial and industrial activity has reflected the usual stimulation of fall and winter demand. Retail trade in the larger cities is more active than at the corresponding period of last year, and seasonal acceleration is evident throughout the country, says the National Bank of Commerce of New York. Uncertainty as to the volume of purchases by the farmers of the grain and livestock states has not been dispelled, however. Wholesale trade has been good throughout the current period. Stocks of many kinds of goods in the hands both of wholesale and retail dealers are light, but neither this fact nor threats of higher prices have been sufficient to induce buyers to make substantial forward purchases. The conservatism shown justifies the belief that the catastrophe of 1920 has not been forgotten.

Total car loadings and loadings of merchandise of less than carload lots are prac-

GEARY, MEIGS &amp; CO.

ESTABLISHED 1914

By investing $820 now in an obligation of the U. S. Government you will receive $1000 in 5 years. Exempt from normal Federal Income Tax. Write or phone for particulars.

INVESTMENT BONDS

CAL. COMMERCIAL UNION BLDG. GARFIELD 3450 SAN FRANCISCO

tically at the record levels established in 1920. Despite car shortage, especially for coal and for the movement of farm products, the railroads are handling freight remarkably well. Coal has been rapidly moved to the lake ports for shipment to the Northwest before the close of navigation. Receipts of wheat at primary markets to date, while somewhat less than for the corresponding period of 1921, are well above receipts for 1920. The livestock movement is satisfactory. Cotton is moving more rapidly than in 1921. Some industrial consumers are beginning to accumulate coal reserves, and the disappearance of premiums

$980—plus accrued interest, will yield $60.00 yearly in

TOOLE COUNTY
IRRIGATION DISTRICT
6% GOLD BONDS

Exempt from all Federal Income Taxes

Phone Sutter 334

G. E. MILLER &amp; COMPANY

105 Montgomery St. SAN FRANCISCO 229 First Nat. Bank Bldg. OAKLAND

PORTLAND
SEATTLEBONDS
Govt.
Mun.
Corp.
SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES

for immediate delivery is evidence of improved transportation for steel.

The manufacturing industries as a whole are operating at not far below normal. Steel output is at 75 per cent. of capacity. There has been a notable expansion of pig-iron production, which for October exceeded any month since December, 1920. Railroad orders continue heavy. Demand from the automobile and building industries is good, due account being taken of seasonal declines. Buying by agricultural implement makers is still light. The indications seem to be that demand for steel may slacken somewhat during the remainder of the year, but that recovery

Private Wires
Coast to Coast

E. F. Hutton &amp; Co.

MEMBERS
NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE
HUTTON BUILDING
Montgomery and Bush Sts.
HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
DEL MONTE HOTEL

FOR CHRISTMAS
A GOOD BOND

In $100 and $500 Denominations
Get your children started right on savings and investments.

Send for Special Offering

SECOND FLOOR
FIRST NATIONAL BANK BLDG.
Douglas 2121

FREEMAN
SMITH
&
CAMP
CO.

government bonds was adopted by a unanimous vote:

"Because of objections on the part of the United States Treasury Department, and because any other course of action by members of the Investment Bankers' Association may be cited by unscrupulous dealers as precedent for their own actions, all members of the association are hereby requested to refrain from

Sixty-five Sutter Street

BONDS

Ask to be placed on our mailing list
for monthly circular and for data regarding various bond issues.

STEPHENS
& COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO OAKLAND
Los Angeles San Diego

any campaigns conducted either by public appeal, circulars, advertisements, or the concerted action on the part of salesmen, which have for their purpose the inducement of owners of government securities to exchange same for other forms of investment."

Adoption of such a resolution as this helps

McDONNELL &amp; Co.

And Other Leading Exchanges

633 Market St., at New Montgomery
SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE SUTTER 7676
N. Y. Office, 120 Broadway
Los Angeles, 634 So. Spring St.

PRIVATE WIRES

CARSTENS &amp; EARLES, INCORPORATED

GOVERNMENT, MUNICIPAL
AND CORPORATION BONDS

ESTABLISHED 1891

Ground Floor
California Commercial Union Building
San Francisco

Telephone Douglas 6050

SEATTLE Los Angeles SPOKANE SAN FRANCISCO

The Oldest Bond House in California

Member of San Francisco
Stock and Bond Exchange

E. H. ROLLINS & SONS

300 Montgomery Street, San Francisco

Telephone Kearny 3807

will be made early in 1923. Demand for machine tools is fair.

The woolen and worsted industry is at between 80 and 85 per cent. of capacity. Boot and shoe manufacturers range from 80 per cent. in New England to capacity at St. Louis. Cotton consumption in October was 533,950 bales, compared with 494,745 and 401,325 bales in October, 1921 and 1920 respectively. October output of automobiles made a new high record for that month. Building is ex-numerous proposals which have been made to expand the scope of their operations, and points out that their reserve and investment policies are being developed to secure the greatest elasticity and stabilization of financial movements.

"Profit making is not the reason for the existence of the Federal Reserve system," he says. "Its primary functions are rather to secure through partial centralization an effective control of reserves against a day of need, and to afford an elastic system of currency and credit. Earnings are incidental to the exercise of these functions, although they are essential to the continued existence of a system whose ownership is private rather than governmental. Expenses of operation and the statutory dividend should be earned. The sources of these earnings are determined by the provisions of the Federal Reserve Act. They fall into two main classes: the purchase or discount of commercial paper of specified types, and investment in certain government securities.

"In the autumn of 1920 security investments of Federal Reserve banks ranged between 8 and 13 per cent. of total earning assets; since the middle of February, 1922, they have ranged between 30 per cent. and 54 per cent. of the total, and have averaged 44 per cent. The great bulk of these investments has properly consisted of short-term certificates of indebtedness, which are peculiarly suited to the open market operations of Federal Reserve banks. The change in the relative amount of investments has accompanied the reduced activity of business and the progressive liquidation of member bank indebtedness at reserve banks.

"Although reviving business activity will no doubt result in increased borrowing by member banks, by and large the rediscounting facilities of the reserve banks may be expected to be availed of freely only in periods of emergency or of seasonal strain. In any event, not until business has grown far beyond its present proportions will rediscounting under normal conditions give employment to any such volume of funds as was so used during 1920.

"There is little reason for thinking that purchases of bills in the open market, as authorized by Section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act, will afford adequate employment for surplus funds. Such bills do not as a rule originate in large volume in periods of slack demand for banking accommodation. Moreover, experience indicates that reserve bank purchases are in the main confined to bankers' acceptances issued in foreign trade, out of which, indeed, possibly three-fourths of all American bank acceptances arise. The great decline in the dollar value of our foreign trade has therefore restricted the volume of bills available for purchase, while the widening of the market for bankers' bills among banks and savings institutions has further tended to limit purchases by reserve banks.

"There have been numerous proposals to alter the legal structure of the reserve system by a broader definition of eligible paper and by extension of the scope of open market operations. Among the changes frequently suggested is the proposal that stock exchange loans should be made eligible for rediscount or purchase by Federal Reserve banks. When one considers the extent to which undesirable security speculation might proceed if the present enormous idle assets of reserve banks were directly available for financing stock market operations, the desirability of such an extension of the rules of eligibility is overwhelmingly negated.

"There remains for consideration the possibility of desirable expansion in the security dealings of Federal Reserve banks, at present restricted to United States obligations and short-term revenue warrants of municipal governments. The only apparent reason for turning to corporate bonds for investment would be to enlarge the earnings of reserve banks. Until such time as there is a wider gap between the return on corporate and that on Federal obligations, and until reserve banks are pressed for income with which to meet their dividends there is no necessarily compelling motive to expand earnings.

"As a matter of fact all banks turn more or less to security investment in periods of inactive demand for commercial loans. This temporary shift of commercial funds to the investment market is, within limits, a natural and desirable development, appropriate for reserve banks and private banks alike. But the limit of security investment for reserve banks is by their very nature relatively much narrower than for other banks. It is their duty in periods of inactivity to accumulate large reserves, and to be content even when earning assets are the smaller part of their total resources. In this way too rapid expansion can be guarded against and the reserves kept for time of need. Such a policy, however, may do much to stabilize the rates for bank loans over a period of years.

"We may conclude that while the adequate employment of reserve bank assets presents problems of grave importance, there is at present no solid reason for expanding the scope of ineligible investment. Some of the extensions which have from time to time been suggested are sacrilegiously suited to the nature of a reserve system of commercial banking nor do they seem essential to the maintenance of a proper balance among the several divisions of the American money market. The present period of reserve banking is in a sense experimental, but the administration of the banks suggests that the fundamental functions of reserve banks are in no danger of being lost sight of and that, in particular, the reserve and investment policies of the banks are being developed with a view to securing the desired elasticity and stabilization of banking movements."

The Coast Valleys Gas and Electric Company report through Hunter, Dulin & Co. that the earnings statement for the twelve months ended October 31, 1922, shows: Gross earnings, $674,053.11; operating expenses and taxes and depreciation, $503,210.95; net income from operations, $170,842.16; interest on funded debt, $86,970.68; available for dividends on preferred stock, $83,871.48; 6 per cent. preferred stock outstanding, $438,600; annual dividend requirements, $26,316. Earnings for the twelve-month period available for preferred stock dividends are 3.2 times dividend requirements on preferred stock now outstanding.

After Henry Ford's road had made an auspicious record during the first half of this year, when total net operating income reached $705,528, surpassing 1921 figures of $190,083 by $515,445, deficits growing larger every month practically wiped out early results by the end of September.

The September deficit of $383,097 was the largest since August, 1920. It compared with a deficit of $300,404 in August, one of $16,367 in July and another of $91,761 in September last year.

Gross was an improvement over same month in 1921, total of $66,139 representing increase of $44,892, or 7.08 per cent. However, compared with monthly gross this year, it was the smallest since February, and was 7.93 per cent. lower than August, which was not a good month. In fact, since June gross revenues have decreased steadily, comparison between that month and September show aggregate loss of 35.73 per cent. This falling off can be laid partly to July 1st rate cut. Traffic should not have fallen off to any great extent, except as to coal. Automobile movement has been good, and as the Ford shops were closed only four days in September, reduction can not be traced to this source.

A new offering of $50,000 Yuba City, California, 5 per cent. municipal improvement bonds, due serially 1925 to 1947, is made by the Freeman, Smith & Camp Company. These bonds are tax exempt in California and exempt from all Federal income taxes.

Yuba City, the county seat of Sutter County, is situated in the Sacramento Valley about forty miles north of Sacramento on the Southern Pacific and Sacramento Northern railroads. The tributary country is a rich and productive farming and fruit-raising section, its principal crops being alfalfa, grain, peaches, prunes, pears, almonds and grapes. Dairying is also an important industry.

Yuba City is a thoroughly up-to-date community with beautiful homes, well-paved streets, electric light and gas systems and an excellent municipally-owned high-pressure water system. It is connected with Marysville, which lies across the river, by a fifteen-minute electric service. It contains a national and savings bank, a modern hotel, fine school buildings, several churches, a creamery and the usual stores found in a prosperous community. Two large fruit canneries, two dried fruit packing plants, and a large flour mill are also located here.

Wheat advanced week before last to a new high price for the move, and since then has reacted somewhat. While there may not be any spectacular rise, the trend this winter will be gradually to higher levels. Doubtless there is plenty of wheat to meet all demands, but the price is out of line with other commodities. The outlook for corn is very bullish. This grain is used primarily as an animal food, and we have this year a very short crop and a demand considerably in excess of normal.

Everything points to a stringency in cotton later in the season such as is likely to result in quite high prices. About all we can look for in the way of reactions are those that occur from time to time for purely technical reasons. The crop is so undeniably short that even with the estimated carry-over of 2,828,000 bales, this year's supply will be not much over 13,000,000 bales against an expected consumption and export demand of over 12,000,000 bales.

With average operations around 80 per cent. of capacity, steel production is considerably in excess of anything attained before the war. The trade rather expects some curtailment of output during the winter by the independents, owing to coal and car shortage, but so far nothing of the sort has occurred.

The rubber industry, one of the worst sufferers during last year's period of deflation, is showing signs of having definitely turned the corner. It has been one of the last trades

Stocks : Bonds Cotton : Grain Commodities

STRASSBURGER & COMPANY

133 Montgomery Street
San Francisco
Telephone Douglas 2220

Members
San Francisco Stock and Bond Exchange and Chicago
Board of Trade

Private Wire connections with New York and other leading Eastern Financial and Commercial Centers.

to respond to the general industrial revival. The leather industry, which has been another laggard, is picking up, and the various companies are reporting much improved earnings. The situation regarding copper, lead, and zinc continues decidedly bullish. Copper holds around 14 cents, and lead is selling at a new high price for the year. Unless production is very greatly and quickly increased, there is likely to be an actual shortage of zinc and a scarcely adequate supply of lead.

Miss Elizabeth Marbury, the New York "play broker," is said to have disposed of more plays for dramatic authors than any other person in America. She has served as

INVESTMENT SECURITIES

Government, Municipal
and Corporation Bonds
for the investment of Banks, Trust Companies
and Individuals

Inquiries invited

HUNTER, DULIN & Co.

256 MONTGOMERY ST.
Telephone Douglas 106
SAN FRANCISCO

Los Angeles Pasadena Oakland Office 508 S. Indicator Bldg. Santa Barbara San Diego

an agent for the most famous dramatists of Europe, and has also introduced a number of noted American playwrights to the public.

Adelaide, the capital of South Australia, is a "model city," laid out with a central town in perfectly square blocks, containing public and business buildings. Outside of that is a belt of public parks and gardens and beyond the latter are the residence suburbs.

INVESTMENT SECURITIES

COMMERCIAL PAPER
AND ACCEPTANCES

GOVERNMENT
MUNICIPAL
AND CORPORATION
BONDS

BOND & GOODWIN & TUCKER

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES SEATTLE PORTLAND

Let Us Help You Invest

INDIVIDUAL circumstances affect the policy that any investor should follow. For some, long term securities are advisable; for others, short term; for some, the interest rate is more important than ready marketability; but for all, security should be the main consideration.

Let us advise you as to a wise diversified selection of bonds. Our experience of 35 years as a bond house in California is at your service.

WM. R. STAATS CO.

Established 1877

Alexander Bldg., Montgomery St., cor. of Bush

SAN FRANCISCO

Telephone Kearny 301

LOS ANGELES SAN DIEGO PASADENA

BOOKS ON THE TABLE.

Ariel.

Like a soothing powder for our fevered brains, hypped on utilitarianism, comes a little classic from South America, "Ariel," by José Enrique Rodó, called the greatest of American idealists by his translator, Mr. F. J. Stimson, late United States Ambassador to Argentina. We of the Northern Hemisphere who are accustomed to associate South America with the tango, a popular movie star, coffee plantations, cattle ranches, and gambling dens are apt to be doubly jolted by "Ariel"—those of us, of course, who are not philosophers or students of Spanish literature, the majority in short. It is something of a shock to the uninitiate to discover in "Ariel" evidence of a finished school of neo-Latin philosophy and the inference that every other school as well as the idealistic may be represented in our adjacent continent.

In addition, Mr. Stimson tells us in his preface that poets are more abundant in the countries of Latin America than elsewhere and that many of the leading scholars of international law live there—facts that are not incongruous when one bears in mind that South America is the greatest heir of the greatest civilizations of the past. "Ariel," which is said to be Rodó's masterpiece, and which "lay in piles of popular editions in every bookstore in Buenos Aires and other South American cities" when it was published some years ago, is an argument for the refining or civilizing influences of life against the material and utilitarian, of Ariel against Caliban, to use Rodó's graceful allegory. It is a book to soothe a harried, routine-driven, North American mind.

R. G.

ARIEL. By José Enrique Rodó. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; $1.25.

Dear Brutus.

As usual J. M. Barrie, in "Dear Brutus," has hit on an idea that is original, fantastic, supernatural, and yet strangely and even touchingly reflective of life and human character. In this play the Puck that we know best in "Midsummer Night's Dream" has grown old and tired, but is still tricky. Only Lob—as he is known in the play, in which he appears as a very old English gentleman of social affiliations—wants his wholly human friends to venture forth themselves, while he lingers by the fireside.

But on Midsummer's Eve he uses his ancient arts to construct a magical wood at the doors of his country mansion, and in this wood he contrives to send forth the house-party guests he has gathered around him.

Here we perceive the Puck-like art of Barrie himself; ancient magic exercised on a group of such modern people as we might meet in English novels.

For one by one they go forth in the magical forest, and have a "second chance" in their destiny. And one or two there are that profit by the later wisdom dimly felt. But the philanderer philanders again, the thief is still at his old job, and the procrastinator fails to write the magnum opus that eludes him in his first rounded-out destiny.

The idea is most enchantingly worked out. There is the fairy magic of Merrie England haunting the dark corners of the wood, and there is something of a seer's compassionate wisdom tenderly dominating the strange scenes. For Barrie is ever Barrie; mellow, tolerant, benignant, inimitable.

DEAR BRUTUS. By J. M. Barrie. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons; $1.

East of Suez.

With the bitterly clear and unshrinking vision of the deeply-dyed cynic, W. Somerset Maugham portrays in "East of Suez" the mingling of Eastern and Western vices in the character of the beautiful, unhappy Eurasian, Daisy, loved of men and scorned of women.

The Oriental half of Daisy is Chinese, but she seems to have inherited none of the virtues of that race, her character being compounded of dissimulation, voluptuousness, and, unluckily for her, constancy in love.

Mr. Maugham's cosmopolitanism has made him quite at home in the Orient, whose rich colorings, subtle deceptions, and underground system of communication he is well able to depict.

The play has made very much of an impression both in London and New York, for it is a slice of life; the life as it is lived in the Orient by the resident whites, and therefore novel to the mass of theatre-goers.

It is safe to say, however, that the undeniable fascination that the play exerts on the imagination is somewhat morbid in tone; for there is nothing beautiful in Daisy's human relationships; not even the affection existing between her and the evil, money-loving hag who passes for her amah, but whom, in secret, she acknowledges as her mother.

EAST OF SUEZ. By W. Somerset Maugham. New York: George H. Doran Company; $1.25 net.

Notes of Books and Authors

President Cleveland, according to ex-Ambassador Straus, whose "Under Four Administrations" was recently published by the Houghton Mifflin Company, had a strong leaning towards acting. One night after the theatre, Mr. Straus says, "We had a supper of delicatessen and beer at home, which I knew he would like, and he amused us with several funny stories and mimicry. My wife remarked that he might have made a success on the stage, and he replied that his friend Joe Jefferson had often deplored his having missed that profession."

It is a hundred years ago, this year, since an Englishman, Archibald Leighton, invented cloth binding for books. The evolution of our book world would have been different if binding in cloth had not been invented. It meant that books became more durable, as it means today that books keep clean in our often dirty climate when, if they were only bound in paper, they would not keep clean at all.

The prize offered by the Houghton Mifflin Company for the best essay by a student of journalism on Samuel Hopkins Adams' newspaper novel, "Success," has been won by Hugh J. Morlan of the University of Iowa. The judges—A. Hamilton Gibbs, Will Irwin, Mr. Adams and a representative of the publishers—included in their report of the contest the interesting information that over half the papers submitted were by women students. It is also interesting to observe in this connection that Catherine Filene in her "Careers for Women" lists no fewer than nine positions on a newspaper which are particularly suitable for women.

Whiting Williams, whose new book of observations as a laborer in France and Germany will be published by Charles Scribner's Sons late in October, found during his stay in Essen that the Krupps had started something absolutely new. "A group of their workers," he says, "had complained that the gold fillings and especially the gold crowns of their teeth did not stand the gritting they had to go through when the men lifted the heavy weights of hot or cold steel. So the plant dentist—with the help of the alloy research department—started to pioneer a new line. As the result, 1500 Krupp workmen are today wearing steel-crowned teeth." Mr. Williams' forthcoming book, "Horny Hands and Hampered Elbows," is the third of his labor series. The first, "What's on the Worker's Mind," gave his observations as an American workman, while the second, "Full Up and Fed Up," represented actual experience in all the principal British industries.

John Drinkwater, the author of "Lincoln," etc., is at work on a new play.

Bonds for Investment

MUNICIPALS IRRIGATION DISTRICTS CORPORATIONS

Specialists in Safety

Anglo London Paris Company
One Sansome Street San Francisco
Phone Kearny 5600

The French American Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO

108 SUTTER STREET

Commercial—Checking—Savings

Resources Over $16,000,000

A General Banking Business Transacted

Commercial and Personal Checking
Accounts SolicitedSavings Accounts receive interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum

SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES $3.50

OFFICERS

Leon Bocqueraz ..... President
J. M. Dupas ..... Vice-President
J. A. Bergerot ..... Vice-President
W. F. Duffy ..... Vice-Pres. and Cashier
A. Bousquet ..... Secretary
J. T. Trillary ..... Asst. Cashier
Chas. L. Ebner, Jr. .... Asst. Cashier

Member Federal Reserve System and
Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco
The San Francisco Savings and Loan Society
(THE SAN FRANCISCO BANK)

SAVINGS COMMERCIAL

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

MISSION BRANCH ..... Mission and 21st Streets

PARK-PRESIDIO DISTRICT BRANCH ..... Clement and 7th Ave.

HAIGHT STREET BRANCH ..... Haight and Belvedere Streets

June 30th, 1922

Assets ..... $76,170,177.18
Deposits ..... 72,470,177.18
Capital Actually Paid Up ..... 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds ..... 2,700,000.00
Employees' Pension Fund ..... 385,984.61

A dividend to depositors of FOUR AND
ONE QUARTER (4 1/4) per cent. per annum
was declared for the six months ending June 30th, 1922.

The Life Story of a Great Californian

LETTERS OF FRANKLIN K. LANE

"Among the great letters of literature. Neither controversial nor critical, but full of warm human interest, friendliness, and a generous appreciation of others."

—Baltimore Sun.

"As a textbook in Americanism the volume is invaluable. It ought to be read by every young man who has any political ambitions."

—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

An Ideal Christmas Gift. Buy It Today.

Illus., $5.00
All Book Stores

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN CO.

612 Howard St.
San Francisco, Cal.

Two Great Civic Enterprises

Standing on the Ocean Beach where Sloat Boulevard touches the Great Highway, you behold the beginnings of two great civic enterprises.

At that spot starts the Skyline Boulevard, California's highway of grandeur, which cancels a "No Thoroughfare" sign placed by Nature upon our peninsula, and opens to travel a region rich in the noblest scenery of ocean, mountain, lake and valley.

At that spot, too, is being constructed the largest children's playground in the world, with a clubhouse, baseball diamonds, tennis courts, and a swimming pool that will accommodate 10,000 youngsters.

The first section of the Skyline Boulevard, which is now being surfaced, runs two miles across the Lake Merced Rancho.

Right-of-way for this section and for nine miles in San Mateo County—eleven miles in two counties—is the gift of Spring Valley Water Company.

The sixty acres on which the city is laying out a "Kiddies' Paradise" have been leased, with option to purchase, from Spring Valley.

SPRING VALLEY
WATER COMPANY

BRIEFER REVIEWS.

A Catholic Poet.

Charles L. O'Donnell, professor of English literature at the University of Notre Dame, and a Roman Catholic priest, is evidently a minor poet of merit, judged from "Cloister and Other Poems" (Macmillan; $1), a collection of some sixty or so very brief efforts, of a marked simplicity and sincerity. Father O'Donnell has a nice mastery of meter and a very natural sense of rhythm, his verses often having the singing simplicity of Burns—though they are nowise suggestive of the Scottish bard otherwise. The nature of "Cloister and Other Poems" is delicately austere, but by no means ascetic.

Mississippi Valley Beginnings.

A book of romantic and historic interest to residents of the Middle West, in particular,

BALFOUR, GUTHRIE &amp; CO.

SAN FRANCISCO AND LOS ANGELES,
PORTLAND, SEATTLE, TACOMA,
AND VANCOUVER.

MERCHANTS

EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS

MARINE AND FIRE INSURANCE
AVERAGE ADJUSTERS

Agents of

HARRISON DIRECT LINE OF STEAMERS
TO AND FROM EUROPEAN PORTS

Redwood Export Company

California Redwood
Lumber and Ties

Cargoes and Parcels
"To off shore markets only"

260 CALIFORNIA STREET
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

Phone Sutter 2163

UNION LUMBER CO.

CROCKER BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE

REDWOOD LUMBER
RAILROAD TIES
TELEGRAPH POLES
SHINGLES

SPLIT REDWOOD PRODUCTS

Geo. E. Billings Roy C. Ward Geo. B. Dinsmore
J. C. Muessdorffer Jas. W. Dean

GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE
EFFECTED

312 California St., San Francisco, Cal.
Phone—Douglas 6400

BONESTELL & CO.
PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna,
San Francisco

The Wright Magazine

("Not for self, but for others")

Only $1.00 a Year.

Besides a serial and short stories it contains departments for literary and music, women and children, farm and garden, a people's forum, manuscript markets, radio notes and other interesting features.

THE WRIGHT MAGAZINE
P. O. Box 894 Little Rock, Ark.

but also to all lovers of American history, is "Mississippi Valley Beginnings" (G. P. Putnam's Sons; $4.50), by Henry E. Chambers, a chronicler of many phases of Southern history. Mr. Chambers calls his book "an outline of the early history of the Earlier West," which is an accurate definition of this record of pioneers, of French settlements, of Scotch Irish conquest, and, in short, of what the author terms an early American melting pot. Illustrations from old prints, lithographs, and photographs, and a half-dozen maps, enhance the value of an intrinsically valuable book.

Hearn's Japanese Lectures.

Mr. John Erskine has rendered readers of critical literature, and admirers of Lafcadio Hearn particularly, a favor in editing "Pre-Raphaelite and Other Poets" (Dodd, Mead & Co.), which comprises Hearn lectures formerly included in "Interpretations of Literature," "Appreciations of Poetry," and "Life in Literature," thus bringing together in one book Lafcadio Hearn's papers on Rossetti, Swinburne, Browning, Morris, Meredith, Robert Buchanan and Robert Bridges. Chapters on Rossetti's prose and on "The Shaving of Shagpat" are included to supplement Hearn's criticism of their authors' verse. The remarkable thing about the precision and great critical acumen of these lectures is that Hearn delivered them before Japanese students in Tokyo with no thought to their preservation and knowing well that much of their fineness must be wasted on an audience who could only grasp the broad outlines of his subject. Owing to his slow delivery in consideration for his foreign audience, several of his students were able to take down his words verbatim. Mr. Ervine, who edited the volumes in which these lectures first appeared, made no addition and almost no alteration in the text. Only those manuscripts were used which were clear and in which no passages were garbled. The compilation from the earlier series of lectures is highly commendable.

The Old Country.

Of the gift books that are rife among the seasonal output of the publishers, we heartily recommend "The Old Country" (E. P. Dutton) for any one with national or sentimental interest in the British Isles and for being an unusual bargain among books of its kind. Mr. Ernest Rhys, who is probably foremost among anthologists, has edited this assortment of papers and poems, all of which are redolent with praise of England. That is to say, its literary merit is high and a glance at the contents suggests that every representative English writer has written something at some time or other in praise of his native land. But as a de luxe edition, the first requisite of a gift book, "The Old Country" excels, for it belongs to the genus of book that decorates library tables. Its handsome color plates and line drawing are profuse and it sells for the nominal sum—for gift books—of two dollars.

New Books Received.

VALLEY WATERS. By Charles D. Stewart. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $2.

A novel by the author of "The Fugitive Blacksmith."

A BOOK OF GIANTS. By Henry Wysham Lanier. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $2.

Tales of very tall men of myth, legend, history and science.

HENNY AND PENNY. By Bertha Parker Hall. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $1.50.

Juvenile.

THE WINTER'S TALE. By William Shakespeare. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $7.

Gift edition with twelve colored plates by Maxwell Armfield.

ICE AGES. By Joseph McCabe. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; $1.50.

The story of the earth's revolutions.

GRAVITATION VERSUS RELATIVITY. By Charles Lane Poor. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; $2.50.

Fundamental principles of gravitational astronomy.

THE OPTIMIST. By E. M. Delafield. New York: The Macmillan Company.

By the author of "Humbly."

THE BOOKMAN ANTHOLOGY OF VERSE. Edited by John Farrar. New York: George H. Doran Company.

EAST OF SUEZ. By W. Somerset Maugham. New York: George H. Doran Company; $1.25.

A play in seven scenes.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE. By E. T. Raymond. New York: George H. Doran Company; $3.

THE OLD COUNTRY. Edited by Ernest Rhys. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $2.

"A book of the love and praise of England."

ROBINSON CRUSOE, SOCIAL ENGINEER. By Henry E. Jackson. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $3.

"How the discovery of Robinson Crusoe solves the labor problem and opens the path to industrial peace."

THE LIGHT WHICH CAN NOT FAIL. By Winifred Holt. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $3.50.

True stories of heroic blind men and women.

HORNY HANDS AND HAMPERED ELBOWS. By Whiting Williams. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons; $2.50.

The worker's mind in Western Europe.

WING SHOOTING AND ANGLING. By Eugene V.

The White House

The Blood Ship

By NORMAN SPRINGER

It has the elements that make it a bully story—snap and go, lots of action, the tang of the sea, and it certainly reads like the work of a man who knows ships and shanghaied crews.
It is romance! Mystery! $1.90

Book Department, Main Floor

Phone Kearny 5000

Raphael Neill & Co. Inc.

for better results Cook with Electricity

The scientific application and easy adjustment of heat to the purposes of cooking reach their highest development in an Electric Range. Call at the nearest P G and E office and ask for details on the advantages of electric cooking.

Pacific Gas and Electric Company

P.G. and E.

"PACIFIC SERVICE"

P-05:4-10 E

IT'S THE WATER.

Prepared with Glacier Water from
Shasta Springs

AT ALL DEALERS

SHASTA WATER COMPANY

Connett, 3rd. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons; $2.50.

The technic of these sports in practical language for both beginners and experts.

VALIANT DUST. By Katharine Fullerton Gould. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons; $2.

Short stories by the author of "The Great Tradition."

POLITICS. By Frank Exline. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $2.

An investigation into the essential elements of all existing forms of government.

THE CAVEMAN WITHIN US. By William H. Fielding. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $3.

His peculiarities and powers.

TO TELL YOU THE TRUTH. By Leonard Merrick. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $1.90.

Short stories.

FROM BERLIN TO BAGDAD AND BABYLON. By the Rev. J. A. Zahm. New York: D. Appleton & Co.; $5.

Travel and archæology.

All Books that are reviewed in the Argonaut can be obtained at

Robertson's

222 STOCKTON ST.

Union Square San Francisco

THE HOLMES BOOK CO.

707 Market St. 152 Kearny St. 22 Third St.

Largest variety of new and second-hand books in the city. A visit to our stores will convince you of the truth of this assertion. We buy libraries or single books for cash. See us before selling. Phone—Douglas 3283.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

IF YOU ARE A REAL BOOK-LOVER

Spend a pleasant hour in the real "Old Book Shop" at 2 TILLMAN PLACE, OFF GRANT AVENUE—below Sutter.

Rare Old Books Bought, Sold and Hunted For by GEORGE HARGENS (formerly of the White House)

BOOKS AT PAUL ELDER'S
239 POST ST. SAN FRANCISCO

NEWBEGIN'S BOOKSTORE

358 POST STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Opposite Union Square

A Shop known for its courteous service, and a pleasant place to browse.

Information on books, authors and editions gladly given. Books bought and sold. Buyer will call. Telephone Douglas 2810

JOHN HOWELL
IMPORTER BOOKS PUBLISHER
RARE BOOKS AND FIRST EDITIONS
Libraries Bought and Sold
328 Post Street : Union Square
Sutter 3268
SAN FRANCISCO

"THE BOHEMIAN GIRL."

At the Rivoli they are continuing their enjoyable rendition of Balfe's still popular opera, which dramatically is a musty, fusty absurdity, but which is not permanently retired because of an old-fashioned sweetness and tuncfulness in its garland of romantic melodies.

Romantic indeed they are, for romance is the keynote of the thing. People retain an astonishing ability to enjoy grown-up fairy tales, even in this era of adolescent cynicism.

The Rivoli company does well by the ancient relic, Lillian Glaser singing the rôle of the gypsy girl very sweetly and charmingly, while John Van found that the music of her sweetheart lay within the most pleasing notes of his strong and dependable tenor. Rafael Brunetto has scarcely a sufficient flood of swelling sorrow to express the count's inconsolable woe. But his singing of the rôle shows commendable qualities, and he deserved the encores that he got.

Nona Campbell, always satisfactory in her work, no doubt enjoyed the opportunity for being young and effectively costumed as the dark-browed gypsy queen, and Lavinia Winn, in a dashing white and scarlet uniform, took the male rôle of Arline's cousin-wooner; and a dapper little Osip-like figure she made in it, although singing is not Miss Winn's high card.

Ferris Hartman, of course, was Devilshoof, the comedian playing the rôle in lively comedy spirit. No doubt it is all true that Ferris Hartman was playing here almost thirty years ago, but sometimes his light-footedness and the perennial boyhood of his spirit makes us doubt it. He is from toe to crown the emotional Thespian—jolly, warm-hearted, and firmly believing in the existence of similar qualities in his public.

Next week we shall see Mr. Hartman as the Sheriff of Nottingham; since "Robin Hood," an orchestral sample of the most popular melodies of which was given between the acts, is to be the bill.

The Rivoli continues to draw well, and the friends of the enterprise are in a pleased and soothed state of mind.

DARKEST PESSIMISM.

These Capek dramas—"R. U. R." and "The World We Live In"—do not stimulate faith in humanity and the joy of living, but judging from the New York reviews, they give the theatre-goer that bristling feeling down his spine which makes up to him for any lack of sweetness and light.

For all is dark, in both of these players. The Brothers Capek are young in years, but not in spirit. Like many other young soldiers, they discovered, during the great military cataclysm, man's inhumanity to man.

As a result their cynical unfaith in humanity is black, deep, and bitter. Young manhood acquired a blighting weapon, during the war; the weapon of complete distrust and hostility to the leaders of men. Nevertheless, while the three present living generations do the world's work, will the old pretty fables by which men were tricked into sacrifices because of their exalted faiths, be believed. That is what the Capek drama seems to shadow forth.

"The World We Live In," with its population of rapacious and wrangling insects living out their brief lives in hideous, hungry conflict, is typical of us humans. The ant-hill act is an allegorical presentation of the vast family of human toilers. And while they blindly, endlessly, soullessly toil, the Leader directs their movements, unaffected by their sufferings.

Such, say the Brothers Capek, with savage, searching irony, "such is the world we live in."

People have gone to see these plays through curiosity, and because of their strange, sinister power. But they will not live. Even "Chantecler" has run its course as an acted play, and it will be remembered that in "Chantecler" the Cock stood for the idealist, whose faith in the finer things of the spirit leavened the selfishness and treachery of the mass.

And there is no leaven of hope or faith in either "R. U. R." or "The World We Live In." All is black, unrelieved despair, and the best we can get out of it is a sinister warning to the family of diplomats that run the world; which is something, but not enough.

LET US GIVE THANKS.

Theatre-goers who consistently stick to seeing—and sometimes trying vainly to hear—the spoken drama have something to thank the picture plays for. The modern tendency of players, in their efforts to be realistic, to turn their backs and mumble, has driven many a former fervent adherent of the spoken drama to the movies. There they may relax the stiff tension of the auditory nerves and concentrate on seeing. And when they occasionally return to witnessing the spoken—or, too frequently, murmured—drama, they are apt to become rebellious.

One does not like to seem to hound a player, and I hate to mention Henry Miller and Ruth Chatterton again in connection with this subject. But they will have to point the moral, as well as adorn the tale. I never shall get over the amazement I felt when a rebel in the audience called out "Louder!" during the last Miller engagement here, because both Miller and Miss Chatterton are so very popular. But it showed that even a cordial regard and admiration for players can not persuade spectators that they are enjoying a play that they can not hear. Since then, precisely the same thing has happened to them in New York, with—for that occasion—rather disastrous consequences.

It will be recalled that during Ethel Barrymore's engagement here with "Déclassée," while no one heckled her in public, there were curses, not loud, but deep, in private from people who had vainly attempted to follow the murmured subtleties of that rather subtle piece.

History repeats itself, and now there is printed complaint in the New York press of Ethel Barrymore and her support for their unintelligibility in "Rose Bernd"; for players are always apt to imitate the virtues as well as the vices of the star.

There is one of our American players, however, who deserves a shower of bouquets for having perceived her own deficiencies and corrected them. There were at one time people who almost foamed at the mouth whenever Mrs. Fiske was mentioned to them in terms of approval, after having heard her just once. I remember one unforgettable night when she was playing "Hedda Gabler." It was during a time when the actress was patently in a run-down physical condition. All her odd, characteristic mannerisms were exaggerated, and when the first curtain descended, leaving an exasperating impression of a torrent of gabble, the audience, almost as one man, rent its garments and lifted up its voice in woe. It was mourning its lost dollars.

When the curtain rose again there were a number of empty seats. All husband-rebels who object to Ibsen and who had been led to the play by the ear had quietly but resolutely vamooseed.

I think the numerous complaints that got into print admonished Mrs. Fiske of her fault. At any rate, in a later article by her, or an interview, I've forgotten which, she has told how the realization came to her; of her dismay and self-flagellation; of her conviction that it was amazing that the public had stood her so long.

With characteristic energy she started lessons on voice culture and articulation. She gave an hour daily to her task until she felt that she had made herself a mistress of clear, distinct speech. And I noted the gratifying result when she was here in "Miss Nelly of N'Orleans."

Perhaps auditors of "The Skin Game" noticed that the English company did not indulge in any realism in the shape of unintelligible mumblings. A few people were somewhat bothered by their marked English inflections, but judging from their general performance the British play-going public exacts speech sufficiently loud and distinct to be easily understood.

One can not but respect the courage of those sturdy souls who stand up for their rights by calling "Louder!" in the auditorium of a theatre. Certainly it is more complimentary than leaving the place, swearing never to return.

Which, by the way, is what the gallery boys have done. Never more do we hear their piercing whistle from the realms aloft. Since naturalism in its inaudible form reached the stage they have adjourned to the movies.

FRENCH DRAMA IN NEW YORK.

The French, ever since the world war, have departed from their custom of national isolation; toward America, at any rate. Georges Clemenceau is only one of a number of great Frenchmen that have come out to view this curious, hobbledehoy, incredibly prosperous, but still warm-hearted America. Many French scholars have visited our shores, and it may be remembered that during the war a number of officers in the French army, who came out on various missions, made public addresses, when they could speak English, and when they couldn't addressed Franco-Americans, or gatherings of those Americans whose liking for French literature and the French is so great that they had acquired a knowledge of the French tongue.

And now France has given another proof of her regard by sending, through the instrumentality of her minister of fine arts, Cécile Sorel, best liked of the leading ladies at the Comédie Française; Albert Lambert, also a favorite at the Comédie Française, and her most frequent playing partner there, and a general company of adequate if not distinguished ability, to give New York a short season of French drama.

The French have a great reverence for their classics, and are perhaps aware that the general theatre-going public here is more up in them than in their strictly modern pieces.

At any rate Cécile Sorel has been appearing as the heroine of old, well-seasoned, almost retired pieces such as "La Dame aux Camélias" and Molière's "Le Misanthrope." It is true that Molière is never wholly withdrawn from the French stage; one can always see in Paris plays by the hierarchy of the great French playwrights: Molière, Racine, Angier, Sandeau, De Banville, and the like.

There has been some disappointment expressed by the younger generation that this rather notable engagement of the sacrosanct Comédie Française players, who generally remain in Paris enshrined in their niches, should not have offered the opportunity for Americans to see in their own metropolis the kind of drama acted by the kind of player that the France of the immediate present most esteems.

But this was a rare opportunity. It suggests another departure, and perhaps antedates a future engagement in New York of such French companies as Paris sends to London, and playing the best pieces that represent French twentieth-century taste.

For the world war has made changes, and

ALINE BARRETT GREENWOOD

ANNOUNCES

Current Reviews

Colonial Ball Room

ST. FRANCIS HOTEL

Thursday Morning, Dec. 14

11 o'clock

Admittance $1.00 On Sale at Door

Countless checks make for Quality

If there is any secret about the making of a good motor oil, it is the secret of carefulness. The uniformly high quality of Zerolene would be impossible, were it not for a system of scrupulous testing and checking that begins at the well and continues until the finished product leaves the shipping department.

Field chemists test the crude oil as it comes from the well, and forward samples to our research department for analysis. At a dozen points during distillation, treatment, and filtering, samples are taken and tested, so that each stage of the process may be rigidly controlled. Exact standards of cleanliness are maintained in every department.

Finally, the finished oil is subjected to dynamometer and road tests, by which its quality and lubricating efficiency are fully demonstrated before it is offered to the public.

The Result — Purity and Uniformity

Zerolene has always been entirely free from all objectionable impurities and compounds. Hence it does not "break down" under high engine temperatures, but maintains its lubricating body under all operating conditions.

All oils when burned in the combustion chamber produce carbon, but carbon troubles are minimized when Zerolene is used. Very little carbon is deposited, and this is of a soft, flaky nature, so that most of it is blown out with the exhaust.

These essential characteristics of stability, "oiliness" and purity are possessed uniformly. Rigid refinery checks maintain the quality of Zerolene and safeguard the consumer.

Board of Lubrication Engineers
STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(California)

more power & speed ~ less friction and wear ~ thru Correct Lubrication

ESMOND'S

"THE CAKE SHOP"
253 Grant Ave.

Mince Pies made from our own home-made mince-meat. Genuine English Plum Puddings and Fruit Cakes.

"ECCLES CAKES" Our Specialty

AGENTS WANTED.

DEFLEXOGRAPH fits any phonograph. Stops scratch and surface noises. Softens tone. Immense profits. VANTONE CO., Dept. 102, Box 1244, City Hall Station, New York.

among the lesser ones is the decision that France must pry herself loose from the French hearthstone, and come out to America to see the folks.

"BABBITT."

Have you read "Babbitt," Sinclair Lewis' latest? Mr. Lewis has won, with this novel of up-to-date American life, a warm encomium from H. G. Wells, who says right out that he wishes he could write it; although many would be of the opinion that his "Secret Places of the Heart" is a finer work. But then his leading character is much more fascinating than Babbitt.

And truly Mr. Lewis has accomplished a feat well worth the doing. Babbitt—George F. Babbitt—is a typical American man of business. He is standardized. So are his wife, his children, his house, his social customs. All his peers have entirely comfortable and commendably tasteful homes and interiors. But they are all alike. No individualism of taste differentiates these modestly luxurious dwellings because all the good wives have enlisted the advice of art decorators.

I expect to see G. F. Babbitt on the stage some day, although the dramatization of "Main Street" was not a success. But the irritation that "Main Street" inspired in some quarters will probably not be caused by "Babbitt." For this genial, well-meaning, thoroughly moral, self-deceiving, valuable citizen is typical of millions of business men in our various cities. The author has depicted him as being at the dangerous age; which frequently happens when the children have grown into normally selfish adolescents whose parents are merely good providers.

Babbitt—like many, many Babbitts, including the married females of the species, and not excluding the married ones—has a secret dream; an ideal, that Sinclair Lewis calls "the fairy child, a dream more romantic than scarlet pagodas by a silver sea."

Joseph Hergesheimer also had his man of leisure in "Cythera" dream of an ideal woman, but hard-working Babbitt's dream is a more innocent one. It is the dream that begins at the age of sixteen or thereabouts, temporarily retires during the early years of marriage, and reappears when the wife loses her freshness and her coquetry, and appears before her husband—whom she doesn't dream to be a secret idealist—in curl-papers and her third best underwear.

And all the while she is cherishing in her fading bosom a romantic conception of an idealized mate: a loving, admiring, constant and poetically protective being who adores perpetually and is never grouchy.

Strange anomaly! This wistful seeking for what can not be, this perpetual turning away from the prosaic things that are to the beautiful possibilities that might be, but are not.

So G. F. Babbitt begins to feel a yeasty fermentation within his being, and gets into mischief; not very terrible mischief—it is all due to a restless desire to embark upon a "quest for the Golden Girl," as Richard Le Gallienne has put it.

And Mrs. Babbitt, who is the unimaginative, maternal type of wife, gives him his head for awhile; just because she is his mother as well as his wife.

It seems to me that here is an opportunity for—not the, but a—great American play. G. F. Babbitt talks Americanese, the argot in which every third phrase is expressed in slang. He is intrinsically respectable, and if each of his business deals is not irreproachable, the off-white color is just a pale gray.

He is the type that we all recognize and like. He could not be transported to the stage in his entirety, but his essential typicalness, his likeableness, his faults and virtues and foibles, and that queer, shy seeking, seeking for something unattainable—these are things we all recognize.

It is to be hoped that this man who is the essence of the everyday commonplace may receive the right dramatic treatment. There is plenty of opportunity for comedy—pure comedy—in the novel, but back of the comedy a wise, sympathetic, deeply observant dramatist would indicate that yearning for beauty and fineness and even the faintly but clearly felt desire for poetry in the prose of every day that lifts the man—the many men—who feel these things a little way above the dust and ruck of life.

JOSEPHINE HART PHELPS.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE.

The Orpheum Next Week.

By special arrangement the management has secured Adèle Rowland (Mrs. Conway Tearle), New York's popular musical-comedy star, for an engagement of one week.

"Flirtation" is a comedy incident in the lives of a small group of co-eds. A particularly capable company is headed by Jack Debell and Jean Waters, as well as Richard Oswald, and they with three others succeed in making the piece a load of laughter.

Claude and Fannie Usher have a new act. "The Bide-a-Wee Home" the sketch is called. The story is not ordinary and it will never fail to please any audience.

Signor Friscoe is a xylophonist, and the first artist to play four-part harmony on this instrument.

"Bohemia" is the land of art and artists; that is according to the popular theory; and that is the "Bohemia" Alma Neilson attempts to depict in her dance skit of that title. Miss Neilson is a toe dancer.

"Little Billy" is known as "vaudeville's tiniest headliner," and in musical and straight comedy he has done as well as any artist three times his size. Recently he scored an emphatic hit in the Harvard prize play, "Mamma's Affair." He also starred in "Linger Longer Letty."

Les Gellis are Parisian entertainers. Their work consists principally of gymnastics and includes practically every form of athletics. Count Perrone and Trix Oliver, baritone and soprano, with a new programme of selections, remain for a second week.

"The Gold Diggers" Coming.

At the Columbia Theatre, starting Monday evening, December 18th, matinees Wednesday and Saturday, David Belasco will present one of the most successful plays that he has given to the public during his long career as a producing manager. The play is "The Gold Diggers," by Avery Hopwood, which, during its two years' run in New York, was frequently alluded to by the dramatic critics as "the best entertainment of the season." The company, which is headed by Gertrude Vanderbilt, is now on its first transcontinental tour, having appeared, up to the present season, only in New York, Chicago, and Eastern cities.

Mitzi begins her third and final week on next Sunday night. Matinees are given on Wednesday and Saturday. She will not play in Oakland. The second week of "Lady Billy" is drawing persons from many neighboring cities with mail orders for tickets coming from as far away as Bakersfield. As the little star is not playing any other California city the out-of-town visitor who comes here to do his shopping is also making a holiday of the visit by seeing Mitzi.

At the Rivoli.

"Robin Hood" will be the new production of Ferris Hartman and Paul Steindorff at the Rivoli Opera House, starting Monday evening. The piece, by Reginald De Koven and Harry B. Smith, is regarded as a classic of comic opera composition. Nona Campbell will have the solo "Oh Promise Me" in the rôle made famous by Jessie Bartlett Davis of the Bostonians. Ferris Hartman has the part of the scheming and vainglorious sheriff. John Van's rich tenor will have many opportunities, while Robert Carlson will be heard in "The Armorer's Song." George Kunckel will be Friar Tuck.

Features in the production will be the scenery provided by the Tylers, and especially designed costumes, new lighting effects, and the chorus numbers.

CURRAN THEATRE Geary Street Near Mason Phone Prospect 9300

Last Performance, Sunday, Dec. 10th

A Picturization of Charles Major's Story of Love and Romance

"WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER"

Prices for All Performances 50c and $1 (tax extra) Matinees Daily

COLUMBIA THEATRE Landing Playhouse of the West Geary at Mason Phone Franklin 180

Third and Final Week Begins Sun., Dec. 10 Matinees Wednesday and Saturday Henry W. Savage Offers

MITZI

In the Musical Romance "LADY BILLY"

Mon., Dec. 18—David Belasco presents THE GOLD DIGGERS

RIVOLI OPERA HOUSE

Market at Seventh. Phone Market 373

Two weeks starting December 11th

Starting Sunday Matinee, December 24, "The Toymaker."

FERRIS HARTMAN and PAUL STEINDORFF Present the comic opera

"ROBIN HOOD"

Best Seats One Dollar

THE BEST IN VAUDEVILLE
Orpheum
Orpheum Circuit

MATINEES 25 and 50c DAILY
EVENINGS 25c TO $1.25
Except Sats., Suns. and Holidays
ALWAYS A GREAT SHOW
SMOKING PERMITTED IN DRESS CIRCLE AND LOGES

SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ALFRED HERTZ—CONDUCTOR
Second Popular Concert
EXPOSITION AUDITORIUM
Saturday Evening, Dec. 9 at 8:30
WAGNER-TSCHAIKOWSKY PROGRAM
Mme. Johanna Gadski
Prima Donna Soprano
GUEST ARTIST

Reserved seats, $1, 75c, 50c, 25c (no war tax)
Now on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

Direction Auditorium Committee
Board of Supervisors

HOTEL RAFAEL

Special Winter Rates
$1.50 and up per day, without bath,
$10.00 weekly rate. $3.00 and up
per day, with bath, $15.00 weekly
rate. All rooms steam-heated and modern in every respect.

Sunday Dinner $1.50
HOTEL RAFAEL is but 50 minutes
from San Francisco via ferry and train or auto. Delightful, invigorating trip.

W. C. JURGENS SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

A Christmas Present
Not Soon Forgotten

The Argonaut

Makes a gift that greets a friend all through the year, every week bringing a reawakening of esteem for the giver

Readers of The Argonaut can appreciate its value as a gift

Argonaut Publishing Company,
381 Bush Street, San Francisco, Cal.:

Enclosed please find $5.00 for yearly subscription to be sent to.....

"The Missionary"

direct service to

New Orleans

Santa Fe

through
Northern Arizona
New Mexico
and Texas

Standard Sleepers
and Chair Cars
Fred Harvey Meals

Grand Canyon Line

Tickets to and from Europe via all Trans-Atlantic Lines

Ask any Santa Fe Agent

R. D. Johnson, Div. Pass. Agt.
601 Market Street
Phone Sutter 7600
or
Market Street Ferry
Phone Sutter 7600

OAKLAND
434 13th St.
40th St. & San Pablo Ave.
BERKELEY
University Ave. & West St.
SAN JOSE
43 Ryland Block
SACRAMENTO
201 Calif. Fruit Bldg.

VANITY FAIR.

It is difficult to keep anything sacred from the touch of business. Time was when the money-changers thrived in the temple; when, we may suppose, deals were made in Galilee wheat, and charter parties entered into for camel transport through Transjordan. The precincts of certain exclusive clubs today can not be kept exclusively social. This is particularly true of clubs in the Orient where the social life of white men centres, and where convenience dictates that the white man's burden of making all he can out of the yellow or the brown man shall be passed around among all those "on the inside." In Shanghai, or Hongkong, or a dozen other cities of the Far East, in order to meet any particular member of the Caucasian colony it is necessary to go to the club, about noon, or, say, at the gurgle of the early cocktail, just before luncheon. Such places tend to become stock exchanges, as the old Bank Exchange down at Montgomery and Washington served early San Francisco. But if there was one place on earth that might have been considered secure against the encroachments of profit-hoping transactions and the endless pursuit of private advantage, it was the row of parterre boxes of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York; that sacred loop known the world over as the Diamond Horseshoe, from its glittering resemblance to the ornament so often seen modestly nestled in the scarf of the successful plunger. But not even the Diamond Horseshoe is altogether devoted to the great art of Galli Curci, Gatti Casazza, Chaliapin and Joseph Urban. With deep distress we hear that while a matron of social eminence was entertaining a party in her parterre box her husband and another woman's husband, presumably, were closing a partnership in the manufacture of tires. The culprits were detected and severely reprimanded by the hostess. Another case of æsthetic delinquency involved a deal in Mexican Pete, or some similar commodity. Stated thus baldly, one sees the sacrilege in all its heinousness. Hardly less reprehensible are some of the agreements and arrangements for winter diversion. In the brocade ante rooms of the loges many a socially ambitious man has been given his chance to ante for the new country club toboggan slides or the new yacht club's float.

In fact, the parterre row has become, not merely a place of display for the sparkling carbon of Kimberly or Brazil, but even more particularly a place of social negotiation and arrangement of diversions, which, this winter especially, are the subject of an interest to New York society transcending that of Tristan or the most ravishing airs of La Tosca. It may be discouraging to the high-priced song birds that warble from behind the footlights, but the parterre boxes tend more and more to take on the character of a business men's club. It is whispered that even directors' meetings have been held there; to such an extent has the shrine of the most delicate and fleeting of the arts been desecrated by the cloven hoof of the money demon. The question has even arisen whether or not the sacred row is not being Babbitted into a typical Main Street condition. That is something, of course, which time alone can decide. But the point has its interest for those who love to speculate on the power of America to develop a cultural atmosphere such as that supposed to prevail in some of the capitals of Europe. If there is such an atmosphere in the Metropolitan it would seem to be of such extreme rarity as to have mounted like hydrogen to the upper levels of the four-dollar seats, where the common people are carefully fenced off from the lower part of the house, and physically prevented from contaminating the Brahminical occupants of the Horseshoe. The aforesaid occupants are just now devoting themselves with eight-cylinder concentration to those winter diversions of which we spoke above, and the conversation runs on the conditioning of yachts for southern waters and of people for the rigors of winter amid the ice and snow of the North. New York society just now finds it the most important thing to do.

Southern winter yachting grows in favor with the Gotham smart set, and this season it promises to be especially popular. There will be sixty yachts in Florida waters this winter, according to the season's pioneer craft in that region will be Mr. Payne Whitney's Captiva, a newly-designed power houseboat, 130 feet 6 inches long. It has all the room of a houseboat with spacious, well-lighted and well-ventilated rooms, well adapted to warm weather. In place of the round ports of the conventional yacht are square windows, and the rooms are well above the water line. Power yachts of this new design have a cruising speed of about twelve miles an hour. Life on board them is the last word in comfort. They are usually anchored in a harbor until the owner and his guests exhaust the local scene and then move on. Several yachts of this type will be found in Southern waters this midwinter. The Captiva was anchored in Manhasset Bay all last summer except when Mr. and Mrs. Whitney and their guests were making short cruises along the north Atlantic coast. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James, who last winter cruised around the world on board their bark-rigged auxiliary yacht Aloha, will open their house in Cocanut Grove, Florida. They must have a yacht near at hand wherever they are and will use their houseboat, Lanai. The Lanai will be one of the roomiest yachts in Florida waters. She is 75 feet long. Mr. William J. Matheson, who was a member of Mr. and Mrs. James' party on last winter's world cruise, also will join the Cocanut Grove colony, where he has a house. He will have in commission his houseboat, Calabash, very similar to the Lanai, but a few feet shorter.

Mrs. Frederick C. Havemeyer has made her plans to join the colony in Miami and has chartered for the season the new 100-foot power houseboat Ambassadors, already in commission at Miami. Mr. and Mrs. Michael M. Van Beuren will start for their Southern home in Miami at the end of the year. They will have their 107-foot power yacht Hibiscus in commission. They used the yacht in Long Island Sound last summer. Like her late father, John D. Archbold, Mrs. Van Beuren is devoted to yachting. Mr. Horatio Seymour Shonnard will cruise in the South this winter on board his schooner yacht Sonnica. Mr. Louis Gordon Hamersley will have his power yacht Sindbad, Mr. Harry Payne Bingham the Quetta. The society of yachting is as broad as the country that supports the sport and much like the social fellowship of the Florida resorts made up of the society of a hundred cities. Thus cities other than New York will help swell the fleet of privately-owned craft in Southern waters as soon as the frost of the North makes the June-like comfort of the American Riviera the more alluring.

Southern yachting will not absorb all the social energies of New York, however. According to the Herald, Tuxedo and the Berkshires are planning to extend their winter sports, thus keeping up in a more pronounced manner than in the past the sequence of attractions at those all-year-around resorts. From Pittsfield comes the word that the house committee of the Lenox Club, composed of Messrs. Giraud Foster, George E. Turnure, David T. Dana and Frederick S. Delafield, have decided to open the clubhouse during the holidays. Among those who will have house parties will be Mr. and Mrs. William B. Osgood Field, Mrs. Raymond T. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Turnure, Mr. and Mrs. W. Roscoe Bonsal and Mrs. George Winthrop Folsom. Pittsfield, which has an elevation of 1037 feet and an officially recorded snowfall in 1916 of twelve feet, is raising a fund of $50,000 through its Chamber of Commerce to promote winter sports. The park commission has given over the use of the Common and Clapp playground for skating rinks, coasting, and a toboggan slide. Wide areas on Onota and Pontoozuc lakes also are to be kept clear of snow for skating. The county commissioners have bought three snow removal tractors to keep the main highways open to automobile traffic this winter for the first time, so that Pittsfield will be only five hours from New York by limousine in midwinter. Mr. Cortlandt Field Bishop is having an automobile sent over from Paris that will plow through ten-foot snowdrifts and he is planning to make his annual trip to Greylock Summit by automobile on the last day of the year. In prospect is an ice palace in January.

Sanity in Australia.

The Department of Commerce is informed from New South Wales, says the New York Times, that the government's programme is the repeal of old laws which have worked badly. First on the list is the ending of the board of trade's wage-fixing functions, and reducing wages which have been fixed above the capacity of the industry to pay. Next to go is the fair-rents court, which really raised rents. The housing board is to quit, because the houses which it provided can not be let at the rents which the cost of construction makes necessary. For the profiteering law there will be substituted a statute aimed in particular at price-fixing agreements. Finally, the new government proposes to sell the state industries established by the preceding labor government, except only those working for the supply of governmental needs.

"History is bunk," we are told on high industrial authority. More elegantly expressed the idea is that from history we learn that we learn nothing from history. That is particularly true regarding the making of laws. Each era must learn for itself the folly of hasty enactments. One generation has to repeal the laws of its successor.

A Dutch scientist has discovered the existence in the heavens of a body twenty thousand million times larger than the sun. We understand that it is to be allowed to remain there for the time being.—London Passing Show.

This Christmas Give Bonds

Our Gift Bond Service for the Christmas of 1922 has several unique features. They will add pleasure and surprise to the presentation of your gift. Descriptive folder will be sent for the asking [no representative unless requested]

Bradford, Kimball & Co.

Insurance Exchange Building
433 California Street, San Francisco
Telephone Sutter 5200

THE CHARLES NELSON CO.

MANUFACTURER AND WHOLESALE
of
REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR,
SPRUCE, HEMLOCK,
SUGAR & WHITE PINE,
CEDAR SHINGLES & POLES.
230 California St. San Francisco

E. C. EVANS & SONS, Inc.

(Established 1881)

STEAMSHIP AGENTS

SHIP AND INSURANCE BROKERS
260 California Street, San Francisco
Phone Douglas 8040 Cable Address "DEWGRIP"

GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION

Offices at

SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES
Alaska Commercial Bldg. Higgins Bldg.

HAMMOND LUMBER COMPANY

260 CALIFORNIA ST.
REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR
PILING

Press Clippings

Are money-makers for Contractors, Supply Houses, Business Men and Corporations

ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Phone Douglas 5119 121 Second Street

4-Passenger Touring Phaeton

Those who ride in the New Peerless commonly refer to its luxurious ease as unequalled in their previous experience. The front springs are three feet, five inches long, and the rear springs five feet long. The seats are delightfully flexible and buoyant. Moreover, the balance of the New Peerless is practically perfect.

1900 Van Ness Ave.

Phone Prospect 8800

The New
PEERLESS

Residence of Mrs. C. H. McCormick, Lake Forest, Ill.
Perkins, Fellows & Hamilton, Architects

ENGLISH
CASEMENTS
and Windows
for banks, offices, schools,
hospitals, etc

for artistic residences and other substantial buildings

CRITTALL
Steel Casements

Made in varied designs
to meet all conditions

Coast Representatives
J. E. DWAN, Los Angeles F. T. CROWE & CO., Tacoma and Seattle
WATERHOUSE-WILCOX CO., San Francisco J. McCRAKEN, Portland
Crittall Casement Window Co., Detroit, Manufacturers

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

The mistress was interviewing the new charwoman. "Have you been married Susan?" she inquired. "Twicet, mum," Susan told her. "Have you any children?" "Yes, mum. I've three. One by th' third wife uv me second husband, an' two by th' second wife uv me first."

The young wife was complaining to a friend. "My husband is so Puritanical. He doesn't go in for any pleasures, dancing, cards, the theatre—" "Remember, my dear," said her confidant, "you took him for better or for worse." "That's just it," was the reply. "It would be so much better if he were worse."

At the ending of the lesson dwelling on the rôles played by carbohydrates, proteids, and fats in the building up and maintenance of the human body the teacher asked the usual questions. "Can any one tell me the three kinds of food required for a nutritious balance of diet?" "Yes, teacher," piped a confidant one, "yer breakfast, yer dinner, and yer supper."

A woman whose throat had troubled her for a long time grew impatient at the slow progress she was making and complained to her doctor. "Madam," said the physician, "I can never cure you of this throat trouble unless you stop talking and give your throat a rest." "But, doctor," objected his patient, "I'm very careful what I say. I never use harsh language, or anything of that kind."

The newly-engaged Scottish laborer was left to his breakfast and told to help himself to a cheese on the table. Time passed and the farmer impatiently went to the kitchen in search of his new hand. "Sandy," he exclaimed, "you take a long time to breakfast, don't you?" "A weel," replied Sandy, "a cheese o' this size is nae sae soon eaten as ye may think."

Miss Yvonne, a clever English actress, tells a story of an actress friend of hers whose little four-year-old daughter one day inquired of her: "Why do you go to the theatre, mummy?" "Oh, to get bread and butter," she was told. Next day she had tea with the landlady. "So you've been to the theatre, have you?" she inquired in her knowing little way. "No. Why?" asked the woman. "Then how did you get this bread and butter?"

The approach of Christmas brought the usual problem to an Alameda man. What should he give his wife? She had everything he could think of, and there seemed nothing more to bestow. "My dear," he said, "I wish to give you a present to cost about twenty dollars, but I can't think what. Can you?" The lady pondered it seriously, and said: "I am thinking of my roses. I wish you would give me twenty dollars' worth of manure."

When Mike Flannigan, the contractor, got up in the world, his wife and daughters surrounded themselves with many comforts and household conveniences. One Sunday afternoon an old friend visited them and while he was there the maid wheeled into the room a vehicle containing light refreshments. "Phwat's that thing, Mike?" asked the caller. "Why, that's a tay-wagon," replied Flannigan. "A tay-wagon, is it?" rejoined the other. "Sure, I'd call it a pushcart that's broke into sassiety."

Willie had a new puppy and a great opportunity to get home early seemed to present itself when his teacher announced that as soon as the language pupils could hand in their papers showing how they had used the list of words she would write upon the board they might be dismissed. In a remarkably short time Willie was on his way rejoicing and his surprised teacher was reading: "The camel, leopard, elephant, tiger, actor, lady, vicar, teacher, zebra, parrot, soldier, sailor, king and queen all died."

In 1824, after our second affair with the mother country had been settled, Lafayette was here as the guest of the nation. Captain George Hannah, himself a soldier, having commanded a troop of cavalry in that second affair, the war of 1812, often told an amusing incident at one of the public receptions tendered to Lafayette. For every man introduced the marquis had one question: "A married man, sir?" If the reply was in the affirmative, he responded, "Lucky dog, lucky dog." If in the negative, "Happy dog, happy dog." Showing that this Big Brother of America knew how to dispense honors with even-handed justice, as well as wield a trenchant sword.

A lecturer once told a story of an engagement he had made to deliver a discourse in one of the towns of the West on the subject of the "Beacon Lights of Civilization." "I reached the place," he said, "a little behind time and went directly to the hall. A large audience had assembled. I was introduced by the president of the literary society under whose auspices I was to appear, and laying my manuscript on the desk before me I opened it and waited a moment for the applause to subside. Imagine my horror when I found that I had brought along the wrong lecture—one on the "Wonders of Modern Electrical Science." "What did you do?" asked one of the group. "I went right ahead," he replied. "The audience didn't know the difference."

Colonel Langtry, who succeeded Colonel Olin as secretary of state of Massachusetts, was fond of the following explanatory story. A Northerner met a colonel from a Southern state and interestedly asked him if he had served in the war between the states. "No, suh," was the Southron's laconic reply. "Oh, the Spanish war?" "No, suh." "Not the world war, surely?" "No, suh." The Northerner drew breath and cast about. "The National Guard?" "No, suh." "Perhaps you were on the governor's staff?" hopefully suggested the Northerner. "No, suh," was the inevitable response. "I see," said the man from the North. "They call you Colonel because you come from Kentucky." But even this ingenious conjecture was contradicted by the suave habitual reply of the "Colonel." "Then, would you mind telling me the answer?" the interrogator persisted. "Well, suh, I reckon I just inherited that title, so to speak, from my wife's first husband."

When the party of three, which included two college professors, entered the hunting camp in the Maine woods, their attention was attracted to the unusual position of the stove. It was set on posts about four feet high. One of the professors began to comment upon the knowledge woodsmen gain by observation.

"Now," said he, "this man has discovered that the heat radiating from the stove strikes the roof, and the circulation is so quickened that the camp is warmed in much less time than would be required if the stove were in its regular place on the floor." The other professor was of the opinion that the stove was elevated to be above the window in order that cool and pure air could be had at night. The host, being of practical turn, thought that the stove was set high in order that a good supply of green wood could be placed beneath it to dry. After considerable argument they called the guide and asked why the stove was in such a position. "Well," said he, "when I brought the stove up the river I lost most of the stovepipe overboard, and we had to set the stove up there so as to have the pipe reach through the roof."

A weather-wise old gentleman quoted by the London Morning Post says: "In my hallstand the two chief things are a cherry-wood stick and an umbrella. Every morning when leaving home I put my hand on the cherry stick. If it's dry I take it with me. If it's cold and damp I take the umbrella." And the test is always reliable.

THE MERRY MUSE.

Musical Tragedy.

An oboe met a tall bassoon
In some band-concert opportune.
Her mood was merry and elate,
While he was solemn and sedate.
She frolicked near the higher C
But he was pitched in lower key.
So while she trilled "Tra la la lu"
He mumbled deeply—"VERY TRUE."

The oboe and the tall bassoon
Strolled side by side beneath the moon,
And all her airy thoughts found vent
To his profound accompaniment.
Yet with a tribute in her eyes
She waited for his deep replies:—
How very much a man must know
Who only says, "AHEM—QUITE SO."

She little knew, beneath the moon,
The state of mind of this bassoon—
In what a yearning, groping way
He sought for something else to say.
For in his soul he wished that he Could sing "Tra la" and "Tu ra le."
Yet still he growled, the evening through,
"QUITE SO." "INDEED," and "VERY TRUE."
—B. J. in Life.

ORNAMENTALS, FRUIT TREES, VINES AND FIELD GROWN ROSES

Open Daily and Sunday to visitors and purchasers

GEO. C. ROEDING, Pres.

California Nursery Company

(Founded in 1865 by John Rock)

NILES, CALIFORNIA

The MOTOR OIL FREE FROM DESTRUCTIVE "SULPHO" COMPOUNDS

Produced Under the new HEXEON Process

ADDING A NEW CHAPTER TO THE BOOK OF ACHIEVEMENT

How We Overcame the cause of motor oils breaking down rapidly under engine heat

DESTRUCTIVE "Sulpho" compounds are the cause of motor oils breaking down rapidly under engine heat. An enormous amount of money is annually lost through the presence of these unnecessary properties in oils.

Cycol will save engine owners this tremendous amount of money lost through wasted oil, wasted fuel, preventable repairs, because it is free from destructive "sulpho" compounds. These have been removed by the new Hexeon Process used exclusively by us.

When your oil contains destructive "sulpho" compounds it breaks down rapidly under engine heat. Its lubricating value becomes quickly impaired. The oil film is broken and serious damage may result.

Have your crank case thoroughly flushed—not with kerosene. Use the correct grade of Cycol as shown on the Cycol Recommendation Chart. Use Associated Gasoline. Then notice the improved performance of your motor.

ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY
SAN FRANCISCO

CYCOL

MOTOR OIL

FREE FROM DESTRUCTIVE "SULPHO" COMPOUNDS

PERSONAL.

Social Notes.

The engagement is announced of Miss Hazel King, daughter of Mrs. Homer S. King, to Mr. John Bakewell, Jr., son of the Rev. John Bakewell of Oakland.

The marriage of Miss Alice Morse, daughter of Mrs. John Frederick Morse, and Mr. Joseph Brent Banning of Los Angeles took place on Tuesday, November 28th. The ceremony was performed at 9 o'clock in the presence of relatives and intimate friends. Mrs. Francis Porter Graves attended Miss Morse as matron of honor and Miss William Regensberger as maid of honor. Mr. William Phineas Banning attended his brother as best man. Dean Wilmer Gresham officiated at the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Banning are in the ceremony on their wedding tour. On their return Honolulu will make their home in Los Angeles.

The marriage of Miss Viola Buck, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Buck, and Mr. Harry Earl Wright was solemnized last Tuesday evening, November 28th, at the family home in Gough Street. The Rev. Weis officiated at the ceremony. Mrs. Otto Jungblut, matron of honor, Miss Barbara Payne, maid of honor, Miss Kathleen Costello, Miss Marie Costello, Miss Virginia Powell and Miss Margaret Kelly, bridesmaids, attended Miss Buck. Mr. William Wright supported his brother as best man. Mr. Walter McGowan, Mr. Otto Jungblut, Mr. Benjamin Blue, Mr. Ralph Anderson, Dr. Clayton Wheeler and Dr. Timothy Shea were the ushers. Following the ceremony there was a reception attended by about a hundred guests. On their return from their wedding tour Mr. and Mrs. Wright will make their home in San Francisco.

Miss Lillian Neubauer and Mr. Robert Steinberger were married on Sunday evening at the Palace Hotel, Rabbi Meyer reading the service in the presence of three hundred relatives and friends. Mr. J. H. Neubauer gave his daughter in marriage. Mrs. Max Lillenthal was the matron of honor for Miss Neubauer, Miss Helen Neubauer, Miss Claire Stringer, Miss Edith Fullerton and Miss Emily Greenbaum acting as bridesmaids. Mr. and Mrs. Steinberger have gone to New York to sail for Paris, where they will spend several months.

A large wedding on Wednesday at St. Mary's Cathedral was that of Miss Josephine Tynan and Mr. James Tattersall of Philadelphia. The ceremony was performed by Archbishop Hanna and Father Charles Cantwell. The bride is the daughter of Mr. Joseph Tynan and the late Mrs. Tynan, and was given in marriage by her father. Miss Margot Tynan served as maid of honor for her sister, while Mrs. James Talbot, Mrs. James Schlesinger, Miss Helen Hammersmith, Miss Doris Peshon and Miss Marjory Costello attended the bride. Mr. Byron Haveside acted as best man, Mr. Henry Howard Shields, Mr. Joseph Tynan, Jr., Mr. Edward Sowers, Mr. Merrill Morshead and Mr. Richard Eisert ushering. At the close of the service more than two hundred guests greeted Mr. and Mrs. Tattersall at the Tynan home, the bridal couple leaving later in the evening on a motor trip to Southern California.

The marriage of Miss Camille Loyall Ashe and Senator Walter E. Edge of New Jersey takes place on December 9th at the home of Miss Ashe's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Sewall of Bath, Maine. The marriage is of interest in San Francisco, as Miss Ashe is a niece of Miss Elizabeth Ashe and of Mrs. Norman McLaren, and a cousin of Miss Camille Loyall. Miss Camille Ashe made her debut in Washington last winter, and as the wife of Senator Edge will be the youngest senatorial hostess in Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Brent Banning were the complimented guests at a dinner party given by Captain William Banning, uncle of Mr. Banning. The wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Banning (Miss Alice Morse) was an event of the preceding day and the guests bidden by Captain Banning to meet there were visitors from Southern California, relatives or connections of the Banning family. They included Mrs. John Frederick Morse, mother of Mrs. Banning, Mrs. Joseph Brent Banning, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Porter Graves, Mr. and Mrs. William Banning, Mrs. George S. Patton, Miss May Banning, Miss Annie Wilson, Miss Anne Patton and Mr. Joseph Brent Banning.

Mrs. William Hendrickson, Jr., entertained at tea at her home on Russian Hill on Monday afternoon of last week, the affair being the first large affair since her recent marriage. Assisting Mrs. Hendrickson in receiving her guests were her mother, Mrs. Seward B. McNear, Mrs. Frederick Hope Beaver, Mrs. James Moffitt, Miss Alice Requa, Miss Mary Emma Flood and Miss Aileen McIntosh.

Miss Anne Pentz was hostess at her San Rafael home last Saturday evening in honor of her two nieces, Miss Deborah Pentz and Miss Edith Pentz, entertaining their friends at dinner. Miss Charlotte Ziel, Miss Elizabeth Harrison, Miss Barbara Beardsley, Miss Helen Sturdivant, Mr. Dudley Gunn, Mr. Addison Keeler, Mr. Bert Innes and Mr. Harold Williams were Miss Pentz' guests.

For Miss Elizabeth Huff and her house guest, Miss Mary Lewis, General and Mrs. Charles G. Morton gave a dance at their Fort Mason home on Wednesday evening. The guest list included the debutantes of the season, a number of the younger married set from town as well as army people—in all about one hundred and fifty guests.

Mrs. William Griffith Henshaw has sent out cards for a bridge-luncheon on the afternoon of December 14th at the Hotel Oakland. The affair is to include a large number of guests from San Francisco and the east side of the Bay.

Complimenting Miss Agnes Harrison, whose engagement to Mr. Harold Vander Leck of Los Angeles, was announced some time ago, Miss Ruth Davis entertained during the week at a bridge-tea.

Included in Miss Davis' hospitality were Miss Mary Boardman, Mrs. Stanley Morrison, Mrs. Wilson Meyer, Miss Marjorie Lovegrove, Miss Mary Harrison, Miss Newell Bull, Miss Marie Louise Meyer, Miss Frances Johnson, Miss Mary McCone and Mrs. Bertram Flahaven.

Miss Jennie Blair recently entertained at a dinner at the Hotel St. Francis in honor of Miss Frances Lent and her fiancé, Mr. Hugh Porter. Asked to meet her guests of honor were Miss Hélène de Latour, Miss Lillian Hopkins, Miss Geraldine Grace, Miss Eleanor MacGowan of Los Angeles, Mr. Gerald Hermann, Mr. Pierre Omart, Mr. Edward Pond, Mr. Louis Garat and Mr. George Hotaling.

Mrs. Louis F. Monteagle entertained at luncheon in honor of the debutantes of the winter at her home on Pacific Avenue last Tuesday. Accepting Mrs. Monteagle's hospitality were Miss Frances Ames, Miss Josephine Drown, Miss Adrienne Sharp, Miss Isabella Sherman, Miss Camille Loyall, Miss Elizabeth Huff, Miss Josephine Drown, Miss Alice Moffitt, Miss Francesca Deering, Miss Jean Howard and Miss Mary Edie.

At Del Monte.

An added feature at Del Monte for the Christmas holidays will be an exhibition golf match on Sunday, December 24th, with Walter Hagen, British open champion, and Joe Kirkwood, an Australian star, playing Mortie Dutra and Peter Hay, the Del Monte professionals. This match will take place with a morning round at the Pebble Beach course and an afternoon round at Del Monte. In addition there will be the usual old-fashioned Christmas ceremonies with the appearance of Santa Claus on Christmas morning and with the singing of Christmas carols.

Thanksgiving proved gay and interesting at Del Monte. A number of dinner parties were staged, and delightful, sunny weather added to the pleasure of the out-of-door diversions. The principal attraction was two polo matches, in which the Del Monte Juniors, composed of Harry Hunt, Dick Schwerin, Eric Pedley and Willie Crocker played against a picked team, composed of Major C. P. Chandler, Captain C. A. Wilkinson, Hugh Drury and S. F. B. Morse. The appearance of Willie Hunter, former amateur champion of Great Britain, and John F. Neville, California amateur champion, on the links also occasioned much interest.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel F. B. Morse gave a dinner at the Del Monte Lodge, having as their guests Mr. and Mrs. Byington Ford, Mr. and Mrs. Francis McComas, Mrs. Jane Selby Hayne, Mrs. Felton Elkins, Tiley L. Ford, Sr., and Tiley L. Ford, Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Rittenhouse entertained Sunday evening at their beautiful Pebble Beach home on the world-famous Seventeen Mile Drive. Among the guests were Sir Frank and Lady Bernard, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Daniels, Mr. and Mrs. Francis McComas, Mrs. Felton Elkins, Mrs. L. A. Nares, Mrs. Alejandra Kaime and Eric Pedley.

Mr. William W. Crocker entertained as house guests at his Pebble Beach villa Mr. and Mrs. William Gregory Parrott, Miss Ruth Hobart and Richard Schwerin, giving several interesting parties over the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence McCreery are being congratulated on the arrival of a son, born to them December 1st. The newcomer is the second child, the first being a little girl. Mrs. McCreery was Miss Arabella Schwerin before her marriage in 1920.

THE HILLCREST

American and European Plan
CALIFORNIA AND JONES STS.
Phone Franklin 3240

DEL MONTE

The Largest Resort Hotel Plant in the World
Where "Thinking People" can find Recreation
in Hotel Del Monte's Comfort, Service and Outdoor Life. "Here every sportsman can find his chosen recreation."

TWO CHAMPIONSHIP GOLF COURSES
CARL S. STANLEY, Manager
DEL MONTE : : CALIFORNIA

San Ysidro Ranch

Furnished bungalows of various sizes;
situated on the foothills among the orange groves, overlooking the sea. Central dining-room, electric lights, hot and cold water. Good tennis court. Six miles from
Santa Barbara, two miles from ocean.
Booklet. Address MANAGER

San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara

Clark's Leadership

WE are Cruise Specialists who alone
possess actual experience in cruising
Round the World and have successfully managed Eighteen Mediterranean
Cruises during 28 years in business.
Reasonable rates for superior inclusive
arrangements over itineraries of much charm in great steamers offering luxurious comfort. Secure our rate sheets for comparisons.

3rd Cruise
Around the World

S. S. "Empress of France," Jan. 22d
Four months travel, first class, $1000 upward
(vacancies from $1500).

19th Cruise
to the Mediterranean

S. S. "Empress of Scotland," Feb. 3rd
65 wonderful days, first class, $600 upward
(vacancies from $900).

With Both Cruises

Rates include hotels, guides, drives, fees;
stop-over privilege in Europe.
Shore excursions at all points.
Complete program and rates of the Cruise
that interests you; free upon request.

FRANK C. CLARK

Times Building New York
M. T. WRIGHT, Agent
American National Bank Building
485 California Street San Francisco

American Beauty Roses
For the Debutante.

JOSEPH'S
FLORISTS

Phone Sutter 423 233 Grant Ave.

7 TRAINS DAILY to LOS ANGELES

| Leave San Francisco                              | Arrive Los Angeles |
|--|--------------------|
| 8:00 A. M. Shore Line Limited (Thrd St. Station) | 10:30 P. M.        |
| 10:40 A. M. Los Angeles Express (Ferry Station)  | 7:40 A. M.         |
| 4:00 P. M. Tehachapi (Ferry Station)             | 9:40 A. M.         |
| 5:00 P. M. Sunset Limited (Thrd St. Station)     | 7:45 A. M.         |
| 6:00 P. M. Owl (Ferry Station)                   | 8:50 A. M.         |
| 8:00 P. M. Lark (Thrd St. Station)               | 9:30 A. M.         |
| 9:15 P. M. Sunset Express (Thrd St. Station)     | 12:10 P. M.        |

Our Agents will gladly furnish further information.
50 Post Street.

Ferry Station
SOUTHERN PACIFIC
Third St. Station

"Travel Without Trouble"

COOK'S TRAVEL SERVICE

World wide—Complete—Efficient

Inclusive Tours for Individual Travel
arranged, to start any day by
any route.

Explanatory circular on request

THOS. COOK & SON
(Est. 1841)

Agents for the best lines for travel by
Land, Water or Air

128 SUTTER STREET
(COOK'S BUILDING) Phone Keagy 3512

SERVICE

To Sacramento

Observation Cars.

Dining Car Service on Meteor
leaving 4:40 P.M. through to Chico.

We Carry Baggage

SACRAMENTO SHORT LINE

Would you visit:

SPAIN, PORTUGAL, MOROCCO, ALGERIA,
ITALY, GREECE, CONSTANTINOPLE, PALESTINE,
EGYPT, The Islands of the Mid-Atlantic, and have a look about London?

Long-to-be-remembered trips in all these fascinating lands fill the 66 days Luxury Cruise of the American Express Co. on the Mauretania

to the Mediterranean

from New York February 7th, 1923

The luxurious MAURETANIA your home for the entire trip

For full details and prices call, phone or write

AMERICAN EXPRESS
Travel Department

Market St. at 2d, Kearny 3100, or at the
Emporium, Market St. near 4th, Douglas 1

STRINGER STORAGE
COMPANY

Sutter near Fillmore
and
Steiner near Sutter

Conducting a Storage
Business Founded
in 1880

Storage---Shipping
Expert Packing, Protection
and Dispatch

A fully informed representative, anxious to give you any desired information, will respond to your phone call.

Phone West 999

PERSONAL.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Mr. and Mrs. George Wigmore of Los Angeles and their daughter, Miss Katherine Wigmore, are in San Francisco for a short time.

Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Brown returned on Thursday from an extended Eastern trip, and are established in their apartment at the Fairmont Hotel.

Mrs. A. B. Hammond and her daughter, Mrs. Frank B. King, have gone to New York to be away for a few weeks.

Mrs. Charles Templeton Crocker returned home on Wednesday from a stay of several weeks in New York.

Mrs. Conrad Paters left for New York on Wednesday en route to her home in Paris.

Mr. William Cluff has gone to Sulphur Springs, Virginia, to pass several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. James Tattersall are on their way to New York to be away a month or so.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tynan (Miss Ruth Williams) have gone to New York to be away for several weeks during the midwinter.

Miss Sara Cunningham and her sister, Mrs. Murray Sargent, arrived in California during the week and are at the Cunningham home in Menlo Park.

Miss Jane Vail of Santa Barbara is spending a few days with Mrs. Edward Pringle and her daughter, Miss Frances Pringle.

Mr. and Mrs. Fentress Hill and their two children will spend the winter with Mrs. Hill's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Mayo Newhall, at their Green Street home.

General and Mrs. Hunter Liggett sailed on Saturday for Honolulu to be away a month or so.

Miss Eleanor Worthington of Los Angeles is visiting in San Francisco, and is the guest of Miss Edith Dohrmann at her Jackson Street home.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Bird of London and Mrs. Stanley Stillman left during the week for a fortnight's motor trip to the Yosemite.

Miss Margaret Scheld, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Scheld of Sacramento, is passing a fortnight in town as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Van Sicklen.

Senator and Mrs. Hiram Johnson left on Saturday for Washington, D. C., after several weeks spent at their home on Russian Hill.

Miss Maria Anderson of Los Angeles is the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. William Klink.

Mrs. Elyse Schultz Hopkins, her small son, and her mother, Mrs. G. A. Schultz, left for New York on Friday. They expect to be in New York for several weeks, planning to go to Palm Beach in January.

Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Politzer are spending a few days in the south.

General and Mrs. Charles G. Morton, their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Huff, and her house guest, Miss Mary Lewis of Pittsburg, left last Friday for Carmel to spend several days at the Highlands.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Carolan are established for the winter in Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hoover are home for the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Mark McDonald have closed their Sonoma County country home and have taken an apartment in San Francisco for the remainder of the winter.

Miss Cora Jane Flood and Miss Sallie Maynard are spending a few weeks in Santa Barbara.

Mr. Robert L. Coleman, his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Coleman, Jr., sailed on Thursday for Honolulu to be away a month or six weeks.

Mrs. Charmian London expects to leave soon for an extended trip to Europe, with London as her objective.

Mrs. James Leonard is passing a few days in San Francisco, on her way to her home in Virginia City. She is the guest of her cousin, Mrs. Alexander Lilley.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. Grace and their daughter, Miss Geraldine Grace, are planning a trip to the Orient and will leave soon after the holidays.

Mrs. Anne Waters Stimson of Los Angeles, who has been visiting in San Francisco for some time, left the end of the week for her home in the south.

Miss Marion Fitzhugh left last Friday for New York to attend the first annual meeting of the Anne Morgan workers.

Mrs. Miller Graham of Santa Barbara has leased her home to former Senator William Clark of New York and Butte, Montana, who will take possession of it in the spring.

At the Palace.

Dr. David Bergstrom and Mme. Bergstrom arrived at the Palace Hotel early in the week, en route from the Orient to their home in Stockholm, Sweden. Dr. Bergstrom is the Swedish Ambassador to China. Other Palace guests include Prince Sasha of Thurn and Taxis, registering from Czechoslovakia; Mr. and Mrs. William Van Dyke and daughter, Honolulu; Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Bourne, Manila; Dr. Galen D. Litchfield, Hankow, China; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Shackleford, returning from China to their home in New York City, and Mr. S. Lea Smith, London.

At the St. Francis.

The Garden and Fable Room of the Hotel St. Francis were gay with many small parties on Monday. Mrs. George Cameron was there with her sister, Mrs. Joseph O. Tobin, who has just returned from Europe. One of the groups included Miss Frances Ames, Miss Josephine Drown, and Miss Marjorie Josselyn.

Miss Helen Garrett, Mrs. Nion Tucker, and Mrs. Stewart S. Lowery were at one of the tables. Mrs. William Sproule and Mrs. Arthur Sharp were with a small group. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Foster Dutton, who have taken apartments at the Hotel St. Francis for the winter, had Mrs. Frederick McNear with them. Mrs. Walter Martin and Mrs. Preston Drown were together, and other small parties included Mrs. George Newhall, Mrs. Walter Filer, Mrs. Gerald Rathbone, Mrs. W. S. Porter, Miss Jennie Hooker and Mrs. Harry H. Scott.

Mr. Henry T. Scott was host at a luncheon in the Hotel St. Francis on Monday, honoring Mr. J. Sloat Fassett of Elmira, New York, former United States congressman. The guests included Mr. John Drum, Mr. Joseph Redding, Mr. J. D. Grant, Mr. F. B. Anderson, Mr. William H. Crocker, Mr. R. B. Hale, Mr. Samuel Knight, Mr. C. E. Green, Mr. R. W. Hopkins and Judge William C. Van Fleet.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Schwab entertained at a dinner party in the St. Francis on Saturday evening in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tynan, who were married a few days ago. The party included Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tynan, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Christy, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Kirchen, Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Foster, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Green, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Gunn, Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Ward and Mr. R. B. Hill.

Wool Crepes.

Steady rise of consumer interest in wool crepes is reported here by both exclusive dressmaking supply houses and dress goods buyers of department stores, says the New York Times. With the former there is a marked tendency to place a fine grade of wool canton at the top of the list of the draping woollens that are in demand for fall and winter frocks. These fabrics are shown in several weights, the heaviest having elaborate embellishments of wool embroidery. Executed by hand, these decorations are in two or three shades of one color in the "tone on tone" effect now in vogue.

A firm, close weave of greater weight than has heretofore been favored in this country is sent over by Rodier as one of his Balkan stripe Crepelia features. This follows the Moroccan movement in the weave, with broken stripes of fine scarlet, peacock green, and gold paralleling each other on a black ground at intervals of two inches. This novelty, being of heavier weight than crepes of domestic production, is said to suggest possibilities for spring wraps and suits.

The dress goods buyer of a leading department store, who has for some time regarded wool crepe both in its Canton and Moroccan versions as affording possibilities for fall, said yesterday that a certain firm quality of wool crepe, thirty-eight inches in width and sold at $2 a yard, was among the best selling fabrics of his department during September, following extremely good sales in August. The colors in the strongest demand in their order are beige, cocoa, seal brown, rust, burgundy, jade, and navy.

According to the Department of Agriculture, flock masters have found that heavy feeding of ewes increases the tendency to twin lambing.

JOHN McCALLAN

Notary Public and U. S. Customs Notary
34 MONTGOMERY STREET
Near Sutter—Phone Sutter 6195
Residence, Sutter Hotel, corner Kearny and Sutter Streets
Phone—Sutter 3060

BRIDGE INSTRUCTION

For appointment and terms phone

WHITCOMB HOTEL or ELISE M. SEARS
Market 510 Sutter, 2760

California School of LIP-READING

FOR THE HARD OF HEARING
MISS KENFIELD, MRS. POINDEXTER
Co-Principals
Demonstration classes Tuesday, 7:45 p. m.
Friday, 10:30 a. m. Representing Nitchie School of New York. Awarding Nitchie Normal Diploma.
916 Shreve Bldg. Ph. Kearny 1666
Berkeley Branch—107 Wright Building

THE SANTA BARBARA GIRLS' SCHOOL

Resident and Day Pupils. Eleven acres. Country Life and Sports. Sleeping-porches. Open-air school rooms. Riding. Swimming all the year round. Basis of work, clear thinking.
MARIAN L. CHAMBERLAIN, A. M., Principal
P.O. Box 548, SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

FERNAC SCHOOL OF LANGUAGES

Class or Private Instructions
Prepares for All Colleges
Kohler & Chase Bldg. 26 O'Farrell St.
Phone Douglas 6732

MOST BEAUTIFUL

Rota-Gravure
Section

in the world

Published Each Sunday

by the

San Francisco Chronicle

ONLY

$5.20

a

Year

Including Every Sunday Feature
of the CHRONICLE

John Breunel & Co.
of San Francisco

281 Geary St., nr. Powell

Oriental Rugs

—Possibly, there's no more charming gift and nothing so seldom thought of than a genuine hand-woven Oriental rug.

—At this time we have a very choice selection—particularly in the smaller sizes so suitable for gift-giving. Each piece has been individually selected and not purchased unseen in bale lots. All have been conservatively priced to correspond with their real worth.

The GREATEST SHOW in TOWN
Gorham's
Follies
New Numbers
Every Night

Undoubtedly the finest hotel performance ever presented. A bevy of really beautiful girls appearing in twenty sparkling numbers—musical and dancing. Each evening's performance continues with intermissions but without repetition from seven to one. Dancing between numbers.

Special dinner in the Palm Court every evening except Sunday $4.00, including cover charge. Also a la carte. Cover charge after 9 P. M. $1.50.

PALACE HOTEL

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

Colored Officer—Eyes right! Black Private—You am, like hell.—Penn State Froth.

Teacher—Where were you born? Little Girl—I wasn't born at all; have a stepmother.—Life.

"Did you break this dish, Norah?" "No, mum, I only dropped it."—Boston Evening Transcript.

Every man is his own ancestor and his own heir; he devises his own future and inherits his own past.—Boston Evening Transcript.

Salesman—I'm selling quite a lot of these ties this year, sir. Brummel—Really! Dashed clever of you, I'm sure!—London Opinion.

Small Winifred (seeing the row of tellers and cashiers behind their barred windows)—An' what do they feed' em, mother?—Judge.

"What makes you think his love is waning?" "After he'd said good-night for the last time, he didn't come back to kiss me."—Cornell Widow.

"October," says a press humorist, "is summer's colored supplement." Then November must be its Congressional Record.—Boston Transcript.

Army Dentist—My man, you don't have to pay for work in the army. Buck—Aw, I aint gonna pay; I'm just countin' my money before I take gas.—Judge.

"A motor truck smashed the baby carriage to smithereens, mum." "Horrors! Was the baby hurt?" "You're mighty lucky, mum. He was kidnapped only five minutes before."—Life.

"I know something I won't tell," sang a little girl, as little girls do. "Never mind, child," said the old bachelor. "You'll get over that when you're a little older."—Topeka Capital.

"How do you like your new chief, Mollie?" "Not so bad, only he's so bigoted." "How d'you mean, bigoted?" "He seems to think that words can only be spelled his way."—London Opinion.

Doctor—Yes, I think she will be all right now with these glasses. Mother—I should hope so. They cost me 17 shillings, and she's the only one in the family as can see through 'em.—Punch.

Bannon—So you bought an expensive and complicated radio outfit? Audio-frequency amplification, super-regeneration, and all that sort of thing. Shannon—Yes; and then I saw those pictures of schoolboy amateurs in the radio magazines, and now I feel as if I had stolen a baby's rattle.—Judge.

The Student—Say, Myrtle, this Honor System is sure some stunt. Yesterday the Prof. calls my roommate up to the desk an' says, "Look here, Mr. Dummer, what authority was you quoting? Almost every sentence in your paper is enclosed in quotation marks." An'

Coldwell Mowers

(HAND, HORSE and POWER)

Good
Lawns
Demand
Them

H. V. Carter Motor Co.
52 Beale St. San Francisco

KING COAL

High in Heat Units
Low in Ash

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS
IN CALIFORNIA

KING COAL CO.
Main Office
EXCHANGE BLOCK
San Francisco
Wholesale Only

Bill says back: "Between you an' me, Prof, I was quotin' the fellow next to me."—Yale Record.

Mrs. McTavish—What's "Metapheesics," guid man? Mr. McTavish—Weel, when the pairty wha listens disna ken what the pairty wha's speakin' means, an' when the pairty wha's speakin' disna ken what he's blethering about himself, that's metapheesics.—Punch.

THE ROSE OF ENGLAND.

That the rose is the national flower of England and was accepted as such at the conclusion of the war of the roses, when the red rose of Lancaster and the white rose of York were united by the marriage of the representatives of the two warring houses, most readers of history know, says the Washington Sunday Star. How this flower came to be the badge of either house, not many people even guess. The few students who suppose they know its history say that the white rose came to the house of York through the family of Clifford, whose device it had long been and beyond whom it can not be traced. The red rose, it is supposed, dates back to Eleanor of Provence, queen of Henry III, and was her personal device, assumed for love of the beautiful Provence roses of her native duchy and transmitted to her descendants of Lancaster.

But of late years devoted students of historic traditions have brought to light a new and picturesque origin of the national flower of England. The story was obtained in a chateau of the little town of Provins, France. According to it, the red rose of England was never a Provence rose, but instead was a rose of Provins.

Now, the chateau of Provins belonged centuries ago to the counts of Champagne, and in the time of the fourth crusade one of these counts, called Thibaut the Troubadour, became a crusader and visited the Holy Land.

On his return he brought to his wife a rose bush with a splendid crimson flower—the rose of Sharon—and this was planted in the castle garden, where it grew and flourished.

Soon it spread to the neighboring gardens and the town became famous for roses. Wreaths for the great church festivals were made from these roses from the Holy Land; they were used to grace all gala occasions, and the good French housewives even turned them to more practical account. They made such an appetizing delicacy from rose leaves put up with sugar or syrup that its fame spread far beyond the immediate neighborhood, and it commanded a ready sale throughout the entire region under the name of conserves de roses de Provins.

A generation later the prosperity of the town received a sad shock and the preserving industry no doubt suffered with the other industries of the citizens.

Provins had a mayor of such oppressive views on the labor question that he ventured to ring the great curfew bell, which ended the working day, an hour later than had been customary.

This the work people would not endure. They mobbed the unpopular magistrate and killed him in his own house. They did not stop to consider the possible consequences of such an act. The line of the counts of Champagne had become extinct, but Blanche, the widow of the last one, had married Edmund Crouchback, first Earl of Lancaster, who promptly undertook to punish the unruly inhabitants.

He made such a havoc that the town never recovered from it, and had even to submit to having a new bell made and named Guillette, in honor of the murdered mayor,

TO LEASE

Entire Top Floor
IN
Wells Fargo Building
Second and Mission Streets
(Will Sub-Divide to Suit)

consisting of about 12,000 square feet; unlimited light, surrounded 4 streets. Janitor service and all modern conveniences. Will construct partitions or remodel to suit. Rent only 15 cents per square foot.

Apply Your Own Agent or
Express Building Co.
Care of E. TROPP, Owner,
Kearny 316 129 Sutter St.

To Exchange

1100 acres stock ranch; 300 acres level alfalfa land; riparian water rights; next to immense forest reserve. What have you? Price, $30,000. Mortgage $10,000, can clear. Owner, Box B. The Argonaut.

you have any favor to extend your loved ones none would be more appreciated than placing your valuable papers, etc., in a Safe Deposit Box, where after your death your heirs may get same without any trouble.

Boxes $4.00 a Year

Crocker Safe Deposit Vaults

Crocker Building

Post and Market Sts.

Guillaume. This bell, after six centuries, still rings the curfew in Provins every night. When Edmund went back to England, leaving misery, poverty, and terrified quiet behind him, he carried home two relics. One was the yard measure, which for many years was in France peculiar to Provins; the other was the crimson rose, which through him became the rose of Lancaster.

The heraldic rose of England is still of blended red and white, significant of the union of the two great houses; but as Lancaster was victorious in battle, so also is the red rose the victor in popular favor, and it is of that, not of the stiff parti-colored rosette of the British coat-of-arms, that one thinks as the emblem and flower of that nation.

The old French crusader's holy rose—the rose of Sharon, the rose of Provins—became the rose of England.

Lincolniads.

In examining more than 14,000 books and documents about Abraham Lincoln the researchers for the Rockett-Lincoln Film Company have amassed almost countless odds and ends of facts—little things—that go to make up the sum total of Lincolniads, says the Washington Star. Do you know these?

He had a good singing voice and loved to sing as he drove through the country—a habit of the pioneers.

He loved animals and birds, but did not care particularly for flowers. He said he had had no time to study them.

The first and only steamboat that ever navigated the Sangamon River was piloted by Lincoln.

Abraham Lincoln was of Quaker stock and proud of it.

During his residence in Indiana he borrowed and read every book within a radius of fifty miles of his home.

He stood 6 feet 4 with his boots and could lift a thousand pounds.

His chief recreation after he became President was to read the books of American humorists and Shakespeare. These were his safety valves.

The boy Lincoln's first job was to tote corn to Hodgen's mill, near his boyhood home in Kentucky. Later he was a mill hand in Cameron & Offut's mill at New Salem, Illinois.

At fifty-two he became President.

At twenty-six young Lincoln was saddled with a debt of $1100 that he did not really owe and was not morally bound to pay, but he did pay in full with high interest after a struggle of many years. He told Leonard Swett that this debt was the greatest obstacle of his life.

As a boy, youth, and man, Lincoln was a favorite with women. They all liked him—old and young. He had three "love affairs," and there was never a tenderer lover, more devoted husband, nor a more patient and loving daddy.

As war President he had an uncanny insight into military affairs and would doubtless have been as great a commander as statesman.

A car has been designed for distributing stone dust in coal mines to prevent explosions, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. Much coal dust lodges on the "ribs" of coal-mine tunnels and in crannies of the rough-hewn walls. Currents of air created by trains of coal-cars passing through, or by other means, constantly blow it about. When the coal dust is mixed with air it becomes a dangerous explosive. Accordingly, resort is had to the expedient of blowing stone-dust over the walls and ribs of the tunnels. The same air-currents that scatter the coal dust distribute with it the stone dust, which, mixed with the coal dust, renders the latter non-inflammable. A conical receptacle is filled with stone dust, which is discharged through a hose, a gasoline engine actuating an air-blast that drives it out in a dense and powerful stream.

The Catacombs of Cypress Lawn

Comparable with the luxurious tombs of ancient Egyptian kings, yet within the means of people of moderate circumstances.

A stone edifice, highly artistic in appearance, containing a magnificent chapel. Eleven Tomb Rooms, 425 Crypts.

Cypress Lawn Cemetery
Association

Phone Douglas 4772P

995 Market St.

FOR A
CLEAR COMPLEXION
and a HEALTHY COLOR
eat
FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST
Three Cakes a Day

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXXXI. No. 2386.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 16, 1922.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE: The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $5.00 per year; six months, $2.55; three months, $1.50, payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $6.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, Alto Building, 381 Bush Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco Postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., Breems Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue; and at Daws Steamship Agency, 17 Green Street, Leicester Square, and can be ordered from any of the news-stands of W. H. Smith & Son. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-Fourth Street. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at Adams' News Agency, Ninth and G Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & Orear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Van Noy-Interstate Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Telephone, Sutter 6373. Publication office, 381 Bush Street.
WM. J. MILLIKEN, Business Manager.

FORTY-SIXTH YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| EDITORIAL: Bridging the Bay—An Impending Mine Disaster—Into the Black Sea—Lloyd George and Clemenceau—Our Best-Paid Profession—An American Institution. 385-387 |         |
| LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.....  | 387     |
| CLARK ASHTON SMITH'S NEW VOLUME: "Ebony and Crystal" Marks Another Stage in the Development of a California Genius. By Morton Todd.....                         | 387-388 |
| OLD FAVORITES.....  | 388     |
| INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes About Prominent People All Over the World.....   | 388     |
| AS IT LOOKED TO LUDENDORFF: In His Own Story the Strong Man of Germany Tells of the Collapse of an Empire.....  | 389     |
| BANKING AND INVESTMENT NEWS.....  | 390-391 |
| BOOKS ON THE TABLE.....   | 392     |
| SAN FRANCISCO BANKS STRONG: Bank Clearings Larger Than Last Year During Each Month. By H. H. Macdonald.....   | 393-394 |
| STATE BANKING IN CALIFORNIA: Service Rendered the People Through the Commercial, Savings and Trust Functions. By Jonathan S. Dodge.....                         | 395-396 |
| INSURANCE THE BASIS OF CREDIT: San Francisco Is the Recognized Insurance Centre of the Pacific Coast States. By Wayland Dunham.....                             | 397-399 |
| BONDS—THEIR PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE: The Future of the Bond Business Is Definite and Certain. By J. L. Lilienthal.....   | 400-401 |
| CALIFORNIA'S METAL INDUSTRY: It Adds New Products to Its Supremacy in Platinum, Mercury and Gold. By Fletcher Hamilton.....                                     | 402-403 |
| CALIFORNIA OIL IN 1923: Big Production, Foreign Shipments, and Increased Revenues Are New Factors Upsetting Calculations. By M. E. Lombardi.....                | 404-406 |
| CALIFORNIA SECURITIES IN THE EAST: General Developments of the Year, and the Investment Bankers' Visit, Have Advanced Them to High Position.....                | 406-408 |
| BRIEFER REVIEWS: New Books Received.....  | 409     |
| DRAMA: "The Doll's House"; The Children's Theatre; At the Orpheum. By Josephine Hart Phelps.....  | 410     |
| FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE.....   | 411     |
| VANITY FAIR: New York's Wild Winter.....  | 412     |
| STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.....  | 413     |
| THE MERRY MUSE.....   | 413     |
| PERSONAL: Social Notes—Movements and Whereabouts.....   | 414-415 |
| THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....   | 416     |

Bridging the Bay.

San Francisco is enjoying a revival of interest in bridge projects, and as a diversion of the early winter season it is probably as good as indoor golf. Our winters are not severe, and bridging offers opportunity to committees and commissions to get a good deal of fresh air examining sites. It even looks as though some of this activity might have tangible effect in the form of the Dumbarton Bridge, which may prove a possibility and a feasibility. If so, it will be some gain, although not so much as the projectors of the bridge scheme hoped at first. It is about a year now since the "bridge the bay" fever culminated. We were bridging the bay in any direction, at any place, regardless of length of span, depth of water, or character of bottom. Some of our enthusiasts made it to Goat Island in "two jumps." The interval was spanned with speeches, the roadway was paved with business men's lunches, and the structure supplied with a ballast deck ballasted with press agents' epigrams—slogans, they are called. Enthusiasm welled from depths below the limit of caisson work; and the spacious gestures of post-prandial eloquence easily wafted the steel and stone into place. And where is that beauteous fabric of a dream today? They have moved it to the Golden Gate, where it is higher, broader, more beautiful than before, and even less substantial. They speak of a suspension span beyond anything heretofore deemed possible. They talk of steel towers higher than the one Eiffel built at Paris—and they would need to be. They talk of the vast traffic to roll over it and give financial support to its seventeen-and-a-half-million capital; an endless procession of automobiles from Petaluma, Santa Rosa, Sebastopol and Guerneville, with occupants coming into town to the movies. They talk of its tremendous advertising value, and the glittering eye of the Ancient Mariner dulls to gray agate beside the fires of enthusiasm ignited by the thought. And there is the main trouble with it: advertising. Is it better to be advertised by the things we talk about, or by the things we do? Enthusiasm over such a large project may inflame the soul awhile, but in the end it burns down to ashes, and leaves the hard-headed business man we should like to attract rather chilly for the contrast. There is one bridge project that is possible, and that is the one for Carquinez Straits. But let us not build too many of these long-span rainbows across the bay. They tend to make optimism a cheap commodity. If you want to advertise a city to those that really count in its commercial and industrial development, the best bait you can use is a low tax rate. But it isn't enough just to talk about it—you have to prove it.

An Impending Mine Disaster.

After three months the special committee appointed to investigate the Argonaut mine fire finds that the cause of that piteous tragedy is still unknown. And now that the affair has had time to give place as a public sensation to the escape of the hammer murderer, the liberation of Madelyne Obenchain, the election of some radicals to Congress, the remarriage of Professor Tiernan and the latest bootleg scandal, the California mineral industry ought to feel secure against hysterical efforts to make mining as safe by law as though no mining were done. But though the first impression of the disaster has passed from the public mind, and people in general would now be disposed to view the matter calmly, it is, unfortunately, possible for politicians to make political hay by reviving the distressing emotions it first awoke and getting their names on some bill or other which will appear to cure another capitalistic evil. We are always cursed with demagogues willing to destroy the public welfare for their individual gain.

At present the industrial accident commission and the California Metal and Mineral Producers' Association are working to improve laboring conditions and safety regulations in California mines. They know what they are doing, and are, together, the proper agency for elaborating methods that will be truly helpful, if any are needed. It is not likely that new legislation would prove at all so. It is still less likely that either gold mining or fly fishing or mumbly peg can ever be made perfectly safe for those engaged in them. As a matter of fact, gold mining as at present conducted and as it has been conducted since gold was found in California, would appear to be one of the safest of occupations, at least as far as the fire risk is involved. Death by fire is horrible, but every once in a while it occurs, in spite of all humanity can do, to dozens, or hundreds, in a theatre, or a hotel, or to some individual trapped under an automobile. Only sixty-four men have died by fire in mines in this state since 1849—sixty-four more than one wishes had died that way, but when one considers the numbers that have been engaged in mining gold in California, it would appear from such statistics, if statistics ever show anything, that a man in a mine is at least as safe as a man in an automobile. Both should be made safer than they are, if possible. But no road regulations human intelligence can formulate will wholly prevent defective driving or defectives from driving; and no laws the legislature can pass will ever put brains and pluck and presence of mind into a mine superintendent that lacks those qualities and has been rattled by an emergency.

The subject is too complex for legislation, which must be as general as possible to meet the requirements of constitutionality; for no two mines are alike. Blanket laws are impracticable, and rules must be made for one mine that would be dangerous, or impossible, or prohibitive of operation, in another. It is claimed, and in the confusion of legislation on every subject under the sun we do not doubt it, that there are enough laws on the statute books now, and sufficient regulatory power in the industrial accident commission, to establish any corrective measures that really promise correction. We do not need confiscatory statutes whose real object will be, not the safety of the miners, but the promotion of the political fortunes of some member of the legislature. We can imagine legislative impositions valuable for rabble-raising purposes, such as steel "timbering" and bulkheading, that would make gold mining cost more than gold is worth, as it is now in many abandoned mines, and thus drive the miners out into the world to run the hazards of sleeping in hotels, sitting in theatres, and crossing streets where automobiles are traveling twenty-five miles an hour. We can not get entire safety, either on the earth, or in the bowels of it, or in the air. Once on a time a sailor in this port fell from the main truck through an open hatch, struck some soft cargo, and got up and went about his work. That night he fell out of his bunk, two feet from the floor, and broke his neck. No legislation could have saved him, except a law to have everybody tied in his bed, and we hardly think paternalism is going that far, although we are not sure—if Senator La Follette reads this he may introduce a bill to provide sailors with cradles.

Much has been done, and more may be, to make industry less hazardous; but the politician that promises to make any industry safe by legislation is a humbug, because life itself can not be made safe. We have, however, plenty of humbugs. Already there are rumblings of legislation threatening the mining industry. But the special commission that investigated the Argonaut mine tragedy says existing laws are adequate and it is unnecessary to adopt more. The committee consists of A. B. C. Dohrmann, W. J. Loring, and J. C. Williams.

Into the Black Sea.

If we are to have a merchant marine (which is not a bright prospect just now) the seas of the world should be open to it. That is not jingoism, or chauvinism. If we are to send our keels and our property abroad upon the waters, we must have the right to protect them wherever they go, practically speaking. If our merchantmen are to be invited into the bear trap of the Black Sea, our warships as well must have access to it because an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure, and the presence of force, exhibited to peoples that seem to understand little else as yet, may prevent, and probably would prevent, aggressions and provocations that without it might precipitate another war.

If these propositions are true they are ample ground for the stand our "observer," Richard Washburn Child, has taken at the Lausanne conference. It looks as though a sort of "deal" had been made, and an excellent one for both parties. Lord Curzon wanted armed vessels admitted to the Black Sea. The Soviet representative, acting on the socialist principle that England was a capitalist country and anything it wanted was nefarious, opposed Curzon on the ostensible ground that if England got her warships into the Black Sea they would be used to extend British imperialism and British capitalism in that region. Hardly anything could be imagined more beneficial to the aforesaid region, but that is a consideration that would hardly appeal to a socialist. However, it is unfortunately probable that the Soviet fears are vain. The stupendous fabric of the British Empire has grown too tenuous for safety, as it is. It is not reasonable to suppose British statesmanship would seek a still further extension when it has recently given signs of a tendency toward contraction. But the Soviets might well fear one thing: that if British warships are to be given the right to go into the Black Sea it will be extremely difficult to get them out. And that would not be a bad arrangement, either.

The United States representative has put in a claim for the "open door" in Turkey, as one of those legitimate interests of his country he was sent to guard, if he could. Curzon, who really is not much of a diplomat when you consider his past performances in India, is quite amiable about it and ready in acquiescence, and with England and the United States joined on a point of policy there is little for the other conferees to do except agree—including Turkey, which is willing, hoping for American help. And when it comes to the admission of warships through the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus, there is a singleness of opinion again between the British official and the American unofficial representatives. It appears to be more than coincidence; it looks like a trade, and if it is a trade, it is one of the best trades made in the turbulent market of European peace. Turkey will lose nothing by it, the Russians have nothing substantial to fear from it, and the Black Sea peoples have a great deal to gain, because without naval policing of their ports and shores trade with the West will not go on to any great extent, but only in a small, extortionate, and not very beneficial way.

The Black Sea reaches far into Asia, and its basin offers the best and cheapest sort of transportation service to and from a vast and almost virgin area. From Batum, at its eastern end, cargoes of goods from Persia, Turkestan, and China itself could be shipped to New York (or even San Francisco) without breaking bulk. Return cargoes of tools and farm machinery and rails and locomotives could be distributed to all Central Asia, as well as to the greater part of European Russia. The imagination wearies and tends to falter before the future possibilities of such traffic. And its present is not so bad, either.

The condition of the Black Sea peoples is peculiar. Inhabiting one of the richest parts of the earth for ages, they have made little of their opportunities. They need Western commerce and Western commercialism to set their feet in the paths of progress. They lack so much; and the United States can supply it, or could, if our merchants are awake, if we have a merchant marine, and if we are given a sufficient navy for protection with the right to go where the protection is needed. Stupendous opportunities will open, as always in a region of great but undeveloped resources. There will be railways to construct, mines to work, streams to hitch up electrically, in time factory plants to build and equip—all calling for vast supplies of material and small armies of our driving young technicians. There are peoples to be supplied, equipped, and taught, to be worked over in the labors of peace from the condition of scanty fighting tribes into that of comfortable, stodgy burghers and agriculturalists, detestable to the socialists, but comfortable and helpful to themselves. In fact, the socialists and "progressives" may be trusted to foam at the mouth about it, and do much talking about "exploitation," but such is the way of the development of human happiness, and we doubt if there can ever be any other that is worth while. Oh, yes; and there will have to be banks, in all the sinfulness they represent to the socialistic and non-partisan imagination. But probably the English will attend to those. They have a way of starting banks abroad that are quite helpful to dividends at home.

To such rich opportunities America should have as ready access as any other country, and to the extent to which American citizens care to avail themselves of it. That is a national interest which seems to have been very well looked after at Lausanne. Our "observer" seems competent to observe, and under instructions from our capable State Department he also seems competent to get what we require. And the English are evidently disposed to meet us half way and take an even chance with us in Black Sea trade and development. They should be. They have been at the game much longer than our people have, and will have no trouble holding their own. We shall have to hustle; but the game is worth while.

Lloyd George and Clemenceau.

And now not only can it be told, but it is being told. The world may owe that to the political retirement of Lloyd George. He feels free to make answer to Clemenceau, and it draws quick fire from Premier Poincaré. No one ever accused Lloyd George of a lack of sagacity, but he would have lacked it utterly if he had thought Poincaré would stand mute under charges that France is wedded to militarism, and rejected British guaranties of protection in order to have an excuse to start a war of conquest on Germany.

To such charges Poincaré has two retorts, either of which seems to be, at this writing, a good defense. First, he says there is no party in France that seeks to promote a war of aggression. We believe that. France does not want German territory if she can obtain her dues without taking it. Nor is it likely that she wants the troublesome German population on the left bank of the Rhine. But she is trying to wrench from a welching nation the damages to which she is entitled and the damages she must have to save her from bankruptcy and general ruin, and in that effort the British have not thus far been conspicuously helpful. After four years of peace the monstrous injustice still stands of a ravaged France, and a Germany whose mines, workshops, and farms are intact and capable of producing the wealth to repair what Germany ruined. The per capita tax is about $13 in Germany and about $45 in France. No conferences, no diplomatic subtleties, no books of involuntarily retired statesmen; can wipe out that iniquity. The thing stinks to Heaven. The only way to relieve the world of it, and of its corrupting encouragement to militarism, is for Germany to be in some way compelled to pay the bill.

The office of THE ARGONAUT in all its departments has been re-established in the Alto Building, 381 Bush Street—southeast corner of Bush and Kearny.

Poincaré's second line of defense is as good as his first. He says in effect that the offer made by the trading Welshman had a string to it, and the guaranty in it was not reliable. There was no alliance of equals offered, and the arrangement had a time limit which might be reached just when the guaranty was needed most. It is easy to see that the French dreaded a sort of feudal dependence on a protector who should have the deciding voice in certain foreign relations. France did not care to be reduced to the position of a protectorate, or to give Great Britain a mandate over her as though she were a helpless and semi-civilized country. And nobody can justly blame her for that, or consider her thereby estopped from all effective efforts to collect what she should have. Moreover, while French territory might have appeared safe under the terms offered, there was no defense against indirect attack—attack, for example, on Poland, whose strength, now that Russia has eliminated herself from the old alliance, is a part of French security.

Nothing effective was offered to offset the German desire for revenge, and the growing German power, through a rising birth rate of fresh cannon fodder, to seek and perhaps to obtain that revenge. This matter of revenge is one of the most critical elements of continental politics. Under conditions at present prevailing populations are growing up with their minds and intentions fixed on "getting back" at other populations. It is a morbid sentiment that takes the place of healthy patriotism. It obscures morality and perverts religion and stifles business. Every political relation is corrupted by it. The most popular leaders of thought, apparently, are going to be the demagogues that preach the most hate. Reason, consideration, confidence, general prosperity growing out of natural commercial relations, are being sacrificed to this ugly and venomous little god. It will be fortunate if civilization escapes being part of the sacrifice. And little is being done toward the promotion of more amiable sentiments. The peoples live too near one another to be really friendly. Amateur sociologists that think it would be beautiful for everybody to be mixed up in the affairs of his next-door neighbor ought to see in the present European situation that mixing too much with your next-door neighbor is not promotive of the best neighborly relations. Some of our best neighbors are those that live across town.

Finally, France did not reject the guaranty, according to Poincaré—merely asked that it be cleared of its obscurities and obfuscations and general diplomatic fog, and be made to mean something definitive and particular, especially in that military sense which just now is tragically seen to be the really necessary sense in European affairs. It must not be a unilateral arrangement tending toward a position of vassalage, but a convention of equals, with teeth in it. That does not seem unreasonable, and France can not rightly be blamed, nor accused of militarism and imperialism and schemes of conquest, merely because she sought to introduce such stipulations.

Meantime, there does not appear to be any perceptible weakening of the French determination to collect. As has been remarked before, the French are good collectors. They say that if there is to be a German moratorium, France will demand the occupation of the Ruhr Valley as a guaranty—a real one. And that, too, seems not unreasonable, considering the credit of the debtor.

Our Best-Paid Profession.

The mess of criminality and fanaticism revealed in this city by the Wilmot trial is but a small local symptom of a national corruption, growing, as might have been expected, out of the effort to repress the natural propensities of the people toward something not in itself criminal, but only made so by statute. The Cabinet meeting held late in November on the subject of Volstead violations, and the President's statement following, indicate how seriously the situation is being taken at Washington. It was no mere concern over drink or drinking, or minor and sporadic breaches of law, that called forth that statement. The head of the nation is alarmed by a condition of affairs that threatens the national life more seriously than drink, more seriously than it was ever threatened by the liquor interests when those interests had a legal status.

The truth is that bootlegging has got into our politics by way of, first, the Volstead Act, and second, the general enactment of state enforcement measures such as the Wright Act of California imitates—statutes under which half the police force of Chicago, for example, declared itself in on the bootleg graft. There never was such an opportunity for unscrupulous men to get rich; and for many that have not heretofore been unscrupulous and do not today consider themselves crooks for having broken an oppressive law. Burglary isn't in it with this. Selling worthless stock to widows in hotel lobbies is more cruel and less lucrative. Bootlegging is a second Klondike, and the interest in it is becoming about as widespread. And the thing has got itself into commerce and entrenched itself in high finance in the most sinister and threatening ways.

In many states the subterranean and real issue in the recent elections was not political, but the mere question which group of politicians should have the bootlegging privilege. That was more important to them than any considerations of national welfare or anything that might be enacted by Congress. There was, naturally, a tremendous amount of treachery and double crossing which has laid the foundations for vendettas for years to come, vendettas in which the real interests of the country will receive about as much consideration from some of the men entrusted with the management of our politics as they would from warring tongs in Chinatown. Many respectable banks in the East are loaded up with bootleg paper—notes out of which bootleggers buy motor boats and cars and hire crews, and generally capitalize rum running. It is said the national bank examiners have found dangerous amounts of these "securities" among bank assets; and when they once get into the banks in any considerable volume, prosperity demands that they shall be made really secure. The comptroller of the currency has been doing his best to get the banks to disgorge this sort of paper gradually, recognizing that the thing has gone so far that any sudden shut-down on it might start wide trouble. He has had to be lenient, and so has the Treasury Department in general; for innocent depositors and stockholders are involved. For example, one small bank had half a million dollars' worth of the notes of a rum runner importing Spanish wines. When the enforcement agents at New York seized a good part of his cargo this paper became relatively worthless, and it was evident to the officials that unless its value could be restored the bank would smash, and perhaps pull down others. So the Department of Justice was consulted, some convenient excuse found, and the wine released. But it is a poor way to govern the country.

In Montana there were two Democratic senators, and as a Democrat has no business with patronage in a Republican year, the Republican national committee-man farmed the jobs. That of prohibition director he took for his very own. It is reported that business was so good with him that last summer he was suspended from office, and later he was indicted, but the indictment was not returned until after the election.

There are bootlegging organizations of big money and big business and daring operatives, that are national in scope and have international branches. Their influence on the national life, character, and policies must be as terrible as it is wide. They enjoy protection in high places and envy in low. Honest labor no longer yields rewards comparable to those of men that have quit it and gone into law-breaking as a business. And in the next generation society in many an American city, large and small, is going to be dominated by the heiresses of the great bootlegging fortunes of these years.

The thing is generally demoralizing, and it points straight to moral and political catastrophe. It is said by keen observers at Washington, our central point of political observation, that bootlegging is causing more corruption in state and municipal administration—particularly in state administration—than anything in American history; the mere scramble for office, and for the graft from prostitution and gambling, is nothing to it. It is hard for a chief of police to resist inducements to keep his men from interfering with a trade which many of our heaviest taxpayers and heretofore good citizens support at great expense and obviously wish to go on. And that is corruption of the worst type thus far appearing in American life. It is no wonder the President expresses concern; the situation is said to be even graver than he represented.

It is reported from Washington that the Administration is assembling evidence from the different departments of the government affected, with a view of attempting remedies. The President has said that a measure of dependence is to be placed on an appeal to the "conscience-driven" citizens. This may mean that the Administration will present the facts of which it has cognizance, but about which it has talked but little, with a plea to the better instincts of citizenship, and will follow that up by a drive at the higher-ups in the boot-legging trade. "Pinching" a few retailers and bootlegging druggists has merely served to make extortion easy.

An American Institution.

The adage of the oak and the acorn comes to mind in contemplating the development of that venerable firm of publishers, Harper & Brothers, as they challenge us to do on the present occasion of their removal from the building on Franklin Square, where they have been for the last seventy years of the century and more of their existence. The acorn is represented by the humble beginning in 1817 of two farmer boys turned printer and establishing themselves as the firm of J. & J. Harper in a dingy, one-room shop on Dover Street. The oak is not hard to find in our puzzle picture. But the remarkable thing about the venture launched in 1817 is not so much the flourishing house of today, as the fact that any one other than a dilettante millionaire should have braved the unpromising future of a publishing concern in the United States in 1817.

And yet Harper & Brothers were not even the first—that distinction for existing houses seems to go to Little, Brown & Co., who were established in 1784 in Boston; and there were a half-dozen others in the dozen or so years that followed, including the house of J. B. Lippincott & Co., established in Philadelphia in 1798. Harper & Brothers were the third of the present great houses, D. Appleton & Co. following them in 1825. And still one wonders how they had the courage to venture on the business of publishing in America, for though many of the colonial booksellers printed and published the political and religious tracts which were the chief literary output of the time and place—

Franklin notable among these—literature in any sense of the word had not dawned in this country at the time even of the Harpers' beginning, still less that of their two predecessors. Washington Irving, the father of American letters, was born in 1783, Cooper in 1789, Bryant in 1794, Hawthorne in 1804, Whittier and Longfellow in 1807. The extent of their literary production by 1817 could not have been great.

New York was then an unprogressive, provincial, albeit thrifty, town of 60,000 inhabitants: about the size of Berkeley. The public school system, which was to create a demand for books and printing, was to come into existence later. Its prototype was the charity school founded and supported by the Friends, which existed under the society's charter up to 1853, when its property was put under the control of the board of education. Three banks and three insurance houses were sufficient to transact all the commercial business of the town, and the postoffice was conducted up to 1827 in the private house of the postmaster. The Dutch Reformed was the dominant religious denomination; and when it is remembered that it was with great reluctance that the city fathers consented to the substitution of English for Dutch in their church services it will be conceded that New York at that time was a conservative city.

And yet the intrepid young publishing houses flourished and grew mighty—naturally the superhuman efforts of the Harpers and probably of the others ought to have sufficed to promote the most improbable ambition. An example of their industry is quoted with reference to the American issue of the Waverly novels, which they were among the first to publish. The edition of "Peveril of the Peak" was published in twenty-one hours as a result of putting every compositor on the job and disregarding the shifts, meal hours, and bedtime. That was before the days of unions and in the days of lusty expansion.

The Harpers are moving to a new six-story building adjacent to the Vanderbilt Hotel, where we trust the veteran house of publishers will prosper for at least another century.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

The Japanese In Hawaii.

SAN FRANCISCO, November 30, 1922.

TO THE EDITOR—Sir: Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., has been writing for the Hearst press a series of articles on Far Eastern problems, tending in general to the conclusion that no matter what we do we are in for a war with Japan, and that no matter how nobly Japan seems to act, her actions of good faith in keeping treaties are only clever disguises of villainy. Affairs in Hawaii were the young man's last subject and, as usual, Japan was the villain. I am compelled to the conclusion that none of his many sweeping statements, purporting to reveal secrets of great magnitude in connection with Far Eastern affairs, are worthy of any attention, for happening to be familiar with Hawaiian affairs, I find him making the wildest misstatements in support of his thesis. For example: "The 'Gentlemen's Agreement' does not operate in Hawaii. In consequence Japan is at liberty to send into that island territory as many of her people as she will give passports to." The Gentlemen's Agreement has applied to Hawaii just the same as to the mainland, and has caused a great shortage of labor in Hawaii. Mr. Vanderbilt makes the reckless and palpably untrue assertion that it failed "utterly" to check "the flow of Orientals into the United States." In fact it was better enforced as to Hawaii than as to the mainland, for the only way to enter Hawaii is by steamers easily guarded. But it was at least a "check" here.

"The Japanese women still enter the island in great droves as 'picture brides.'" The regulations as to picture brides are the same at Hawaii as they are at San Francisco.

"Tied by the immigration laws," says this young authority on international affairs, "the hands of the government are unable to check the mad rush of alien unassimilable blood to the Hawaiian Islands and its incorporation into the body politic." The rush is pure fiction.

Here are perhaps the most amazing misstatements of all: "So great is their (the Japanese) voting strength already that they defeated a bill before the territorial legislature in June, 1921, which would have forced teachers in Japanese and other foreign language schools to know enough of the English language and American civics and history to teach the young American citizens some of their duties and obligations." The Japanese voting strength is nil—and the bill passed!

"Today the intelligent white . . . elements are asking Congress to pass the Rehabilitation Act and an immigration measure, the acknowledged purposes of which are to protect Hawaii from ultimate political and racial control by the Japanese." The Rehabilitation Act was passed a couple of years ago, by Congress. It is an act for the benefit of the dying Hawaiian race, giving persons of Hawaiian blood special privileges in settling upon lands. Under its provisions a number of Hawaiian families have already settled as homesteaders on the island of Molokai. The "immigrant" measure to which Mr. Vanderbilt refers is an act, favorably reported by a Senate committee, to allow importation of a number of Chinese laborers, to remain only for a stated period, to fill the shortage of plantation labor.

Hawaii presents an intensely interesting phase of American-Japanese relations, as well as economic and sociological experiment, in connection with some of the points I have only mentioned, and not discussed. I am merely calling attention to some strange distortions of fact in order to bolster a war scare.

Even more strabismic is Mr. Vanderbilt's reasoning, as where he mentions the fact that the Japanese consul at Honolulu advised his countrymen at Honolulu to agree with the American view regarding language school regulations (this is actually under the provisions of the very act which Mr. Vanderbilt says did not pass), and then darkly declares that a Honolulu Japanese newspaper's opposition to the consul shows how independent these boggy Japanese have become. H.

CLARK ASHTON SMITH'S NEW VOLUME.

"Ebony and Crystal" Marks Another Stage in the Development of a California Genius.

On a piece of ranch land above Auburn there dwells at peace with life one of the authentic poets of today; a self-educated man, who, under the blue school law of Oregon, would probably have been packed in a mental cannery and turned out a standardized mind with a state label. But because, like Herbert Spencer, he could not attend school, he was driven by the force of an unusual intellect to what is called in olden phrase omnivorous reading. And being ridden with the soul of a poet he has woven into exquisite verse the winnowings of years and of libraries, with more of his own creations, until he ranges into one sweep some of the power of Kipling, the imagery of Poe and Milton and Coleridge, the delicacy of Shelley, the verbal beauty of Keats. I do not think of claiming for him that he is any of these. On the contrary, he falls short of any of them. He may never develop the stark force of Kipling, he may never penetrate so deeply into things as to learn to lift the soul with beauty like Coleridge, or haunt it eternally with the enchantments of Poe. And yet, no one knows. Give him time, and he may stir us with something more musical than "Ulalume," more poignant in its love-and-death tragedy than "Annabel Lee," or the stanzas "To Annie." At present he seems to be delving from the surface of things into certain dark pits of sorcery too remote from our common emotional experience to get a real hold on us except through our perceptions of beauty and our admiration of his gorgeous, flaming visions. But that is much; in fact tremendous. And so when George Sterling, who is his mentor and who mothers his growing genius, came into the office with a new volume of Clark Ashton Smith's verses, the book was hailed as an event in the literary history of California, and one worthily upholding the traditions of the state.

Smith's latest book is entitled "Ebony and Crystal." In verse after verse, one stanza after another, it exerts that peculiar charm he finds in the beauty of things. If he made a catalogue of his nouns it would alone be enticing. He seems to have culled from all the objects in the world those that are beautiful, to weave the names of them into lines as delicate as bedewed gossamer. It is the "beauty of the visible"—yet not altogether satisfying, so he sets us this:

A PRECEPT.

With words of ivory,
Of bronze, of ebony,
Of alabaster, marble, steel, and gold,
The beauty of the visible is told.

But how with these express
The unseen Loveliness—
Splendor and light, and harmony, and sound,
The heart hath felt, the sense hath never found?

No shining words of stone—
Shadow and cloud alone—
These shall the poet seek eternally,
Whose lines would carve the mask of Mystery.

It seems to be required of a poet that he shall have a "philosophy," and perhaps Smith's is expounded in this crystal splinter:

TRANSCENDENCE.

To look on love with disenchanted eyes;
To see with gaze relentless, rendered clear
Of hope or hatred, of desire and fear,
The insuperable nullity that lies
Behind the veils of various disguise
Which life or death may haply weave; to hear Forevermore in flute and harp the mere
And all-resolving silence; recognize
The gules of autumn in the greening leaf,
And in the poppy-pod the poppy-flow'r—
This is to be the lord of love and grief,
O'er Time's illusion and thyself supreme,
As, half-aroused in some nocturnal hour,
The dreamer knows and dominates his dream.

It is not, however, in any philosophy that we find the best of this poet, but in the veritable poetic spell, conveyed in the vehicle of great Keats himself: that of the beauty of thoughts, strengthened by that compelling philtre, the beauty of things. This example is probably as good as any, although the whole volume is pervaded with these qualities:

FLAMINGOES.

On skies of tropic evening, broad and beryl-green,
Above a tranquil sea of molten malachite,
With flare of scarlet wings, in long and level flight,
The soundless, fleet flamingoes pass to isles unseen.

They pass and disappear, where darkening palms indent
The horizon, underneath some high and tawny star—
Lost in the sunset gulfs of glowing cinnabar,
Where sinks the painted moon, with brows of orpiment.

There can be no question of workmanlike method and technique. This poet shirks nothing. He has not, in the latest fad, adopted free verse or other formlessness to save himself the proper poetic travail of rhyming and of metering. And there are no forced rhymes, but such as fall so naturally as to be a delight to the ear and the understanding at once. That calls not only for skill, but for craftsmanlike devotion, for soul-searching and self-discipline, and for conscience in execution, the lack of any trace of which in the submitted work of most amateurs is one of the things that make editors go mad.

His titles show the attraction of many of the subtleties of life. And then there is the possible loss of identity in death, an idea that has laid its chill hand on the fancy of Bierce and many another. In these exquisite stanzas Smith deals with that frosty theme:

A FRAGMENT.

Autumn far-off in memory.
That saw the crisping myrtles fade!****
Aeons ago, my tomb was made.
Beside the moon-constrained sea.

Ah, wonderful its portals were!
With carved doors of chrysolite.
And wall of sombre syenite,
They wrought mine olden sepulchre!

About the griffin-guarded plinth,
White blossoms crowned the scarlet vine;
And burning orchids opaline
Illumed the palm and terebinth.

On friezes of mine ancient fame,
The cypress wrought its withered shade;
And through the boughs the ocean made
Moresques of blue and fretted flame.

Poet or prince, I may not know
My perished name, nor bring to mind
Years that are one with dust and wind,
Nor songless love, and tongueless woe—:

Only the tomb they made for me,
With carved doors of chrysolite,
And walls of sombre syenite,
Beside the moon-constrained sea.

Returning to the mundane, here is a song of camel trains in their endless processions, processions that have been part of the life of Asia for untold ages:

BEYOND THE GREAT WALL.

Beyond the far Cathayan wall,
A thousand leagues athwart the sky,
The scarlet stars and mornings die,
The gilded moons and sunsets fall.

Across the sulphur-colored sands
With bales of silk the camels fare,
Harnessed with vermillion and with vair,
Into the blue and burning lands.

And, ah, the song the drivers sing,
To while the desert leagues away—
A song they sang in old Cathay,
Ere youth had left the eldest king—

Ere love and beauty both grew old,
And wonder and romance were flown
On fiery wings to worlds unknown,
To stars of undiscovered gold.

And I their alien words would know,
And follow past the lonely Wall,
Where gilded moons and sunsets fall,
As in a song of long ago.

We find in these verses much diction of the rare, the precious, the obsolete, of terms of heraldry and ancient arts. Their strangeness does not greatly help, but if you have acquired such a vocabulary there is an undoubted temptation to use it. And artistically used it does help some—gives a note of gems in embroidery, that is rich and Oriental. There are such words as queach, irrisation, lote, wyvers, flaffing, eidolon, prore, terebinth, fulvous, levins, fulgor, vair, nenuphar. Of course, Intelligent Reader, you know all those; down to nenuphar. But do you know what a nenuphar is? Now, as Ingersoll used to plead with his audiences, be honest. Do you? When I first read of one in Smith's verses I thought it would be fine to have a little tame nenuphar running about the yard to welcome me when I came home, but when I consulted the dictionary to see what sort of dog-house to build for it I found it was a water lily. I never did have any luck with pets.

Clark Ashton Smith is already one of the best working poets between the two oceans. It is not too much to put him in a class with Bliss Carman and William Rose Benét, both of whom he excels in the quality of imaginative splendor, although his contacts with life are less, and he has not yet arrived at much realism in subject matter. Call him rather a master of abstract verse, or pure poetry, in the sense that it is that alone. And perhaps that is rather complimentary than criticism, and I hope it is. One of the most exquisite poems in the language (Bierce thought the most nearly perfect) is "Kubla Khan," which isn't "about" anything in particular that any one ever experienced—yet the damsel with a dulcimer, singing of Mount Abora, which probably has no existence, and certainly the damsel never did, haunts the mind like a vision of that Paradise with which the fragment ends. And there is the wizard spell of Keats, a spell which, if it once seizes you, can never be shaken off, those "magic casements opening on the foam of perilous seas in faery lands forlorn." If you could hold Keats up about it and demand to know "What de yeh mean by it?" he would probably say he meant nothing at all except to create one of those things of beauty which are a joy forever; wherein he certainly succeeded, and so does Clark Ashton Smith. And yet that Keats line is totally irrelevant and immaterial and without legal force or effect. No, pure poetry does not have to be related to sociology, or investment banking, or glandotherapy, or the labor movement, or the petroleum output, or anything like that, and therein is its pricelessness. The spirit must be fed on the bread of beauty, or it dies. So let us thank Clark Ashton Smith for so fealty purveying it.

The volume includes "The Hashish Eater, or The Apocalypse of Evil," a tour de force of visualization and blazing imagery, running for several pages apace with that remarkable poem, "A Wine of Wizardry," by his friend, Sterling. With its "marble apes," and its "war of pygmies, met by night, with pitter of their drums of parrot's hide," it is supremely well done—if you like that sort of thing: the sort of thing which, in prose, made Vathek, and some part of the Arabian Nights. It is as splendid and as colorful as any Oriental weave. But to most of us earth-bound peoples it is a bit too far removed from any real experience to get a fast grip. It is a splendid gem, but it has in it neither sorrow nor joy nor dread nor pity—and still it is compelling for the brilliance of its fantasies.

These are the workings of a soul still somewhat apart; without the grasp of Edgar Lee Masters on the village scandals which by so many young philosophers are held to reveal "life." And Heaven be praised for it! Yet Clark Ashton Smith should, and I believe in time will, come into closer touch with real things, to move us even more deeply. It is his job. When he does it he may stand with Poe, and if he does that we shall owe him more, for of Poe there is too little, whereas Smith is industrious. Already he has to his credit "The Star Treader," including "Nero," which alone would be a good grist for so young a miller. He has several years between him and thirty.

"Ebony and Crystal" was printed by the Auburn Journal. It is limited to 500 copies and can be obtained, at present, for $2. If you love poetry, this is it.

MORTON TODD.

OLD FAVORITES.

Keith of Ravelston.

The murmur of the mourning ghost
That keeps the shadowy kine,
"Oh, Keith of Ravelston,
The sorrows of thy line!"

Ravelston, Ravelston,
The merry path that leads
Down the golden morning hill,
And thro' the silver meads;

Ravelston, Ravelston,
The stile beneath the tree,
The maid that kept her mother's kine,
The song that sang she!

She sang her song, she kept her kine,
She sat beneath the thorn,
When Andrew Keith of Ravelston
Rode thro' the Monday morn.

His henchmen sing, his hawk-bells ring,
His belted jewels shine!
Oh, Keith of Ravelston
The sorrows of thy line!

Year after year, where Andrew came,
Comes evening down the glade,
And still there sits a moonshine ghost
Where sat the sunshine maid.

Her misty hair is faint and fair,
She keeps the shadowy kine;
Oh, Keith of Ravelston,
The sorrows of thy line!

I lay my hand upon the stile,
The stile is lone and cold;
The burnie that goes babbling by
Says naught that can be told.

Yet, stranger! here, from year to year,
She keeps her shadowy kine;
Oh, Keith of Ravelston,
The sorrows of thy line!

Step out three steps, where Andrew stood—
Why blanch thy cheeks for fear?
The ancient stile is not alone,
'Tis not the burn I hear!

She makes her immemorial moan,
She keeps her shadowy kine;
Oh, Keith of Ravelston,
The sorrows of thy line!

—Sydney Thompson Dobell.

Coliseum By Moonlight.

The stars are forth, the moon above the tops
Of the snow-shining mountains.—Beautiful!
I linger yet with Nature, for the night
Hath been to me a more familiar face
Than that of man; and in her starry shade
Of dim and solitary loveliness
I learned the language of another world.
I do remember me, that in my youth,
When I was wandering,—upon such a night
I stood within the Coliseum's wall,
Midst the chief relics of almighty Rome.
The trees which grew along the broken arches
Waved dark in the blue midnight, and the stars
Shone through the rents of ruin; from afar
The watch-dog bayed beyond the Tiber; and More near, from out the Caesars' palace came
The owl's long cry, and, interruptedly,
Of distant sentinels and fitful song
Began and died upon the gentle wind.
Some cypresses beyond the time-worn breach Appeared to skirt the horizon, yet they stood
Within a bowshot,—where the Caesars dwelt,
And dwell the tuneless birds of night, amidst
A grove which springs through leveled battlements,
And twines its roots with the imperial hearths.
Ivy usurps the laurel's place of growth;—
But the gladiators' bloody circus stands,
A noble wreck in ruinous perfection,
While Caesar's chambers and the Augustan halls
Grovel on earth in indistinct decay.—
And thou didst shine, thou rolling moon, upon
All this, and cast a wide and tender light,
Which softened down the hoar austerity
Of rugged desolation, and filled up,
As 'twere anew, the gaps of centuries,
Leaving that beautiful which still was so,
And making that which was not, till the place
Became religion, and the heart ran o'er
With silent worship of the great of old!
The dead, but sceptered sovereigns, who still rule
Our spirits from their urns.

—Lord Byron.

In a year the Pennsylvania Railroad carried 152,000,000 without killing one. During the same year 12,500 persons in the United States were killed by automobiles. There seems to be no limit to human progress.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

Charles L. Richards, congressman from Nevada, is the first native Nevadan to go to Washington as the state's representative.

Edgar Allen Poe, 3d, grandson of the famous author whose name he bears, is an ardent poloist and a leading player of the Coronado Country Club at Coronado Beach.

George Kratina of Brooklyn is a twelve-year-old sculptor of animals whose work has astounded the critics. He has been taught by his father, who studied under Rodin.

Iliodore, the "mad monk of Russia," adventurer and arch agitator, is in New York, and has announced his intention to adopt the rôle of a Baptist preacher at the Russian Baptist Church in that city.

Gustaf Adolf, the heir to the throne of Sweden, is a crown prince of the modern type who does not idly nor riotously wait for his accession. Prince Gustaf, who recently celebrated his fortieth birthday, is a noted archæologist and is at present personally conducting a Swedish expedition to Greece in the interests of science, not of Mars.

Thomas F. Bayard, newly-elected Democratic senator from Delaware, is the sixth of his family to sit in the United States Senate, and the fifth Senator Bayard of Delaware. Tom Bayard, as he is known in politics in his home state, is not a politician, though he has lived in politics all his life; he is a lawyer, having followed the traditions of his family professionally as well as politically.

Mrs. Marjorie Howarth, wife of a New York business man, is the first white woman to cross the third range of the Andes Mountains, 14,600 feet above sea level, and then to descend over the difficult trail leading to Iquitos, Peru, on the upper reaches of the Amazon. The interesting fact about Mrs. Howarth's expedition is that it was undertaken as a pleasure trip, not as a tour of discovery.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle is physically a large man who was something of an athlete in his youth; a cricketer, in particular. He was born in Edinburgh sixty-three years ago. He began professional life as a physician at Southsea, which may or may not have anything to do with his late spiritualistic developments. He has traveled in the Arctic and West Africa and it is his distinction to be the creator of the most familiar of all modern literary figures, that of Sherlock Holmes.

Joseph Baermann Strauss, the Chicago bridge engineer who has just submitted estimates for the long-discussed Golden Gate project, is the inventor of the Strauss trunnion bascule bridge and the Strauss direct lift bridge, in general use. Two of his most ingenious inventions were the aeroscope at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in 1915, and the portable searchlight outfits used by the United States and Russian governments during the world war. The Strauss yielding barrier is another of his contributions to mechanical progress.

Paul Verdier, president of the City of Paris Company of San Francisco, and noted local polo player, has been cited by the French government as an officer of the Legion of Honor, for "marked service" at the front. Mr. Verdier, despite his numerous business interests in this country, was among the first to enlist under the tricolor. He entered the French army as a private and was successively promoted till he became a captain. Verdier served for four years as a member of the famous One Hundred and Fifty-Fifth French Infantry, receiving the Croix de Guerre.

Another eligible for the newsboys' hall of fame has recently returned to this country, after several years of European wanderings—John Cournos, the Russian author, who claims Philadelphia as his home. Mr. Cournos, whose trilogy, "The Mask," "The Wall," and "Babel" has placed him in the front rank of living novelists, began his newspaper career as a newsie thirty years ago, a score of which have been passed on the Philadelphia Record. When he left that paper a decade ago to go to London he was assistant Sunday editor—a fact that is more resounding when one remembers Mr. Cournos' humble origin. He was in London at the outbreak of the war, and in Russia at the beginning of the revolution, where he had been sent on the Anglo-Russian commission by the British government. Mr. Cournos was born in Kieff, Russia, in 1881 and is unmarried.

Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, who has been awarded this year's Nobel Peace Prize for services performed in relieving starving persons in Asia Minor and Russia, is known primarily as an Arctic explorer, but is also a professor of oceanography—in Kristiania University—and has figured in Scandinavian history as statesman and diplomat. He took an active part in the separation of Norway and Sweden in 1905, and from 1906 to 1908 was minister for Norway at the Court of St. James. Dr. Nansen was born near Kristiania in 1861, the son of a well-known Norwegian advocate. His first arctic expedition was to Greenland Sea in 1882, followed by a trip across Greenland in 1888-89. His North Pole expedition, in which he reached the highest northern latitude then attained, was conducted from 1893 to '96. He is the author of a number of studies of northern life and conditions.

AS IT LOOKED TO LUDENDORFF.

in His Own Story the Strong Man of Germany Tells of the Collapse of an Empire.

The German war had hardly closed before the Germans started writing books about it. Hindenburg, Falkenhayn, Kluck, Tirpitz, Bernstorff, the Crown Prince, the Austrian Count Czernin and others had their story to tell, and they told it. Much of the material offered had two obvious ends to serve. One was to explain away mistakes and blunders; the other was to build up for future Germans the tradition of a war forced on Germany by a ring of enemies. The Kaiser has recently issued his memoirs, and he sings the same song. Most of the stuff varies from trash to bald falsehood, but some will believe it because they want to. As material for history, there is not much to be found in these works.

When one reads, however, the memoirs of General Erich von Ludendorff the impression gained is, on the whole, different. After eliminating the old story of the war forced on Germany and other standing matter of that sort, the reader will find evidence of a strong man who in the later years of conflict guided the German armies nearly to the end. His work bears the impress of sincerity and truth, as far as he desired to permit the truth to be known.

A regimental commander at the beginning, and out of favor at Berlin, he was the first to enter Liège. In three weeks he was made chief of staff under Hindenburg on the eastern front and served there for two years. The Verdun failure caused the retirement of Falkenhayn, and Hindenburg and Ludendorff were placed in full charge of the war in August, 1916, while the battle of the Somme was raging. As quartermaster-general he was the brains of the German army until retired late in October, 1918, when the whole structure of Germany was falling.

A myriad of events is referred to in the two volumes. One can mention only a few comments here and there to indicate the nature of the work. Ludendorff deals with army movements, but he also surveys the political field—in fact, he brings under review all the various factors that entered into the great war. Passing over the important campaigns in the East, one gets this brilliant bit of characterization of the battle of Verdun:

The German attack at Verdun led to no decisive result. By May it bore the stamp of the first great battle of attrition, in which the struggle for victory meant feeding a stationary fighting line with a continuous mass of men and materials.

Verdun had exacted a very great price in blood. The position of our attacking groups grew more and more unfavorable. The more ground they gained the deeper they plunged into the wilderness of shellholes, and apart from actual losses in action they suffered heavy wastage merely through having to stay in such a spot.

Our attacks dragged on, sapping our strength. The very men who had fought so heroically at Verdun were terrified at this shell-ravaged region. The command had not its heart in its work.

His majesty the emperor was induced to give the momentous order for the cessation of the offensive at Verdun. That offensive should have been broken off immediately it assumed the character of a battle of attrition. The gain no longer justified the losses.

The breaking off of the attack on Verdun made it easier to satisfy their wishes, but even there we had to reckon in the future with considerable wastage, if only on account of the local conditions. It was possible that the French would themselves make an attack from the fortress. Verdun remained an open, wasting sore.

On December 14th, 15th, and 16th, however, there was again very hard fighting around Verdun. The French attacked so as to limit still further, before the end of the year, the German gains of 1916 before this fortress. They achieved their object. The blow they dealt us was particularly heavy. We not only suffered heavy casualties, but also lost important positions.

Summing up the situation after more than two years of war, he describes the conditions then existing and indirectly gives the truth regarding the campaign of 1914:

The order to retreat from the Marne was issued, whether on good grounds or not I have never been able to ascertain. After the failure of the first great blow against France in 1914 there had been no change in the situation, and Field Marshal von Moltke's prophetic words of May 14, 1890, had become a fact.

In any case, the result of the war was not to be decided on the Italian front. It could be fought out only in the west, in France. And we should be strong enough for a decision on that front only when the Russians had been defeated.

The German general had some very definite opinions regarding the Austrians and their army, which may be appreciated from the following extracts:

Austria-Hungary, as always, looked after her own interests in a measure which was not justified by her military achievements.

Yet as early as the days of the capture of Lodz and the battle of Limanova the Austrian troops were retiring from Serbia defeated. They were no longer a vigorous fighting instrument. At first they had underestimated their opponents, now they went to the other extreme and overestimated them. The enemy's numbers alone terrified them.

Had the dual monarchies and the Austro-Hungarian army accomplished even half of what could properly have been expected of them, German troops need not have been brought in such masses to reinforce their fronts.

In any case it was fatal for us that we were allied with decaying states like Austria-Hungary and Turkey. A Jew in Radom once said to one of my officers that he could not understand why so strong and vital a body as Germany should ally itself with a corpse. He was right.

Ludendorff is a true German, apparently taking for granted a measure of gullibility on the part of other peoples hardly justified by results. Time and again, whether through carelessness or contempt, he makes one statement calculated to produce a certain effect, and, later on, directly contradicts it. Here is an example:

The Triple Alliance was only a political union, while the Franco-Russian alliance was of a definitely military character, and this constituted a great advantage to our enemies.

According to former military agreements with Italy, three Italian army corps and two cavalry divisions were to help [us] in Alsace, while the main body of the army, minus the coast-defense forces, were to be assembled on the Franco-Italian frontier. Simultaneously, the fleet was to endeavor to cut France off from her colonies in North Africa.

These two statements are only two paragraphs apart. The reader may well inquire as to the nature of the "political alliance" that provided for the military operations mentioned in the second quotation.

Here is another example, from his comments on the German people:

The great mass of the people, especially the middle class, including officials and officers with fixed salaries, suffered real hardship. A few, no doubt, succumbed to temptation in the difficult times, and helped themselves, but the majority were literally starved. This came as an additional burden over and above all the other difficulties suffered by the middle classes. And yet this class, oppressed in every direction and suffering silently, did its duty to the very end.

The workmen were better looked after. They adjusted their demands for increased wages, which they supported by striking, to the illicit trading prices.

The broad mass of the "bourgeoisie," a confused mob, always knowing better than any one else and lacking all discipline, went its own way and stood isolated in its mental arrogance, its reluctance to act, its lack of character. It, too, had no sense of its responsibility to the country. It never thought of what infinite damage it was bringing on the country and on itself.

Another example is in his contradictory statements regarding General Foch's surprise attack on his right flank on July 18, 1918, when the offensive passed from the Germans, not to return:

In the attack on Rheims we reckoned on an enemy counter-offensive between the Aisne and on the Marne, with Soissons as its principal objective, and we organized the Ninth Army and the right wing of the Seventh accordingly.

I inquired into the reasons for our failure of the 18th. The men no longer believed in the possibility of an attack. A divisional commander with whom I was acquainted told me that he had been to the front lines on the 17th, and had seen not the slightest sign of activity on the part of the enemy. As a matter of fact, the French troops received the order to attack only a few hours before they came up. Information which was coming through to our lines until immediately before the battle began, no longer reached us. The rapid movement of the numerous fast tanks in the high corn increased the effect of the surprise.

All these things helped to heighten the effect of the enemy surprise.

The result of the surprise had been an over-hasty throwing in of reserves.

Of the Kaiser, Ludendorff has little to say. He is a true royalist, but at times the strong, capable man must speak his mind, even indirectly, about the incompetent whom the accident of birth had placed on the throne:

Our war chancellors never gathered the people together and led them like the great dictators Clemenceau, Lloyd George, and Wilson. The mind of the German people remained rudderless and uncaptured, the prey of every influence that came.

I greatly missed the assistance of a strong imperial executive.

Personally, I considered the barrier which the imperial chancellor had erected between the emperor and the people to be deplorable. The emperor could not become sufficiently acquainted with men.

The submarine war was ordered by Hindenburg and Ludendorff, and was at their command:

The field marshal and myself, in our view of the whole situation and in our only too correct doubt as to the success of the peace proposals, had already had under consideration, as part of our military problems, the possibility of carrying on the submarine campaign in an intensified form. Unrestricted submarine warfare was now the only means left to secure in any reasonable time a victorious end to the war. If submarine warfare on this scale could have a decisive effect—and the navy held that it could—then in the existing situation it was our plain military duty to the German nation to embark on this form of warfare.

Chancellor von Bethmann stated this quite clearly at the time, and added that thenceforth the decision to carry on the submarine warfare in the form of "blockaded area" fighting would depend on the declaration of the field marshal—that is to say, unrestricted submarine warfare was to start when the field marshal wished it to start.

Six months of the submarine campaign had gone by. It had accomplished much; according to mere numbers, more, but in its final result less, than had been anticipated. I still hoped that the expectations of the navy would be realized in the near future. But I began to wonder whether as many U-boats as possible were really being built.

No doubt our precarious military position and, later, the want of success achieved in the submarine war, of which some people had, unfortunately, been too confident, made it more difficult to rouse our energy.

Of America and the Americans and the ability of our country to get into the fight, the general speaks occasionally:

In discussing the possibility of transferring the American army to France we put forward the naval opinion that it could be considered feasible only to a limited extent.

How many Americans had got across by April we did not know. In the middle of the month, between St-Mihiel and the Moselle, the first more important engagements took place against United States troops, who had already been a long time in France. The individual American fought well, but our success had, nevertheless, been easy.

From our previous experience of the submarine war, I expected strong forces of Americans to come. But the rapidity with which they actually did arrive proved surprising.

At Château-Thierry, Americans who had been a long time in France had bravely attacked our thinly held fronts, but they were unskillfully led, attacked in dense masses, and failed. Here, too, our men felt themselves superior.

But the fact that these new American reinforcements could release English and French divisions on quiet sectors weighed heavily in the balance against us. This was of the greatest importance and helps to explain the influence exerted by the American contingent on the issue of the conflict. It was for this reason that America became the deciding factor in the war.

Between the Argonne and the Meuse the Americans had broken into our positions. They had assembled a powerful army in this region, and their part in the campaign became more and more important. We held their push, however, the 27th being the main day of success for us, while on the 28th, too, we held our lines, apart from certain modifications of our front which were carried out in accordance with our plans.

This latter statement reads like his old war bulletins. Actually, the Americans took the Hindenburg Line on a front of twenty-one miles and a depth of five to seven miles, following it later by the advance to Sedan.

In the end night closed in on the German army and the plans of conquest of the world went down in utter defeat. Of the closing hours after he had resigned Ludendorff writes dramatically:

I went back alone. I did not see his majesty again. After my return to the general staff office I said in bitterest grief to my officers there, among whom was Colonel von Haeften, that in a fortnight there would be no longer an emperor in Germany. They held clearly the same view. On November 9th Germany and Prussia were republics.

On November 9th Germany, lacking any firm hand, bereft of all will, robbed of her princes, collapsed like a house of cards. All that we had lived for, all that we had bled four long years to maintain, was gone. We no longer had a native land of which we might be proud. Order in state and society vanished. All authority disappeared. Chaos, bolshevism, terror, un-German in name and nature, made their entry into the German Fatherland.

Men who had fought magnificently against the enemy lost their nerve and abandoned the army and the country, thinking of nothing but themselves.

The proud German army, after resisting victoriously its superior enemies for four years, achieving feats of unprecedented greatness, and keeping our enemies clear away from our frontiers, disappeared in a moment. Our victorious fleet was handed over to the enemy.

Some of the general's comments are illuminating as the opinion of a high German authority on military and war-time conditions. The high command had its critics, and he retorts:

Words fail to describe the demands that are made of a soldier in battle. To go "over the top" under enemy fire is, indeed, a heroic act, but it is by no means the most difficult. How much resolution and readiness to shoulder responsibility is required of a man who either has to lead or send others to certain death. Those are acts the appalling nature of which no one can imagine who has not himself had to perform them.

All those who criticize the dispositions of a general ought first to study military history, unless they have themselves taken part in a war in a position of command. I should like to see such people compelled to conduct a battle themselves. They would be overwhelmed by the greatness of their task, and when they realized the obscurity of the situation, and the exacting nature of the enormous demands made upon them, they would doubtless be more modest.

Profiteering was the deadliest sin, and our inability to eradicate it was a matter of the greatest regret to me from the point of view of morale at home and in the field. Many times I made an effort to get to the bottom of it. The war profiteer is a loathsome phenomenon, and he and the corruption of his influence have done us incalculable harm.

August 8th was the black day of the German army in the history of this war. This was the worst experience that I had to go through, except for the events that, from September 15th onward, took place on the Bulgarian front and sealed the fate of the Quadruple Alliance.

Early on August 8th, in a dense fog, rendered still thicker by artificial means, the English, mainly with Australian and Canadian divisions, and the French, attacked between Albert and Moreuil with strong squadrons of tanks, but otherwise in no great superiority. Between the Somme and the Luce they penetrated deep into our positions. The divisions in line at that point allowed themselves to be completely overwhelmed. Divisional staffs were surprised in their headquarters by enemy tanks. The breach very soon extended across the Luce stream; the troops that were still gallantly resisting at Moreuil were rolled up.

One looks in vain to find some description of his final campaign of 1918, when he was free to use the whole force of the German army in the west. Why did he attack the British and produce the Amiens and Arras salients in March and April, and then turn south with his attacks to produce the Marne salient? There did not seem to be any plan in his operations, unless in the last attack where he tried to encircle Rheims, when if he had been successful he might have gone farther east to encircle Verdun and thus restore the rapidly waning prestige of the Crown Prince. Perhaps he had no plan except to strike hammer blows anywhere to weaken the enemy.

On July 18th he was caught by surprise on the right flank, and when Foch had gained the heights of Soissons, the American artillery fire broke the only railway lines into the Marne salient. The truth seems to be that this supreme German commander was a general of the second class, and was outwitted and outgeneraled by the French commander, one of the great military men of history.

Ludendorff was the best man Germany produced. He was more than a soldier, as he essayed with some success to direct the civil administration and to rouse the morale at home. He saw the collapse coming and advised peace. Dismissed by the Kaiser, he went home, and into exile after the revolution. He wrote his memoirs in the bitterness of defeat and disgrace. They give a clear statement of the German side of the war told, in general, with apparent truth and candor. The work he undertook was beyond his strength, but one must respect his sincerity, even while disagreeing with his objects.

If we may judge from occasional press dispatches and the addresses of Clemenceau in this country, Ludendorff is not yet through. And if he starts again, there will be added interest in his character and his methods of thought and action as revealed in this very interesting book.

LUDENDORFF'S OWN STORY. In two volumes. New York: Harper & Brothers; $7.50.

BANKING AND INVESTMENT NEWS.

San Francisco bank clearings for the week ending December 9, 1922, were $159,300,000; for the corresponding week of last year, $138,600,000; an increase of $20,700,000.

The bond market is passing through a readjustment phase. Investments which had perhaps been unduly inflated are reacting. Others which had been unjustifiably depressed are recovering, says Commerce and Finance. Movements are apparently inconsistent, but not on that account illogical. Certain rail-assuring to owners of the French external bonds sold in this country.

It would assuredly have been more than strange had not French bonds rallied strongly after such a strong endorsement. Their recovery was one of the features of the investment market.

Much comment and not a little misapprehension was caused by a Supreme Court opinion rendered early in the week affirming the right of the State of Oklahoma to tax Liberty bonds owned by national banks. The first impression created by that decision was that the court referred to income derived from Liberty bonds. Predictions were heard that the ruling would precipitate liquidation of such investments by banks holding upwards of $2,400,000,000 of Federal securities. However, nothing suggesting such liquidation has occurred. After an examination of the decision bankers have reached the opinion that the Supreme Court referred to the capital invested in Liberty bonds, and not to the income derived from them, as being taxable. In the State of New York such a tax has been levied and has never been questioned by banks. Other states also have levied a similar tax without challenge. It is generally conceded that banks are not entitled to deduction in taxes on capital invested in Liberty bonds. The theory that banks would switch from Liberties to other tax-exempt securities is scouted because the Supreme Court ruling in question specifies "Liberty bonds or other forms of tax-exempt securities." In other words the court does not discriminate against government bonds.

The market for government issues is waiting for news on the new treasury financing which should be forthcoming very soon. Current quotations for Liberties and U. S. refunding bonds preclude another offering of long-term bonds. The treasury is restricted by law to a maximum coupon rate of 4 1/2 per cent. It could not sell a long-term bond bearing so low a rate with outstanding long-term 4 1/2 per cent. bonds quoted below par. The sole alternative appears to be an issue of short-term notes. Wall Street expects an offering of notes to run from three to five years in an amount of approximately $500,000,000. Such an issue should find a ready market and solve the government's problem.

Besides refunding approximately $1,000,000,000 Victory notes the government in January will redeem about $625,000,000 in principal and interest of U. S. war savings certificates of 1918 either in cash or in new certificates of the 1923 series. A strong effort is to be made to prevent the dissipation of that large sum by holders of the certificates who are largely of the wage-earning class. Banking institutions, particularly those with savings institutions, have been authorized to receive certificates for deposit and will render their services gratuitously just as they did when the certificates were sold.

New emissions last week were small, reaching only $20,265,000. The decline in offerings was due to various reasons, one being the fact that investment banking firms still have a good many undigested new bonds on their hands which they are trying to dispose of. The syndicate which floated the Jugo-Slavian issue last summer will be dissolved this week. It has remaining on its hands $9,750,000, but the Jugo-Slav government will take back any surplus.

A feature of the new financing last week was the small volume of municipals offered. It totaled only $1,265,000. The market for municipal bonds is oversold and prices are easier with demand light. Bankers were somewhat surprised to learn that most of the state bonus bills referred to voters for approval on election day were approved. New authorizations total $116,500,000. Dealers point to the possibility that the market for state obligations will be flooded.

A decline of 25 per cent. in iron and steel production in September, a heavy falling off in railroad earnings, and a general halt to the industrial recovery all on account of the strike by coal miners emphasizes just what an important rôle fuel plays in the everyday life of the country. Obviously a solution must be found to a problem where the cessation of operations by one group of labor can so seriously interfere with the earning power of the entire nation. Moreover, the supply of coal is not inexhaustible, and while there is not yet any occasion to be alarmed over failing resources it is not too soon to begin conserving for industries in which this natural product is absolutely essential. The more important consideration is the substitution of a dependable and cheaper source of energy. This is found in water power.

Developed water power in the United States is given by the United States Geological Survey at slightly under 8,000,000 horsepower, the compilation including plants of 100 horsepower or higher. Of this figure about 85 per cent. is represented by the public utility industry. Estimates of undeveloped water power place the total at 50,000,000 horsepower, but by making provision for storage the resources can be increased to 100,000,000 or 200,000,000 horsepower. This power converted into electrical energy is capable of turning every industrial wheel and illuminating every street and building in the United States. Development of the 50,000,000 readily available horsepower would be equivalent to saving about 275,000,000 tons of coal per annum. In addition to the actual saving of coal, there would be a tremendous saving in labor and railroad freight car capacity. Our annual consumption of coal requires the labor of 1,500,000 men and the use of over 1,000,000 freight cars and 40,000 locomotives. Electrification of the steam railroads would save approximately 20 per cent. of the present coal consumption.

Another factor which is certain to be of prime importance in bringing about hydro-electric development is the impartial distribution of the resources. Regions distant from the source of coal are well supplied with water power. New England, the Southwest, and the Pacific slope embrace about one-half the water power resources of the country and are all virtually without coal. The reason for the slow water power development is the high initial cost together with the fact that, until the present, coal and oil have been easily available.

A few of the more important hydro-electric power corporations are considered here. Several of these are not exclusively hydro-electric, but the preponderance of electric generation is hydro-electric. The securities of these companies have futures which are worthy of attention. The next few years are certain to see marked development in this field with the hydro-electric industry working into one of the most important in the country. Pacific Gas & Electric is a large unit which is not included in this list, but which was recently discussed here.

The Great Western Power Company of California, which controls the California Electric Generating Company, operates two principal hydro-electric plants, the Big Bend station having an installed capacity of 87,000 horsepower, and the Caribou station 64,000 horsepower. The ultimate capacity of the latter station is 192,000 horsepower, which may be obtained by duplicating the water supply tunnels. The main point is that the water resources are considerably in excess of present requirements, and the work of constructing a dam and impounding the water is completed. 165,000-volt lines transmit the power 200 miles to San Francisco. The preferred dividend requirement has been earned about three

Sixty-five Sutter Street

BONDS

Ask to be placed on our mailing list for monthly circular and for data regarding various bond issues.

STEPHENS &amp; COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO OAKLAND
Los Angeles San Diego

times over on the average for the last five years.

The Montana Power Company has developed 282,010 horsepower of hydro-electric plants and has an additional undeveloped site of 162,400 horsepower. Under a ninety-nine-year contract with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, the company furnishes

$980—plus accrued interest, will yield $60.00 yearly in

TOOLE COUNTY
IRRIGATION DISTRICT
6% GOLD BONDS

Exempt from all Federal Income Taxes

Phone Sutter 334

G. E. MILLER &amp; COMPANY

105 Montgomery St. 229 First Nat. Bank Bldg.
SAN FRANCISCO OAKLAND

PORTLAND SEATTLE
BONDS Gov't Mun. Corp.
SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES

26,600 horsepower, and the railway has an additional option up to 40,000 horsepower. The company also has a contract with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company for 40,000

Private Wires
Coast to Coast

E. F. Hutton &amp; Co.

MEMBERS
NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE
HUTTON BUILDING
Montgomery and Bush Sts.
HOTEL ST. FRANCISCO
DEL MONTE HOTEL

FOR CHRISTMAS
A GOOD BOND

In $100 and $500 Denominations

Get your children started right on savings and investments.

Send for Special Offering

FREEMAN
SMITH
&
CAMP
CO.

SECOND FLOOR
FIRST NATIONAL BANK BLDG.
Douglas 2121

road issues of the speculative class had been marked up too high. They have been reacting. Liberty bonds have held up well. Foreign bonds have been strong.

One of the most interesting incidents of the last week was the endorsement of French bonds by Charles E. Mitchell, president of the National City Bank. Mr. Mitchell is essentially an investment banker. He made his reputation as head of the National City Com-

H. M. Hinchman W. B. Wentz W. L. W. Miller

Hinchman, Wentz & Miller
General Agents

Fire
Automobile

INSURANCE

Liability
Plate Glass
Compensation

30 Leidesdorf St. SAN FRANCISCO
Telephone Sutter 437

pany, which is the securities subsidiary of the National City Bank. His promotion to the head of the biggest national bank in the country was the sequel to his great record as head of the largest investment company in the United States. He has just returned from a trip to Europe, where he made a study of economic conditions. When a banker of his experience and standing declares that "French bonds held by American investors are a safe and sound investment," his words mean something. Mr. Mitchell said last week that French bonds represent a ridiculously low credit rating, and backed up his statement with facts and figures which should prove re-

GEARY, MEIGS &amp; CO.

Investment Bonds

California Commercial Union Bldg.

Garfield 3450 SAN FRANCISCO

McDONNELL &amp; Co.

And Other Leading Exchanges

633 Market St., at New Montgomery

SAN FRANCISCO

TELEPHONE SUTTER 7676

N. Y. Office, 120 Broadway

Los Angeles, 634 So. Spring St.

PRIVATE WIRES

CARSTENS &amp; EARLES, INCORPORATED

GOVERNMENT, MUNICIPAL
AND CORPORATION BONDS

ESTABLISHED 1891

Ground Floor

California Commercial Union Building
San Francisco

Telephone Douglas 6050

SEATTLE LOS ANGELES SPOKANE SAN FRANCISCO

Securities of

CITIES SERVICE CO.

and Subsidiaries

BOUGHT—SOLD—QUOTED

HENRY L. DOHERTY &amp; CO.

60 Wall Street

NEW YORK

SAN FRANCISCO

433 California Street

Telephone Douglas 6384

9 Moorgate St.

LONDON

"The Review"CONTENTS:
(December Issue)

France at Bay

Immigration Problems

Italy's
Surprise PacketMeddling
With Railroads

Copy mailed on request by

STRASSBURGER
& COMPANY133 Montgomery Street - San Francisco
Telephone Douglas 2220

Company, Atlas Portland Cement Company, and others. The present generating capacity of the fifteen units is 150,000 horsepower and the sub-structure is completed for doubling the capacity. A striking example of the economy of hydro-electric generation is found here. It is estimated that last year's output by steam power would have required 3500 men for mining and transportation of the necessary coal and for plant operation, against 225 actually employed.

The Niagara Falls Power Company owns two plants on the American side and one on the Canadian side of the Niagara River. The aggregate generating installation amounts to about 500,000 horsepower, but owing to present restriction on the use of water the output is limited to about 425,000 horsepower. However, by a special Federal license, 200,000 additional horsepower will be developed, construction work at a cost of over $11,000,000 now being under way.

The Shawinigan Water & Power Company has a developed generating capacity of 333,700 horsepower and has a total ultimate capacity of 643,700 horsepower. The water power sites are on the St. Maurice River about equidistant from Montreal and Quebec. Practically all of the large cities in the Province of Quebec are served. The company has interest in a number of concerns including Montreal Lighting & Power, Continental Heat & Light Company, the Canadian Carbide, Three Rivers Traction Company, etc. For the last six years earnings applicable to the capital stock have ranged from a low of 8.63 per cent. to a high of 9.05 per cent.

The Southern California Edison Company has developed a generating capacity of 376,700 horsepower, but this is comparatively insignificant when viewed in the light of future possibilities. The company is contemplating developing the water power resources of the Colorado River, the potential energy of which is estimated at approximately 4,350,000 horsepower. The project will cost close to $800,000,000, or twice that of the Panama Canal, and will, of course, take many years to accomplish. Meanwhile other work is being carried out, the construction budget for 1922 being $22,534,000. The fact that large sums are tied up which are not yet productive narrows the margin of safety for the common dividend. The present rate is being covered at this time, however, and because new capital will be needed from time to time it is likely that payments will be maintained.—Forbes Magazine.

Impressive figures testifying to the character of the Southern Pacific's transportation service, and comparing it with that of the Union Pacific, were presented by J. Kruttschnitt, chairman of the executive committee of the board of directors, Southern Pacific Company, at the Interstate Commerce Commission hearing now in progress on the application of the Southern Pacific to lease the Central Pacific. This testimony, given on cross-examination, referred to the statement by Union Pacific "propagandists" that the separation "would make every railroad coming into San Francisco stand on its toes as to business efficiency."

Regarding this statement Mr. Kruttschnitt said:

"In 1921 the following data established the relative 'business efficiencies' of Southern Pacific and Union Pacific. Remember that the Union Pacific's main line is substantially all double-tracked with curvature and grade rates much lighter than on the Southern Pacific, whose long, steep grades, combined with sharp curves, over the Sierra Nevada, Siskiyou, and Tehachapi mountains probably present the most difficult operating problems in the world on heavy traffic lines. Notwithstanding the handicaps we have mentioned, Southern Pacific freight locomotives made 8.82 per cent. more mileage daily than did those of Union Pacific.

"Southern Pacific passenger locomotives ran 9 1/4 per cent. more miles daily than did those on Union Pacific, with 30 per cent. more passengers per train, suburban passengers excluded.

"Notwithstanding lighter grades, Union Pacific consumed 10 1/4 per cent. more fuel to move the same number of ton miles.

"Notwithstanding lighter grades, Union Pacific burned 17 per cent. more fuel to move the same number of passenger car miles. Southern Pacific's equation of oil to coal such as Union Pacific uses gives the coal 4 per cent. advantage over oil.

"Proceeding a step further, the regularity of movement of traffic, passenger and freight, through Ogden shows the superiority of service rendered the public by Southern Pacific over Union Pacific.

"Percentage of on-time deliveries of trains at Ogden:

| PASSENGER TRAINS.   |       | 1921.     | 1922               |
|---------------------|-------|-----------|--------------------|
| By Southern Pacific | ..... | 93.9 pct. | (6 mos.) 96.1 pct. |
| By Union Pacific    | ..... | 73.2 pct. | 80.3 pct.          |

| MANIFEST FREIGHT TRAINS. |       | 1921.     | 1922               |
|--------------------------|-------|-----------|--------------------|
| By Southern Pacific      | ..... | 92.1 pct. | (6 mos.) 96.1 pct. |
| By Union Pacific         | ..... | 79.2 pct. | 88.0 pct.          |

"Perishable freight trains between Roseville, California, and Council Bluffs, Iowa, made schedule time over Southern Pacific-Union Pacific thus:

|                     |       | 1921.   | 1922             |
|---------------------|-------|---------|------------------|
| By Southern Pacific | ..... | 90 pct. | (6 mos.) 94 pct. |
| By Union Pacific    | ..... | 60 pct. | 50 pct.          |

"The movements over Southern Pacific being on single track and on Union Pacific on double track with sharp curves and rates of grade very much against Southern Pacific.

"During the shopen's strike Southern Pacific placed embargoes on livestock and perishables for but two periods of twenty-three and forty-four hours respectively and annulled no passenger trains. Union Pacific embargoed livestock and perishables at all California junctions for six days and were unable to move passenger trains for four days, on which Southern Pacific assisted them by handling their passengers to destination. For several days during the strike the Southern Pacific lines afforded the public the only means to move freight and passengers by rail out of California. In face of these tests of efficient organization and management much superior to those of its covetous traducer, not only it would not benefit, but it would inflict great and unjustifiable injury on the public to lower the excellence of its service by turning any part of the Southern Pacific system over to the Union Pacific."

The first Arizona irrigation district bond offering to be certified as a legal investment for savings banks of that state will be offered to local investors within the next few weeks. The purchase of this unusual offering has just been consummated by Bradford, Kimball & Co. of San Francisco and Drake, Riley & Thomas and Stevens, Page & Sterling of Los Angeles.

Mr. Sherman Kimball of Bradford, Kimball & Co., who has just returned from an extended trip through Arizona, comments most favorably on the rigid requirements of the Arizona bond commission, compliance with which serves to give this issue, in his opinion, an unusually high degree of safety. The additional fact that it is the only one of its kind yet offered that has met with the

The Foundation of All Security is the Farm, which produces the essentials of Human Existence.

The Irrigation District Municipal Bonds underwritten and distributed by J. R. Mason & Co., are payable from direct unlimited ad valorem taxes against the richest and most attractive agricultural lands in the entire West. Such taxes are of equal importance in point of lien with other taxes.

These bonds afford holders the same exemption from all Federal taxation as First Liberty 3 1/2's, yet they yield from 4 1/2 to 6.25%.

In gathering together and making available the surplus funds of individual investors, savings banks and insurance companies, both large and small, for the purpose of such constructive public endeavor, it has for many years been the privilege of J. R. Mason & Co. to aid in the up-building and progress of San Francisco's back country.

Funds invested in these bonds are doubly productive since they add to the earning power and comfort of those who borrow as well as those who lend, while the entire community is also materially benefited.

Upon request we shall be pleased to submit our current list of attractive offerings.

J. R. Mason & Co.
Specialists In Irrigation District Bonds
Merchants' Exchange
Telephone Sutter 6620

Safeguarding Investments

Securities, no matter how stable, are always subject to changing value. Therefore, ready access to accurate and timely market information is a very necessary factor in investment procedure.

The watchful interest and co-operation of our personnel, our complete chronological statistical files and fast private wires to all important Eastern and Canadian centers make Sutor investment service second to none.

SUTRO & CO.

ESTABLISHED 1858
410 MONTGOMERY STREET
SUTTER 3434
Members of the San Francisco Stock and Bond Exchange

strict requirements of the commission should make it of especial interest to investors.

Mr. Kimball and other members of the party report Arizona in a gradually increasing condition of prosperity. Banking conditions and the cattle industry particularly have shown marked improvement throughout the country. Farmers generally are again making money. Much construction is under way

INVESTMENT SECURITIES

Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds for the investment of Banks, Trust Companies and Individuals

Inquiries invited

HUNTER, DULIN & Co.

256 MONTGOMERY ST.
Telephone Douglas 106
SAN FRANCISCO

Los Angeles Pasadena Oakland Office 506 Syndicate Bldg. Santa Barbara San Diego

throughout the state, particularly in Tucson and Phoenix, and business conditions may be termed brisk and satisfactory.

Most of the nitrate factories in Chili are now in British hands. Before the war Germany took 40 per cent. of the exports for use in her beet fields.

INVESTMENT SECURITIES

COMMERCIAL PAPER
AND ACCEPTANCES
—
GOVERNMENT MUNICIPAL
AND CORPORATION BONDS

BOND & GOODWIN & TUCKER
AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES SEATTLE PORTLAND

horsepower. The yield on the common stock is low at present, which indicates possibilities of a dividend increase. Resumption of operations in the mining industry will result in a tremendous increase in the demand for power. Such resumption as has already taken place has resulted in an increase of 80 per cent. in earnings applicable to the common stock for the first nine months of 1922 over the corresponding period of 1921.

In 1905 President Roosevelt signed a bill

BONDS

$850,000

Fifth Street Building

First Mortgage 6% Gold Bonds

(Secured on a 99-Year Leasehold Estate)

Due Serially 1925-47

George H. Burr & Co.

KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

NEW YORK LOS ANGELES CLEVELAND
BOSTON ATLANTA DETROIT
PHILADELPHIA CHICAGO PITTSBURG
SCRANTON ST. LOUIS SEATTLE

"A National Yet Personal Service"

authorizing the construction of a dam in the Mississippi at Keokuk, and from the water impounded by this a large part of the city of St. Louis is supplied with electrical energy. The Mississippi River Power Company disposes of its current at wholesale, 60,000 horsepower going to St. Louis, with small proportions to the Central Illinois Public Service Company, the North Missouri Light & Power

Yields 6 1/2%

SANTA CLARA Valley Land Company bonds are secured by a closed first mortgage on real estate desirable for residences and for fruit raising; located on the west side of the Santa Clara Valley; appraised at approximately three times the total bonded indebtedness.

Maturity, 1932

WM. R. STAATS CO.

Established 1887

Alexander Bldg., Montgomery St., cor. of Bush
SAN FRANCISCO
Telephone Kearny 301

LOS ANGELES SAN DIEGO PASADENA

EDSELL, BUTLER & BROWN RIGG

Stocks and Bonds

Members San Francisco Stock Exchange

1040 Mills Building
SAN FRANCISCO

Sutter 2888

BOOKS ON THE TABLE.

Alexander's Bridge.

Miss Cather has criticized so well her first novel, "Alexander's Bridge," in the preface to the new edition that it is almost superfluous and impertinent to add anything to her own critique. But we claim the great national right to express our opinion as a "reaction"—to quote the substance of Mr. Nevinson's analysis of American character. According to that eminent London editor, our countrymen are entitled to abstract reactions, if not chemical ones.

Miss Cather's adverse criticism of "Alexander's Bridge" is that, since it was a first novel, the author was more concerned with technic than subject matter, and also, for the same reason, she was objective in her treatment. Our adverse criticism is that because the author was very young and knew life only through doubtfully dependable lenses of imagination and intuition, she has done the inevitable and generalized about her characters and their actions. "Alexander's Bridge," as is almost always the case with young novels, is thematic. The youthful thinker has a number of ideas and one rather than another is selected for novelization—a fairly safe cue for a beginner's novel, as all he need do is keep the theme well in mind and shape his dramatis personæ accordingly. But the generalization thus affected does not synthesize life. It is an exercise in theory and in both the writing and reading is a pleasant pastime, but not great art. "Alexander's Bridge" has the lifelikeness of a well-posed camera "character" study: in other words it is idealistic.

Needless to say, Miss Cather's first book was very superior to most beginner's luck. It is even intrinsically worth reading. But its greatest interest lies in its contrast with the later and very different work of its author and in the exposition thus afforded between a well done literary exercise and such works of art as "My Antonia" and "One of Ours." As a lesson in critical analysis it is invaluable.

R. G.

ALEXANDER'S BRIDGE. By Willa S. Cather. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; $1.50.

To Tell You the Truth.

Leonard Merrick's fancy seems unimproved by his generous donations of it in the past and "To Tell You the Truth" is as good as, better perhaps than, any of his former work. Long ago Barrie pronounced Merrick the prince among contemporary story-tellers in a phrase that escapes our memory, but it was in the superlative degree. And Merrick has somehow always lived up to that high encomium. Like Chesterton, who has a formula for cleverness, Merrick has a magic recipe for a good story, but unlike G. K. C., his magic is concealed. No sedulous imitating will reproduce the Merrick twist, which is often so slight and rapid as to suggest sleight-of-hand—though that phrase is awkwardly suggestive of charlatanism, and nothing could be further from Merrick's honesty of purpose. For example, in "A Portrait of a Coward" he pours into a typically brief yarn—for Merrick is a veritable "short" story writer—all the wavering and indecision that in another direction has warranted a volume of exposition on the part of Mark Sabre's character.

However, "A Portrait of a Coward" is un-Merrickesque and the presence in this same volume of others of—for the effervescent Leonard—unwonted seriousness imply that the days of Tricotin, Pitou, and their ilk are over. Though no one should overlook the fact that Merrick's treatment of that most betinted and camouflaged of worlds, the "Quartier," with both reality and humor is his particular contribution to English fiction. By common consent, unanimous but for Merrick, the Quartier Latin and our own Greenwich Village should be rendered either sordidly or farcically. Merrick, even more than the author of "La Vie de Bohème," is the historian of the former. Still it must be confessed the Bohemian stories in the present volume are not so good as the others—"The Statue," for instance, is obviously worked, whereas the English stories of "The Celebrity at Home" and the "Portrait of a Coward" are among the best. "La Vie de Bohème" has evidently palled on even its loving historian. Merrick has tapped a new vein of pathos and human futility. Formerly he might have made novels of them. Nowadays he does not dilute the cream of his fancy with superfluous words.

TO TELL YOU THE TRUTH. By Leonard Merrick. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $1.90.

Right Royal.

Holiday editions are the order of the season, and while some of them are very, very good, others, while not exactly horrid, are at least dispensable. One of the best is

A CRITICAL FABLE

Who Wrote It?

HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA

THE AMERICAN PERIOD

By Robert G. Cleland

Is ready and completes our history of the state.

The first volume is

HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA

THE SPANISH PERIOD

By Charles E. Chapman

Price $4.00 Each

The Macmillan Company
Publishers San Francisco

the new illustrated edition of Masfield's great racing poem, "Right Royal," which was published sans color plates and line drawings two years ago and now appears fully supplied with those assets. These decorations, which are by the horse and sporting painter, Cecil Alden, serve the double purpose of further endearing the book to its old train of admirers and of recruiting fresh cohorts. The latter should be the most thankful of all, as any who have not read "Right Royal" have missed, we maintain, one of the greatest vicarious thrills in literature. To follow the perilous chase of Charles Cothill "In the English 'Chasers' Cup on Compton Course," through Masfield's stirring, cantering rhymes, which we like not a whit the less because they are sometimes singsongy jingles that merely serve to carry the story forward, is more exciting than to watch a pretty stiff race in the flesh. That is where art goes nature one better. Human observation helped out by field glasses would not suffice to get all the glamour of danger, the risk and terror that Mr. Masfield serves us in an hour's loll in an armchair. "Right Royal" is the right real thing. Having read it, one wonders why the less inspired scribe dares manipulate a universal keyboard. It is enough to make him give up in despair.

RIGHT ROYAL. By John Masfield. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.50.

The Duttons have prepared a list of books suitable for holiday gifts and will mail it to any one making the request.

Women in Love

By H. D. Lawrence

This great masterpiece, formerly $15, in a new, unabridged edition. $2.50

Casanova's Homecoming

By ARTHUR SCHNITZLER

Heywood Brown: "A glorious piece of work." Formerly $10, in popular-priced unabridged edition at $2.50

A Young Girl's Diary

$5.00

Judge George W. Simpson

rendered the following verdict upon the above three books attacked by the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice:

"I have read these books with sedulous care. I find each is a distinct contribution to the literature of the day. Each deals with one or another of the phases of present thought."

THOMAS SELTZER

5 W. 50th Street

New York

BONESTELL & CO. PAPER

The paper used in printing The Argonaut is furnished by us
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna,
San Francisco

Bonds

for Investment

MUNICIPALS IRRIGATION DISTRICTS CORPORATIONS

Specialists in Safety

Anglo London Paris Company

One Sansome Street San Francisco
Phone Kearny 5600

The French American Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO

108 SUTTER STREET

Commercial—Checking—Savings

Resources Over $16,000,000

A General Banking Business Transacted
Commercial and Personal Checking
Accounts Solicited

Savings Accounts receive interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum

SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES $3.50

OFFICERS

Leon Bocqueraz ..... President
J. M. Dupas ..... Vice-President
J. A. Bergerot ..... Vice-President
W. F. Duffy ..... Vice-Pres. and Cashier
A. Bousquet ..... Secretary
J. T. Irilary ..... Asst. Cashier
Chas. L. Ebner, Jr. .... Asst. Cashier

The San Francisco Savings and Loan Society

(THE SAN FRANCISCO BANK)

SAVINGS COMMERCIAL

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

MISSION BRANCH ..... Mission and 21st Streets
PARK-PRESTO DISTRICT BRANCH ..... Clement and 7th Ave.
HAIGHT STREET BRANCH ..... Haight and Belvedere Streets
June 30th, 1922

Assets ..... $76,170,177.18
Deposits ..... 72,470,177.18
Capital Actually Paid Up ..... 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds ..... 2,700,000.00
Employee's Pension Fund ..... 385,984.61

A dividend to depositors of FOUR AND ONE-QUARTER (4 1/4) per cent. per annum was declared for the six months ending June 30th, 1922.

Houghton Mifflin Make Good

Company's Books Christmas Gifts

THE LETTERS OF FRANKLIN K. LANE

An appropriate gift for any one.

"Among the great letters of literature. . . . Neither controversial nor critical, but full of warm human interest, friendliness and a generous appreciation of others."—Baltimore Sun. Illus., $5.00.

JOHN BUCHAN'S HISTORY OF THE GREAT WAR

A permanent book for every private library.

"You can read this history as easily and with as much interest as you can read a novel."—Country Life. "A history that ranks as a classic."—London Bookman. With an introduction by Maj.-Gen. Harbord. Frontispiece in color and 78 maps. 4 vols., boxed, $20.00.

GLIMPSES OF AUTHORS

For the man or woman interested in books.

Caroline Ticknor

"A charming volume of literary reminiscences. Miss Ticknor tells new and delightful stories about authors."—Christian Science Monitor. Illus., $3.50.

GEORGE WASHINGTON

For those who enjoy biography or history.

William R. Thayer

"A thoroughly readable estimate by the talented biographer of Cavour, Roosevelt and Hay."—New York Times. Illus., $3.50.

E. H. HARRIMAN

A perfect gift for the business man.

George Kennan

"A thrillingly interesting history of the great business struggle of thirty years in which Mr. Harriman played so vital a part."—New York Sun. Illus., 2 vols., $7.50.

INCA LAND

Every one likes a good travel book.

Hiram Bingham

An absorbing story of Peruvian explorations and of the finding of a wonderful Inca city, "the greatest archaeological discovery of the age." Illus., $5.00.

DENIZENS OF THE DESERT

For the traveler and naturalist.

Edmund C. Jaeger

This account of the birds, mammals, reptiles and insects of the Southwestern desert is both authoritative and intensely interesting. Lavishly illus., $3.00.

THE LAST HARVEST

For the nature lover.

John Burrough

A final collection of essays by America's great naturalist. "Contains his ripest, most carefully matured thoughts."—Christian Register. $2.00.

CAPTAIN BLOOD

For lovers of romance.

Rafael Sabatin

"A supremely absorbing yarn with a thrill on every page."—Boston Herald. Wyeth frontispiece. $2.00.

THE SWISS TWINS

For children of
5 to 12.

Lucy Fitch Perkin

A new volume to delight the hearts of thousands of boys and girls who have found in the Twin Series the very nicest of all their bookland friends. Illus., $1.75.

THE WAY OF POETRY

For boys and girls of all ages.

John Drinkwater

This anthology by a famous English poet includes 200 choice selections from the earliest times to the present day. $2.00.

SADDLE SONGS

Poems of the West.

H. H. Knibbs

"There is a swing and vigor in his stuff that appeals to the primitive in all of us."—Robert Frothingham. By the author of "Songs of the Trail." $1.50.

Send to 612 Howard St., San Francisco, for Our Free
Holiday Bulletin

SAN FRANCISCO BANKS STRONG.

Bank Clearings Larger than Last Year During Each Month.

By H. H. MACDONALD

San Francisco commercial banks have remained in a particularly favorable situation, in comparison with the rest of the country generally, throughout all the changes in financial conditions that have attended the course of American business since the armistice. They shared the effects of the boom and then the drastic reaction that followed, but they met successfully all the requirements of a situation marked by falling prices, business depression, and the frozen credits bestowed by the inflation. They shared the economic doubts and questionings of the periods of decline and readjustment, but easily absorbed some necessary losses, sustained fundamentally sound business enterprises in temporary trouble, unitedly maintained confidence and felt the strain less severely than Eastern financial centres. As the tide turned they were in a very strong position and emerged into the brighter days of 1922 sound and safe and able to meet all legitimate demands of the business world.

California has been blessed with a high degree of prosperity this year, with excellent crops, a great volume of building, and widely revived industrial activity. The consequent large exchange of commodities has rapidly increased the turnover of business credits in the banks during recent months, providing renewed expansion of profitable operations. The season crop financing is passing without strain and the situation of the banks has become so easy that rediscounts at the Federal Reserve Bank have fallen to a minimum.

The scale of the banking business in San Francisco is indicated at a glance by the following figures from the reports of national and state banks on September 15th, the latest report as this is written:

| Loans.                    | Deposits.     | Resources.    |
|---------------------------|---------------|---------------|
| National... $190,622,000 | $290,754,000 | $382,065,000 |
| State.... 394,866,000     | 634,487,000   | 726,423,000   |

In the twelve months from September 6, 1921, the resources of the national banks increased over $30,000,000. Demand deposits, representing the direct financing of commercial business, increased $27,000,000, the increase occurring mainly in recent months. Gross deposits grew by $63,000,000. The volume of loans receded a little during the year.

While the state banks are steadily expanding their commercial operations, much the greatest portion of their business in San Francisco, as in the state as a whole, belongs to the savings phase of banking, and the remarkable record of the city and state in savings deposits keeps rapidly growing. The savings deposits of the state banks of the city reached $450,262,730 September 15th. The greater part of this huge amount, brought together in small sums by the thrifty, is loaned on mortgages for building purposes or helps provide home capital for our great public utilities through investment in their high-grade bonds. A good deal is also invested in municipal bonds. The gross savings deposits of all California state banks amount to over $1,000,000,000. Real estate loans of San Francisco savings banks reach about $242,000,000. There is $66,000,000 invested in United States bonds and $106,000,000 in other securities.

The accompanying table, summarizing the condition of the state banks of the city, shows that the gross deposits in all three departments were $634,407,000 in September, an increase of nearly ten million dollars from the previous June. May 5th last the total was $605,000,000.

Bank clearings have been larger than last year during nearly every month, increasing during the heavy crop-moving season. The record for the ten months to October 31st was about $5,980,000,000, indicating a yearly total of somewhat less than $8,000,000,000, compared with $6,629,000,000 in 1921, $8,122,000,000 in 1920, and $7,286,300,000 in 1919. The following is the record for the current year to November, in round numbers: January, $581,517,000; February, $494,851,000; March, $592,269,000; April, $577,206,000; May, $601,170,000; June, $593,339,000; July $588,785,000; August, $623,066,000; September, $639,915,000; October, $687,867,000.

An important move to assist in financing our foreign trade with the Orient is being made by some of the large banks of San Francisco and other Coast centres. There has been organized the Federal Pacific Banking Corporation, in which foreign banking capital is reported to be participating, and a preliminary authorization has been issued by the Federal Reserve Board. This institution is being organized under the Edge Act, which allows national banks to subscribe to the capital stock of the special banking corporations provided for by the act, for the purpose of financing long-term commercial credits in the foreign trade field. The plan is to open branches in Japan, China, and the Philippines and also to establish agencies in the Far East. This will be the first Edge Act corporation to enter the Far Eastern field and the first to establish foreign branches. The high hopes attached to the Edge Act when it passed have not been realized to any considerable extent, progress having been nipped at the start by the slump and confusion following the foreign trade boom of 1919 and 1920. It will be interesting to bankers and exporters to watch the operation of the new institution. Headquarters are temporarily in Washington, but will be in San Francisco when ready for operation.

The tendency toward bank mergers is still strong throughout the country, and of such consolidations of competing or complementary institutions San Francisco is having its full share from year to year, creating fewer but stronger banks, able to give larger and more efficient and varied service. For months there has been a sustained public interest in the contested effort to effect a merger of the Crocker and the First National banks, and the issue will likely be decided at the annual meetings in January. These are old and strong institutions which seem particularly fitted for union.

The coming year promises to see another important transformation in the banking field with the expected carrying out of plans to amalgamate the Merchants National with the Sacramento-San Joaquin Bank of Sacramento, the latter being the result of absorptions of established banks in Sacramento, Stockton, Fresno, Modesto and Oakdale. The result will be a very strong institution operating from several of the largest business centres of Central California and it might be expected to plant itself in still wider territory.

A remarkable development of the year in San Francisco banking has been the rapid multiplication of branches by leading San Francisco state banks, the number doubling in about a year and reaching eighty-two in September, with a good many more coming. There are two phases to this plan of extending operations. One is the establishing of branch offices in the home city, fully equipped for banking service and located both in the

COMPARATIVE SUMMARY OF CONDITION OF SAN FRANCISCO STATE BANKS

| Commercial Departments—                 | June 30, 1922. | Sept. 15, 1922. |
|---|----------------|-----------------|
| Assets .....                            | $222,431,811  | $241,265,736   |
| Loans .....                             | 124,583,766    | 130,947,261     |
| Bonds .....                             | 26,875,096     | 35,891,996      |
| Cash & Sight Exchange .....             | 49,475,774     | 51,810,082      |
| Bills Payable and Re-discounts .....    | 2,830,867      | 7,109,682       |
| Capital and Surplus .....               | 27,792,739     | 31,663,833      |
| Gross Deposits .....                    | 177,032,996    | 184,224,473     |
| Savings Departments—                    |                |                 |
| Assets .....                            | 471,220,198    | 482,068,854     |
| Loans .....                             | 256,097,479    | 263,918,899     |
| Bonds .....                             | 170,868,891    | 172,247,965     |
| Cash & Sight Exchange .....             | 32,968,346     | 31,890,889      |
| Bills Payable and Re-discounts .....    | .....          | 287,500         |
| Capital and Surplus .....               | 20,240,864     | 23,799,365      |
| Gross Deposits .....                    | 447,560,689    | 450,262,730     |
| Commercial, Savings and Trust Combined— |                |                 |
| Assets .....                            | 696,734,528    | 726,422,771     |
| Loans .....                             | 380,681,245    | 394,866,160     |
| Bonds .....                             | 199,459,668    | 209,830,359     |
| Cash & Sight Exchange .....             | 82,593,115     | 83,888,647      |
| Bills Payable and Re-discounts .....    | 2,830,867      | 7,397,182       |
| Capital and Surplus .....               | 50,843,603     | 58,273,198      |
| Gross Deposits .....                    | 624,593,685    | 634,487,204     |

main business district and in the populous residence and local business sections. The other phase is the absorption by purchase of established banks in interior towns and incorporating them with the main institution as branches. Both sorts are legally the same. San Francisco and Los Angeles are the main centres of this development, but many other banks of larger size in interior cities are following the plan.

This is a comparatively recent tendency on the part of American banks that has become widespread in the large cities of the country. There have always been some branches of larger banks, as well as chains of banks, separate in organization but under the same control, but the extent of the recent movement makes it a striking and rather revolutionary one. National banks are not permitted to establish branches in other towns, but state banks having such branches may enter the national system and retain them, as the Bank of California did—in Portland, Seattle, and Tacoma. The comptroller of the currency favors allowing national banks to have branch offices in their own home cities and thinks that they may do so without further legislation, but a bill to that end is now pending in Congress. It is argued that national banks should be enabled to compete with state banks in this way, but there is much opposition, and interior bankers are particularly opposed to any possible invasion by great metropolitan banks which might develop a concentration of American banking in a comparatively few hands, somewhat in the way banking is organized in Canada, Great Britain, and other European countries, a few great institutions covering the country with hundreds of branches each. At the recent New York convention of the American Bankers' Association this was the one warm practical issue, and the interior bankers carried a resolution condemning the practice and principles. A com-

A LOGICAL CHOICE IN MATTERS OF TRUST

IN the past it was the custom to saddle a personal friend with the burden of acting as executor and trustee of one's estate. Experience has proved that the competent individual is already too heavily encumbered with his own business to handle, with the fullest measure of success, the affairs of another.

Therefore it is logical for you to select this bank to act for you in such matters. It is an old California institution, as much a part of the State as her mountains and forests. It is here to protect her people and extend to them the benefit of its integrity, strength and experience.

The BANK of CALIFORNIA

COMPLETE
BANKING SERVICE
COMMERCIAL
TRUST
4% TIME
ACCOUNTS

National Association

(A NATIONAL BANK)

San Francisco

SEATTLE
PORTLAND
TACOMA

"Associated for three generations with the best progress of the West"

The Crocker National Bank of San Francisco

Assets

$49,686,329.92

Capital, Surplus and Undivided Profits

$8,597,667.55

Deposits

$34,806,893.05

OFFICERS

|                       |                                  |
|-----------------------|----------------------------------|
| WM. H. CROCKER.....   | President                        |
| JAS. J. FAGAN.....    | Vice-President                   |
| W. GREGG.....         | Vice-President                   |
| J. B. McCARGAR.....   | Vice-President                   |
| WM. W. CROCKER.....   | Vice-President                   |
| F. G. WILLIS.....     | Cashier                          |
| G. W. EBNER.....      | Assistant Cashier                |
| H. C. SIMPSON.....    | Manager Foreign Department       |
| H. H. HAIGHT.....     | Asst. Manager Foreign Department |
| G. FERIS BALDWIN..... | Auditor                          |
| B. D. DEAN.....       | Assistant Cashier                |
| J. M. MASTEN.....     | Assistant Cashier                |
| D. J. MURPHY.....     | Assistant Cashier                |
| A. C. READ.....       | Assistant Cashier                |
| W. D. LUX.....        | Assistant Cashier                |
| J. A. ROUNDS.....     | Assistant Cashier                |

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

|                  |                 |                |
|------------------|-----------------|----------------|
| WM. H. CROCKER   | GEORGE W. SCOTT | J. B. McCARGAR |
| CHAS. T. CROCKER | CHAS. E. GREEN  | S. F. B. MORSE |
| JAS. J. FAGAN    | W. GREGG        | WM. W. CROCKER |
| R. S. MOORE      | A. G. GRIFFIN   |                |

mutual of California bankers is studying the subject.

Without noting any of the considerations for or against the branch banking system, it may be noted that the great new acceleration of the practice imparts special interest to the advance here in the past year. This is one of twenty states permitting branches of state banks, and in this California is making another record, after a slow increase until last year. In June, 1919, there were 425 state banks with 146 branches. A year later the numbers were 423 and 193. Then the rush came, and from June of last year to September last 120 new branches were established by taking over old banks or organizing new ones as branches. The number of state banking corporations has been reduced to 421, but the banking institutions have increased by 163 in two years.

Between June of last year and September 15th of this year the branches of San Francisco state banks jumped from forty-six to eighty-two, and others have been added since with more to come. In the same time the banks of Los Angeles have increased their branches from forty-five to 122. In most cases established banks have been taken over. The outstanding record has been made by the Bank of Italy, which has fifty-seven branches all over the state and has taken over quite a number of going interior banks during the year. Its conventions of branch officers are big affairs. This is, in the main, the reason of the bank's phenomenal increase each year in its volume of business and resources.

The Mercantile Trust Company has this year got fairly started on a new programme of expanded operations on different lines and the wider extension of its service through branches is one of its plans. It very recently obtained permission to establish sixteen branches in San Francisco and during the year it has been reaching out for live established banks about the Bay region. It has taken over the Garden City Bank and Trust Company in San Jose, with branches in four neighboring towns, it has acquired two banks in Emeryville, two in Richmond, and branches were recently authorized in Albany and El Cerrito. The Anglo-California Trust Company has several branches in the city, increasing the number during the year. The San Francisco Savings and Loan Society has long had city branches.

The more outside branches the big banks of the city acquire the less are the totals of that city's banks a true measure of the actual banking business of that city. When a bank acquires an outside institution the deposits, loans, resources, etc., become those of the central institution and are credited to its city and lost to the banking record of the place where the bank is located.

Several San Francisco banks have engaged in expanding their quarters during the year. The outstanding feature is the new and monumental nine-story steel and granite home of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, occupying half a block on Sacramento Street,

SAN FRANCISCO NATIONAL BANK REPORT

| Resources—                    | Sept. 15, 1922.      | Sept. 6, 1921.       |
|-------------------------------|----------------------|----------------------|
| Loans and Discounts.....      | $190,623,000        | $193,488,000        |
| Overdrafts.....               | 186,000              | 360,000              |
| U. S. Bonds.....              | 40,103,000           | 33,679,000           |
| Other Securities.....         | 26,559,000           | 27,219,000           |
| Banking House, etc.....       | 10,782,000           | 9,365,000            |
| Other Real Estate.....        | 204,000              | 496,000              |
| Cash and Exchange.....        | 91,699,000           | 67,355,000           |
| Acceptances.....              | 9,341,000            | 6,451,000            |
| Other Resources.....          | 12,563,000           | 13,534,000           |
| Total Resources.....   | $382,063,000 | $351,967,000 |
| Liabilities—                  |                      |                      |
| Capital.....                  | $27,300,000         | $27,300,000         |
| Surplus.....                  | 18,700,000           | 18,700,000           |
| Profits and Reserve.....      | 9,349,000            | 9,693,000            |
| Due to Banks.....             | 88,596,000           | 72,174,000           |
| Deposits—U. S.....            | 6,065,000            | 1,784,000            |
| Deposits—Demand.....          | 168,352,000          | 141,168,000          |
| Deposits—Time.....            | 27,741,000           | 13,023,000           |
| Securities Borrowed.....      | 429,000              |                      |
| Rediscounts—Res. Bank.....    | 3,816,000            | 27,231,000           |
| Bills Payable.....            |                      | 13,660,000           |
| Circulation.....              | 17,603,000           | 17,033,000           |
| Letters of Credit.....        | 247,000              | 218,000              |
| Acceptances.....              | 9,848,000            | 7,269,000            |
| Acceptances—Sold.....         | 1,414,000            |                      |
| Other Liabilities.....        | 2,603,000            | 2,714,000            |
| Total Liabilities..... | $382,063,000 | $351,967,000 |

and which will be occupied during the coming year. Next to it in cost and as an architectural adornment of the city is the big extension of the home of the Anglo and London Paris National Bank, with a further extension into the ground floor of the new Standard Oil skyscraper on Sansome Street. The American National has taken over the old quarters next to it of the Security Bank and Trust Company, which has moved to the new Commercial Union Building across Montgomery Street. The Mercantile Trust Company has bought the adjoining building at the corner of California and Lidesdorff Streets, long the home of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and the Wells Fargo Nevada National is completing a four-story annex.

The American National recently became the first local institution to receive a renewal of its charter for ninety-nine years, under an amendment of the National Bank Act extending the period from the twenty years heretofore provided.

That influenza breaks out in Britain at regular intervals of thirty-three weeks is a theory favored by some doctors.

Merchants National Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO

Cor. New Montgomery and Market Streets

Capital, Surplus and Undivided Profits, $2,000,000.00

Commercial
Accounts
Invited

4% Interest on TERM
DEPOSITS

FOREIGN EXCHANGE
sold on all parts of the world by draft or cable at lowest rates

BOND DEPT. insures reliable investments in highest grade securities

Safe Deposit
Vaults
open from 7 a.m.
until midnight
every day in the year, Sundays and Holidays included

BOXES
$4.00 per year
and up

We invite accounts of Individuals, Firms and Corporations that appreciate the services of a CONSERVATIVE and DISTINCTIVE Banking Institution

Commercial Bank of Spanish America, Ltd.

AFFILIATED WITH

The Anglo-South American Bank, Ltd.

CAPITAL AND RESERVES, EXCEED £13,000,000

Forward Exchange Contracts

MADE A SPECIALTY

The Exchange Risk on Contracts made in European Currencies can be eliminated by consulting us.

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BUILDING

465 California Street - San Francisco, California

Telephone Sutter 6970

JAMES H. VINTER - - Manager

THE GEM EXPERT sees flaws which an unpracticed eye rarely detects. His appraisals are accepted because he has specialized on the comparative values of precious stones. His experienced judgment rightly carries weight.

Weighing Values--- for the Investor

As the gem expert appraises precious stones, the bond expert weighs and judges bonds. You can not expect to arrive at sound conclusions single-handed.

The National City Company's complete investment organization in 50 leading cities, and its years of specialized experience, are at your service.

The security back of every bond we offer has been carefully weighed and judged by our officers. We would welcome an opportunity to help you select bonds for the investment of your funds.

The National City Company

Head Office
National City Bank Bldg.
New York

San Francisco
424 California Street
Telephone Kearny 921

Offices in more than 50 leading cities throughout the world

BONDS

SHORT TERM NOTES

ACCEPTANCES

STATE BANKING IN CALIFORNIA.

Service Rendered the People Through the Commercial, Savings and Trust Functions.

By JONATHAN S. DODGE
Superintendent of Banks.

A discussion of state banking in California naturally resolves itself into three several parts, respectively relating to the three great divisions of California banking—commercial, savings, and trust. While to many persons a bank is merely a convenient depository where money may be placed in order that it may be more easily and more safe disbursed, and while this function of a bank is most readily and widely understood, and important of course to the facilitation of ordinary commercial transactions, it is relatively one of the least of the services rendered.

State banks are divided into three classes: commercial, savings, and trust. Any two of these activities, or all of them, may be indulged by a single corporation, providing it is so qualified under the statute governing its operation. Commercial banks and commercial departments of departmental banks finance the trade of and furnish the credit for the businesses of the state. Crop production and crop distribution are primarily dependent on having at disposal great sums to meet the demands of seasonal periods. Through the form of credits furnished by commercial banks these sums are provided. The producer, farmer, manufacturer, miner, and shipper must have liquid capital available for the actual marketing of goods. Commercial banks issue credits to them, and seasonal rushes are carried through. The liquidation of these credits is made when the farmer and producer receive their actual pay, and the money is again ready to be turned over to the financing, moving, and expanding of some other productive features of the state.

The function of savings banks is by no means less important than that of the commercial banks. The world of market and production commands the service of the latter, but the former is indispensable to the American home. It has been said that the commercial bank moves what the savings bank produces. Investments by savings banks of the funds intrusted to their care must, under the laws of this state, present the greatest possible degree of safety. Projects intimately connected with the public good thus command the investment of the funds of depositors placed in savings banks. Irrigation systems, real estate developments, and the advancement of transportation projects and of the great hydro-electric industry of the state are primarily dependent upon the cooperation of the savings banks of the state. As an illustration of the interlocking of the commercial and savings activities, as regards their actual results, it might be said that an irrigation project is financed by reason of the investment by savings banks in its bonds. Through the irrigation greater crops are produced. Commercial credits move these crops and the market is found.

From the subjective standpoint, to those persons who practice thrift the savings banks are highly important. The service of the savings bank is equally available to the man who earns a small surplus, and to the corporation earning an immense profit. Great industrial projects are advanced and small homes are bought or built alike from the consistent thrift of hundreds of thousands of small depositors, regularly and habitually setting aside that small or large increment representative of the difference between earning a little more and spending a little less.

Trust companies and trust departments bear a close relationship to personal and corporate investments. They are not banks of deposit and can not actually indulge in what is commonly accepted as banking functions, but they are of the greatest service in faithfully discharging all manner of court and private trusts. The fiduciary feature of their activities is one which demands that their investments be of the most restricted character.

Since the relationship between the banks and the business of the state is so close, a fair indication of the growth in prosperity of the people of California engaged in agriculture, horticulture, manufacture, and other varied enterprises that go to make progress in wealth may be gained from the formal statements compiled to make up our banking statistics. There were in California five years ago five hundred and seventy-four banks in the state system, but at the end of the fiscal year of June 30, 1922, the total number of banks and branches had increased one hundred and eighty. This, of course, is an excellent indication of the growth in banking power available to serve the people of the state. The growth in assets and resources of these banking institutions is remarkable and encouraging. In June of 1917 the total assets of state banks was something over $929,000,000, but on June 30, 1922, this item amounted to over a billion and a half, or an increase of over 78 per cent. In considering this result it should be remembered that during the period under discussion abnormal conditions prevailed. California was fortunate in being one of the few states in the Union not materially suffering from war conditions. While this unnatural status of affairs existed, this state nevertheless progressed to new wealth, and at the close of the war found itself substantially and permanently richer in sound investments than before.

The fact that California products are practically indispensable to the world at large is a surety of the continuing advance and soundness of banking in California. This has been proved in times past by a consideration that although a marked deflation in general prices occurred, an increase in production has nevertheless been maintained, contemporaneous economic features which may be reconciled only by concluding that the practical demands of wholesome progress have nullified academic and theoretical economies.

California, in yielding place to but three other states in agricultural products, proves that she presents most diverse productive fields. This consideration indicates how closely related to our banking functions are the status and volume of the products from our farms, orchards, mines, and forests. We are not dependent upon or circumscribed by the universal successive production of a limited number of commodities, for, should one line of activity suffer, there are yet a dozen fields of endeavor which may unite to maintain a high and common economic average for the state at large.

The great increase in total assets for the period noted is the comment of every financial centre in every other state in the Union, especially in states where banks are now finding difficulty in collecting their loans, and where deposits are withdrawn with greater frequency than made, and where situations are critical. The members of the Federal Reserve Board on a recent visit to San Francisco remarked on many occasions that California was the one bright spot in the Union which appeared not to have suffered materially from war conditions.

Another indication of the progress, prosperity, and industry of the people of the state may be found by glancing at the figures compiled with reference to savings deposits. There are at this moment over a billion dollars on deposit in the savings banks of our state, contributed by over a million depositors. The fact that the average deposit is almost one thousand dollars is a matter for the deepest gratification.

Commercial banks and commercial departments of our state banks carry on the roll of their depositors a half-million people, with accounts aggregating over $250,000,000. This, of course, is exclusive of the depositors who patronize our national banks. In this connection it might be stated that California stands first in school savings deposits, and fifth in banking power of all the states of the Union. This is perhaps directly traceable to the fact that the people of the state of California have always been willing to invest in the securities of the United States and other states, and particularly in securities that have for their objective the development of California resources. A desire to make investments of this nature is necessarily an incentive toward saving.

The service of banking corporations to the state as a whole may be shown by the way in which bond investments are made. Our banks have great investments in bonds of counties, municipalities, school and road districts, to a total almost beyond what might be expected of those engaged in the development of even such a state as ours. Almost a billion dollars is now invested by our savings banks in gov-

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

ESTABLISHED IN 1867

HEAD OFFICE—TORONTO

Sir Edmund Walker, C. V. O., L. L. D., D. C. L., President
Sir John Aird, Vice-President and General Manager
H. V. F. Jones, Assistant General Manager

Capital paid up - - - $15,000,000
Surplus - - - - - $15,000,000

NEW YORK AGENCY: 16 Exchange Place
LONDON, ENGLAND: 2 Lombard St., E. C.

Branches in every province of Canada and in Portland, Ore., Seattle, Wash., Mexico City, Havana, Cuba, Kingston, Jamaica, Bridgetown, Barbadoes, Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, Rio de Janeiro.

This Bank transacts every description of Banking Business, including the issue of Letters of Credit, Travelers' Cheques and Drafts on Foreign Countries, and will negotiate or receive for collection Bills on any place where there is a Bank or Banker.

SAN FRANCISCO BRANCH
450 CALIFORNIA STREET
BRUCE HEATHCOTE, Manager

Reinvestment Time is Near

THIS TIME of the year always brings with it the problem of reinvestment. For this we are particularly well equipped with a widely diversified list of securities that we can fully recommend. Safety is our first consideration in recommending bonds.

Our offerings include State, Municipal, Irrigation, Railroad, and Industrial bonds. You may choose your investment and make reservations now for the very day on which your funds are available.

Anglo London Paris Company

SUTTER AND SANSOME STREETS
SAN FRANCISCO

ernmental securities, public utilities bonds, real estate bonds and irrigation district bonds.

Bond investments of savings banks alone increased by over half a million dollars during the first two-thirds of this current year. This fact has a most important meaning, since bonds in which savings banks may invest are for the most part those issued to finance agricultural and irrigational projects of the state and its great hydro-electric potentialities. Perhaps no other illustration could demonstrate so clearly that the savings depositors in the state, in the last analysis, are themselves the power behind lasting development of latent resources.

These constant and appreciable increases may be construed only in one way—namely, that the general prosperity of the people of the state is materially increasing, and that communities, commerce, agriculture, and industry of all kinds are being served and financed by banks operating on a sound and liquid basis. The increase in the deposits in commercial banks means that the business of the state, the exploitation of our industries, and the movement of our crops are being financed by the people with increasing faith. Commerce in all its lines is especially invigorated by the increase of available funds to furnish the necessary credit.

The increase in savings deposits gives rise to two undeniable conclusions—first, that the people of the state, by a recognition of the advantages of economy and thrift at home and in business, are placing themselves on a sound individual financial basis, and secondly, that the great problem of the development of the latent natural resources of the state, financed to a great degree by savings banks through bond investments, is being solved. From these increases no other inference may be drawn save that the state is facing an era of sound finance and maintained prosperity.

Effect of Over Supply Shows Oil Competition.

The highly competitive character of the oil industry is nowhere better illustrated, according to R. L. Welch, secretary of the American Petroleum Institute, than in the recent declines in prices of crude petroleum and its products, which have been due solely to the fact that more oil was being produced and imported than this country was consuming and exporting.

"It has been largely due to the fundamental uncertainties of the business, to the fluctuations of demand and supply," Mr. Welch said, "that people unacquainted with the industry have been led to attribute the frequent and rapid price movements to causes other than the violence of the changes in the situation itself.

"In other words, the public is accustomed to think of the oil industry in the light of conditions prevailing in 1906; that is, in terms of large interests and bygone days.

"Since 1906, however, the tremendous increase in the demand for oil caused by the development of the internal combustion engine has entirely changed the character of the industry and its remarkable growth has engendered the keenest kind of competition. Oil production has been diffused into thousands of hands and even the largest interests have had to share in the ups and downs of production and prices.

"Neither the oil itself nor the rate at which it shall be brought forth can be in the control of any single interest or group of interests."

Oil Output Shows Big Gain in Short Period.

During the two and a half years from January, 1920, to June, 1922, the United States and Mexico produced 1,600,000,000 barrels of crude petroleum. This was only 2.4 per cent. less than the total quantity produced in this country during the forty-seven years intervening between the drilling of the first oil well in 1859 and 1906, the year in which the consumption of petroleum and its products began to show a marked increase.

In 1906 the domestic production of crude oil was only 127,000,000 barrels. The industry existed to fill the demands for a few million barrels of kerosene and lubricating oil. Gasoline was a by-product. Only about 8,000,000 barrels of it were produced.

Today the refineries of the United States could refine in sixty days the entire 1906 domestic production of crude oil. Gasoline, which is now the chief commercial product of crude, is being produced at the rate of 140,000,000 barrels a year.

Independent Output Gains.

The total production of crude petroleum in the United States and Mexico last year was 659,000,000 barrels, of which independent interests produced about 80 per cent. The production of crude in the United States alone last year was 469,000,000 barrels, of which 76 per cent. was produced by independent interests.

First Oil Well Was Drilled 63 Years Ago.

The first oil well in this country was brought in sixty-three years ago by Colonel

Edwin L. Drake, near Titusville, Pennsylvania. It was only sixty-nine feet deep, but it marked the beginning of an epoch, the importance of which has only begun to be realized.

The demand for oil created by the development of the internal combustion engine has so stimulated the growth of the industry that there are today, according to estimates by the American Petroleum Institute, about 275,000 producing wells in this country.

Production has increased from the negligible quantity obtained in 1859 from Colonel Drake's little well to an output last year of 469,639,000 barrels in this country alone.

On January 1st the oil refineries east of the Rocky Mountains could handle 1,789,440 barrels of crude oil per day. Of these, the refineries in the Mid-Continent field, in Oklahoma, Kansas, Texas, and Louisiana, had a total daily capacity of 956,060 barrels, or 53.4 per cent. of the total.

The quantity of gasoline available in refinery storage on June 1st was eighty-two gallons for each of the 10,448,632 automobiles registered on January 1st, as against an average of eighty-seven gallons for each automobile registered on January 1st of the four previous years.

Complete Banking Service

- 1- Commercial
- 2- Savings
- 3- Trust

Central National Bank
Central Savings Bank
14th & Broadway

Savings Branch: 49th & Telegraph
OAKLAND, CAL.

G. W. McNEAR

INCORPORATED

Insurance Exchange Building

433 CALIFORNIA STREET

SAN FRANCISCO

General Shipping Merchants

Importers and Exporters

ALL KINDS OF

MERCHANDISE

BARLEY AND WHEAT
A SPECIALTY

Rounding out 20 years

of corporate life, the American National Bank presents the evidence that it has rendered an appreciated banking service:

DEPOSITS

September 15, 1902, - $ 1,374,000
September 15, 1922, - 17,952,000

Those who seek the aid and counsel of a bank that hews to the line of prudent banking service find here a helpful—and a considerate—performance of that function.

Commercial Foreign Exchange
Time Deposit
Safe Deposit Investment

American National Bank
of San Francisco

California and Montgomery Streets

THE SUMITOMO BANK, LTD.

Head Office: Osaka, Japan

BARON K. SUMITOMO, President

|                            |   |                |
|----------------------------|---|----------------|
| Capital Paid up.....       |  | yen 50,000,000 |
| Reserve Fund.....          |   | " 22,000,000   |
| Deposits (June, 1922)..... |   | " 340,000,000  |

SAN FRANCISCO BRANCH

315-325 California Street, San Francisco, Cal.

M. KAWAKATSU, Manager

HOME OFFICES

Osaka Tokyo Yokohama Nagoya Kyoto Kobe
Hiroshima Shimonoseki Moji Hakata Kureme

FOREIGN BRANCHES: New York, London, Shanghai, Hankow, Bombay

This Bank buys, sells and receives for collection drafts and telegraphic transfers; issues Commercial and Travelers' Letters of Credit available in all important parts of the world.

INSURANCE THE BASIS OF CREDIT.

San Francisco is the Recognized Insurance Centre of the Pacific Coast States.

By WAYLAND DUNHAM
Of Henley & Scott.

Because the philosophy of, and reason for, the co-insurance clause is so many times misunderstood the following is given with the hope of making this important feature of the insurance business a little more clear.

A risk in which a fire may occur and not occasion a total loss should be eligible to co-insurance, and where a chance of total loss is small, the highest credits should be given; but where there is a large possibility of a total loss, should a fire occur, no co-insurance credits are warranted.

Fireproof buildings are less liable to total loss than brick buildings; consequently the credit is higher, and, as brick buildings are less liable to total loss than frame buildings, so the credits are larger. Buildings in a town having water works protection are less liable to sustain a total loss than buildings in an unprotected town; therefore the resulting credit.

It is quite perceptible that buildings are less damageable than stocks of goods and are less liable to be a total loss in case of fire, so the credits are higher for buildings than for contents; for example, a large number of fires occurring in brick buildings in protected towns are extinguished with a loss ranging from 10 per cent. to 50 per cent. on buildings and from 30 per cent. to 70 per cent. on contents. If a company should write a policy on a brick building, covering 40 per cent. of the value they would most likely pay a large, or the full amount if a fire occurred; but if they wrote a policy for the same building but covered 80 per cent. of the value they would receive twice the amount of premium, with considerable less probability of sustaining a total loss; thus making it possible for a company to carry a large per cent. of value at a lower rate. Without the co-insurance credits, the rates would be much cheaper in proportion to the indemnity assumed when a policy covered but 40 per cent. of the value than it would if 80 per cent. were covered.

The published rate is not the real rate of the building, but reflects the possibility of either large or small loss, and must be sufficient to cover a small policy on a large value risk in which any fire would be almost sure to create damage to the extent of the policy.

The chance of a fire starting in a protected town is nearly as great as it is in an unprotected town, but when a town is equipped with good fire protection the chance of heavy loss is materially reduced and there should be considerable reduction in the rate when applied to large percentage values. The difference is covered by co-insurance credits. The real rate of any risk is the result obtained after the largest co-insurance credit applicable is deducted: for example, a fireproof building occupied as a dry goods store was valued at $100,000. The rate was established without co-insurance and the owner wrote insurance covering $10,000, or 10 per cent. of the value of the building. A fire started in the drapery department and in a short time the inflammable stock on that floor was on fire, but on account of the construction of the building and the proper kind of fire protection, the fire was confined to one floor, and while there was a large smoke and water damage to the stock of goods on the other floors, the damage to the building was confined to the floor on which the fire started, and amounted to approximately $7000. When a new policy was written it covered $90,000 and a 90 per cent. clause attached, at a considerably reduced rate. At this rate the companies would rather carry the large value policy than they would the small value policy at the higher rate. Thus we see that the higher rate is not the real rate of the building, the real rate being the result after the 90 per cent. co-insurance credit has been deducted.

In consideration of the acceptance by the assured of the reduced rate average clause, the various credits are allowed in accordance with the building construction. But often this acceptance is made with a vague idea in the mind of the assured as to the real requirements and workings of the clause. In an attempt to clarify this matter may we take as a specific example a building valued at $10,000. The 90 per cent. reduced rate average clause is attached and the assured lives strictly up to his contract and carries $2000 insurance. A $9000 loss occurs and of course he is reimbursed the full amount. Were the loss over $9000 he would not be able to realize more than the face value of

Why the Fireman's Fund for San Franciscans

The Fireman's Fund has achieved a record of stability unsurpassed by any insurance company.

Furthermore, there is no company that offers better insurance facilities for San Francisco property owners, merchants, shippers and automobile owners than the Fireman's Fund.

Finally, the Fireman's Fund is a San Franciscan, born and bred.

Ask your broker to place your insurance in the Fireman's Fund

Fire • Automobile and Marine Insurance

FIREMAN'S FUND
INSURANCE COMPANY

The Company's New Building, San Francisco

PACIFIC COAST BRANCH
California-Commercial Union Building
San Francisco

C. J. HOLMAN, Manager

R. C. MEDCRAFT, Asst. Manager

COMMERCIAL UNION
ASSURANCE COMPANY, Limited
of London

Assets . $14,284,938.66

PALATINE
INSURANCE COMPANY, Limited
of London

Assets . . $5,240,131.94

UNION
ASSURANCE SOCIETY, Limited
of London

Assets . . $2,959,136.70

COMMERCIAL UNION
FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY
of New York

Assets . . $2,041,214.23

Hand in Hand Underwriters of the
COMMERCIAL UNION
ASSURANCE COMPANY, Limited
of London

Assets . $14,284,938.66

his policy. In other words the reduced rate average clause has no effect whatever when insurance is carried to the amount of or exceeding 90 per cent. of the value of the risk; that is, insurance pays the entire loss not exceeding the amount of the policy.

The clause has no effect whatever when the loss equals or exceeds 90 per cent. of value, no matter what the insurance is. In this case, also, insurance pays entire loss not exceeding amount of policy. For example, the building valued at $10,000 having the 90 per cent. R. R. A. C. attached is insured for only $6000; a fire follows with a $9000 loss; insurance pays $6000, being the face value.

When both insurance and the loss fall below 90 per cent. of the value the assured becomes a contributor (that is, stands as an insurance company) to the amount of the difference between 90 per cent. of the value and the actual insurance in force at the time of the fire. For example, a policy for $7000 is written with a 90 per cent. clause on a $10,000 risk. The loss from fire is $5000. Ninety per cent. of the value is $9000; insurance being $2000 less than this sum, the owner is the contributor to that amount and contributes to the loss in such proportion. In other words, the insurance pays only seven-ninths of loss ($5000) or $3889, while the owner contributes two-ninths of the loss, or $1111; which is his penalty for not abiding by his contract.

It has been estimated that of the thirty million fire insurance policies issued annually in America probably less than 1 per cent. have been carefully read and checked by the assured. People who spend hours going over the phrasing of their deeds and leases, business men who scrutinize even the punctuation of their other contracts, throw all far-sightedness aside and accept with blind faith their insurance policies.

During the year of 1921 records shows that a fire insurance claim was paid on the average of every ninety seconds. These policy contracts were put into operation without a moment's warning and they operated on terms and conditions stated in their text. Doubtless in many instances the assured awakened to the fact that there were items in his contract which he did not know existed, certain

Springfield Fire and Marine Insurance Company

OF SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

The Springfield is not only the largest Fire Insurance Company chartered by the State of Massachusetts, but stands among the ten largest and strongest American Fire Insurance Companies. Losses paid since organization, $92,012,665.56—including $1,639,-063.39 paid on account of the San Francisco conflagration in 1906.

PACIFIC DEPARTMENT
225 Pine Street, San Francisco, Cal.

GEO. W. DORNIN, Manager

JOHN C. DORNIN, Assistant Manager

Atlas Assurance Co., Ltd.

OF LONDON

Established 1808

STATEMENT JAN. 1, 1922

|  |                 |
|--|-----------------|
| Total Security for Policy-Holders..... | $39,736,390.32 |
| Total U. S. Assets.....                | 5,440,809.02    |
| Total U. S. Surplus.....               | 1,434,751.54    |

Policies are issued against the following hazards:

FIRE - AUTOMOBILE - RIOT and CIVIL COMMOTION
EXPLOSION - TORNADO - RENTS - EARTHQUAKE
USE and OCCUPANCY PROFITS

PACIFIC COAST BRANCH
100 Sansome Street, San Francisco

FRANK J. DEVLIN, Manager

T. H. PALACHE, Asst. Manager

THE AFFILIATED AETNA COMPANIES

AETNA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
AETNA CASUALTY & SURETY COMPANY AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE COMPANY of Hartford, Conn.

Combined Assets : : : $219,147,414

THE LARGEST INSURANCE ORGANIZATION IN THE WORLD

Writing Life, Accident, Health, Liability,
Compensation, Fire, Marine and Automobile
Insurance and Fidelity and Surety Bonds.

J. R. MOLONY

Manager Western Branch Office
333 Pine Street :: San Francisco

H. H. SCOTT

BARCLAY HENLEY, Jr.

HENLEY & SCOTT

Pacific Coast Managers

Western Assurance Company.
British America Assurance Company.
British General Insurance Co., Ltd., of London, England.
The Tokio Marine and Fire Insurance Co.
Empire State Underwriters of the Agricultural Ins. Co.

Phones: Sutter 261 : Sutter 262

201 Sansome Street :: :: San Francisco, Cal.

J. H. VREELAND

U. S. Manager

Scottish Union & National Insurance Company

ESTABLISHED 1824

ENTERED UNITED STATES 1880

|   |                 |
|---|-----------------|
| Net Losses Paid in United States.....       | $41,011,605.95 |
| Total Admitted Assets in United States..... | 8,443,500.69    |
| Total Liabilities in United States.....     | 4,534,119.91    |
| Surplus to United States Policyholders..... | 3,909,380.78    |

SAN FRANCISCO DEPARTMENT
201 SANSOME STREET
SAN FRANCISCO

H. W. FORES, General Agent

obligations that he automatically assumed on accepting his policy; important points of which he had no knowledge because he neglected to read and understand his policy. In many instances he has even discovered that he has been paying for protection that did not exist because unwittingly he has destroyed it. The sad part of the matter is that such awakenings seldom occur until after the fire.

Many people hide behind the alibi that fire insurance policies are prescribed by law. It is true that neither the agent nor his company is responsible for the 200 lines of technical language in the policy's provisions or for the phrasing of the contract proper and additional clauses. They are firmly fixed; their phraseology has come down to us as a result of prolonged legislation; but the fact remains that there is responsibility assumed by both sides, the carrying out of which may be of vital importance in the payment of any loss.

A fire insurance policy is divided into two distinct sections; first, the contract, and second, stipulations and conditions. The contract is quite clear, and if the blanks are properly filled in should cause no trouble, as it merely defines the amount of liability assumed under definite limitations. On the reverse side of the policy are itemized stipulations and conditions under which the policy operates. Lines 32 to 35 define property which is not covered by the policy, such as accounts, bills, currency, etc. Lines 36 to 43, the hazards not included in the coverage, as: invasion, insurrection, civil war, riot, etc.; or the further depreciation of property at or after a fire as a result of negligence by the assured. Matters voiding the policy are itemized in Lines 44 to 52, which include: concealment or misrepresentation, fraud or false swearing, and unless otherwise provided by an agreement endorsed on the policy, if there is additional insurance, if the interest is other than unconditional, if the building is on leased ground, if foreclosure proceedings be started or if the policy be assigned before a loss. Lines 53 to 67 outline various features which would suspend insurance unless otherwise provided for by an agreement endorsed on the policy. These include: increase in hazard, or if a manufacturing establishment operates overtime, vacancy or shutdown, extraordinary alterations and repairs, generation of illuminating gas, storage of explosives or extra hazardous articles, or the change of ownership other than by death. Additional contract stipulations in Lines 68 to 73 defines the relation of a chattel mortgage to insurance, states that if any material part of a building fall the insurance shall immediately cease, and even after the fire there are duties for the individual to perform. He must give written notice to the company without unnecessary delay, he must protect his property from further damage and within sixty days after the commencement of the fire file with the company proofs of loss signed and sworn by himself.

Is it any wonder that the people of New York State, who have just completed a "Read Your Policy Week" are so astonished in the revelation of their ignorance that they are appealing to all the country to inaugurate a concentrated drive of enlightenment? It would certainly eliminate many grievances that daily arise between the company and the assured.

Garfield 3900
Rathbone, Dana & Seeley, Inc.

Successors, Insurance Department
MACONDRAY & COMPANY

|                        |                       |                        |
|------------------------|-----------------------|------------------------|
| 332 Pine Street | General Agents | San Francisco   |
| FIRE            | MARINE         | AUTOMOBILE      |
| CENTURY INS. CO., LTD. | SEA INS. CO., LTD.    | FEDERAL INS. CO., LTD. |
|                        | MARINE INS. CO., LTD. |                        |
|                        | FEDERAL INS. CO.      |                        |

The OCEAN Accident and Guarantee Corporation, Limited

Pacific Coast Branch, San Francisco, California

WILLIAM J. GARDNER, Manager

|                               |                        |
|-------------------------------|------------------------|
| Workman's Compensation | Fidelity Bonds  |
| Public Liability       | Plate Glass     |
| Automobile             | Burglary        |
| Accident—Health        | Elevator        |
| Boiler—Fly Wheel       | Engine Breakage |

OFFERS EXCEPTIONAL OPPORTUNITIES TO LIVE AGENTS

|   |  |  |
|---|--|--|
| E. H. PorterResident ManagerLos Angeles Office724 So. Spring St. | M. R. JohnsonResident ManagerSan Francisco Office315 Montgomery St. | Herbert N. NealeGeneral AgentSpreckels Bldg.San Diego |
|---|--|--|

|   |  |  |   |
|---|--|--|---|
| Gerlinger-Richards &amp; Co.General AgentsNorthwestern BankBldg., Portland | Smith &amp; Clise, Inc.General Agents701 White Bldg.Seattle | McCrea &amp; MerryweatherGeneral AgentsN. 3 Howard St.Spokane | F. H. Sweetland &amp; Co.General AgentsPerkins Bldg.Tacoma |
|---|--|--|---|

REPUBLIC UNDERWRITERS

POLICIES UNDERWRITTEN BY THE

Republic (Fire) Insurance Co.

OF DALLAS : TEXAS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT—JANUARY 1, 1922

ASSETS.

|  |                       |
|--|-----------------------|
| First Mortgage Loans.....                      | $3,195,805.06        |
| Stocks and Bonds.....                          | 56,544.78             |
| Collateral Loans.....                          | 2,450.00              |
| Cash in Banks and in Office.....               | 272,535.55            |
| Cash in Agents' Hands and Agency Balances..... | 265,078.12            |
| Due from Other Companies.....                  | 47,537.07             |
| Interest Accrued.....                          | 84,216.26             |
| Other Assets.....                              | 2,228.67              |
| Home Office Building and Grounds.....          | 24,000.00             |
|  | $3,950,395.51 |

LIABILITIES.

|                                       |                       |
|---------------------------------------|-----------------------|
| Cash Capital.....                     | $1,000,000.00        |
| Premium Reserve Fund.....             | 1,403,555.83          |
| Reserve for Losses Incurred.....      | 229,156.73            |
| Reserve for Reinsurance Balances..... | 49,917.88             |
| Reserve for Contingencies.....        | 250,000.00            |
| Net Surplus.....                      | 1,017,765.07          |
|                                       | $3,950,395.51 |

CHAS. R. WATSON, State Agent, 369 Pine Street. Telephone Sutter 851.
CHAS. M. HACKMEIER, Manager City Department, San Francisco, Calif.

Fire
Marine
Earthquake
Tornado
Rents
Sprinkler Leakage
Explosion

Profits
Leasehold Interest
Automobile
Automobile Liability
Floaters
Use and Occupancy
Strike and Riot

EDWARD BROWN & SONS

GENERAL AGENTS

150-154 Sansome Street San Francisco, Cal.
TELEPHONE SUTTER 7120

Agricultural Insurance Co.
of Watertown, N. Y.

Hudson Ins. Co.
of New York, N. Y.

Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co.
of New York, N. Y.

United States Lloyds, Inc.
of New York, N. Y.

Svea Insurance Co.
of Gothenburg, Sweden

Sea Insurance Co., Ltd. of Liverpool, Eng.

Globe Underwriters Agency
of New York

Preferred Accident Ins. Co.
of New York

ASSETS REPRESENTED: OVER ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS

ESTABLISHED IN 1875

|                                  |            |
|----------------------------------|------------|
| Fire                             | Automobile |
| Earthquake                       | Fire       |
| Rents                            | Theft      |
| Postal                           | Collision  |
| Use and Occupancy                | Liability  |
| Strike, Riot and Civil Commotion |            |

THE LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON
AND GLOBE
Insurance Company Limited

Wherever modern civilization has exerted its influence, the LIVERPOOL AND LONDON & GLOBE has been a leader, and today is acknowledged to be a world-wide stabilizing force.

Pacific Department
444 CALIFORNIA STREET

BONDS—THEIR PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE.

The Future of the Bond Business is Definite and Certain.

By J. L. LILIENTHAL
Vice-President Freeman, Smith & Camp Company.

The war made it necessary to revise all existing text-books on bonds and bond investment. The time to rewrite them is not yet. The war chapter on finance is still unfinished, and the conclusion will not be reached until the numerous war debts have either become recognized as solvent obligations or have been definitely repudiated.

Much of the civilized world is wallowing in a mire of inflated fiat currency devoid of intrinsic value. Another fraction, with its currency depreciated far below its normal value, is suffering only in less degree. Of the great nations, only the United States and England are measurably balancing their budgets with their income and maintaining the value of their currency.

The bond business in the modern sense has no extensive past. In fact, the modern state, with its wide distribution of wealth, is a product of the last century. In olden times war was made by kings, who borrowed the wherewithal from their wealthy subjects, principally the bankers. If it pleased the sovereign to forget the debt he did so promptly, and if wise the creditor did not complain too loudly. Here is another parallel between the absolutism of tyrants and the dictatorship of the proletariat, as exemplified in Russia. Russia has definitely repudiated its public debt.

The past of the bond business as we know it is encompassed almost completely by the period starting with the American war of the rebellion. Government loans were raised in the North by popular subscription, and following the war came our greatest era of national expansion, with the development of railroads and the winning of the West. All these developments created a need for long-time loans. Most of this capital came from England and Continental Europe, but not a small volume of bond underwriting and syndication was developed in the United States. Followed the expansion of civic needs for public betterments, arranged for by the voting and issuance of bonds, and the gradual creation of standard forms of municipal bonds. The subject of municipal finance in itself is a separate branch of the bond business, and its literature is very extensive. Municipal bonds attract a special class of investors enjoying large incomes, because the government does not have power under the Constitution to tax the income from municipal bonds.

The present of the bond business may be said to date from the date of the beginning of our participation in the late war. Previously Americans in the mass did not know what bonds were. "Stocks and Bonds"—"Stocks and Bonds"—were invariably grouped in the public mind, and few had the knowledge to distinguish between them. The number of individual bond investors in the United States at the beginning of the war has been estimated by authorities at between 200,000 and 400,000. The latter figure is held by all to be very liberal. As a result of the educational campaigns carried on during the war there were sold Liberty and Victory bonds to more than ten million individuals. It was this leaven of knowledge that took bonds out of the category of the unknowable and demoniacal and made the bond business what it is today.

"Out of the progress of civilization, the expansion of industry, the increasing diversity, complication, and intimacy of human relationships, the necessity, and hence the reason for existence of our profession, have grown," said John A. Prescott, president of the Investment Bankers' Association of America, at the convention at Del Monte, upon assuming his office. "Through our activities the widely distributed savings of the people, valueless if left idle, of little force in uncoordinated units, are gathered into effective volume and brought to the place of greatest need or most beneficial use. The services we perform are as vital and valuable to modern civilization and progress as the functioning of any other essential agency of commerce. Ours is a useful, essential, and honorable profession."

This is about as terse and accurate a statement of the place in society of the investment banker as it would be possible to make. The important part that investment banking plays in our economic structure is scarcely realized unless one stops to think. Practically all our essential utilities depend, directly or indirectly, for their existence on the sale of bonds. The irrigation of lands, by means of which our food is produced, is made possible by sale of irrigation bonds. The water we drink reaches us through reservoirs and mains and distributing pipes constructed by means of bond issues. The gas that cooks our food, the electricity that lights our table, come to us because it was possible to sell bonds to pay for the generating plants. If we look to our business on a street-car a fraction of the nickel we pay goes for bond interest. If we drive our own motor chances are it was produced in a factory erected from proceeds of bonds. The streets and bridges over which we drive were built from bonds, and probably the building in which we have our office. We send our children to schools built with money raised from bonds. This idea might be pursued indefinitely.

While industry and business owe much to bonds, many inimical laws are in effect. California taxes its citizens the full property rate on securities they own, if such securities originated in other states. The effect of this is to cause hundreds of wealthy persons actually residing in California to maintain the legal fiction of residence in another state. This will be changed some time, but such changes come slowly.

The prime investment security of the world is United States Liberty Bonds. This is due to the overwhelming superiority of the credit of the United States. Liberty bonds are so "prime" that many investors can not afford to own them, as it is possible to obtain a much higher yield with safety. The question is often asked, What is the future of Liberty bonds? This can best be answered by comparison of prices of past issues of United States bonds. Due allowance should be made for term and special privileges of tax exemption or bank circulation.

United States 5s due in 1885 sold at 127 in 1865.

United States 6s due in 1881 sold at 123½ in 1873.

United States 4s due in 1907 sold at 130 in 1889.

United States 4s due in 1925 sold at 139½ in 1901.

A 3 per cent. basis for the fourth 4½s, figuring to the optional date of October 15, 1933, would be about 111½; on a 2½ per cent. basis about five points more. The premium would decrease about one point per annum on a 3 per cent. basis, as the bonds approached the optional period.

Soon after the beginning of the Spanish-American war in 1898 our government offered for sale $200,000,000 3 per cent. bonds, which were oversubscribed seven and one-half times. This was equivalent to a subscription total of about $1,400,000,000. The market price of bonds went to about 106 in three months, and later sold as high as 110¾.

In October, 1922, our government offered for subscription an issue of $500,000,000 4½ per cent. bonds to refund maturing Victory bonds. Total subscriptions of $1,500,000,000 were received. The price was not advanced on the market, due to the issue having been floated at a time of some unsettlement. There was some slight advance when the bonds first came out, but they quickly lapsed and accompanied the various issues of Liberty bonds in their slide below par. The question of what has caused Liberty bonds to decline has been the subject of much speculative inquiry, and the reasons given are various. Most important, perhaps, is the realization by large holders that the date of removal of income tax exemption from Liberty bonds is at hand. Therefore persons with large incomes are selling their Liberty bonds and presumably putting the proceeds into tax exempts. To help along the situation the big banks are selling, too.

Liberties are the bond barometer. When they go down the whole list accompanies them, and when Liberties advance other bonds go up, too. The banks have been trying to force up interest rates in the face of a small demand for money and largely increased deposits. There has been some advance, but it is not important. It is customary at this season for demands for loans to be heavy to finance crop movements, and it is usual for interest rates to advance. The people expect it and they pay the higher rates. This is another influence in the direction of lower bond prices.

At present the investment market trend is downward, as usual at this season of the year. Such things as a few hundred millions of money to be loosened up between now and February 1st are ignored. There is a very large sum of money to be available when the Victory bonds are called in December 15th. Only a comparatively small portion of Victory holdings were converted into the new loan. A very great aggregate sum of corporation bonds has been called for payment along through the early winter. They are being refunded for the most part with lower coupon rate bonds which have already been paid for, taking the money temporarily out of commercial channels to be held by trustee banks, to be released on the call dates of the bonds being redeemed. A few examples of this situation, making an aggregate of $137,367,000, are Swift's $40,000,000, Cudahy's $12,000,000, Kansas City Power's $17,000,000, Louisville Electric's $14,000,000, Gulf Oil $35,000,000, Consumers' Gas $11,545,000, Mil-

A Constructive Service Which a Natural Demand Has Built Up

*Of interest to Banking,
Credit, General Business
Institutions and the Public*

Our business is to build business bigger, and bigger business earns more profits and more prosperity distributed throughout the Country. We supply Manufacturers, Wholesalers and Dealers with active working capital through the purchase for cash of their Active Open Accounts, Notes, Acceptances, Instalment Sales and other forms of Credits Receivable—without disturbing their Customers or their business organizations, as we let them collect the Accounts.

Banks are not equipped to purchase and safeguard Accounts Receivable, because of the intangible nature of Open Accounts, and it would cost them probably more than it does us to do so, as we specialize in that line. Instalment a bankable asset. Banks can employ their funds sales also, because of their long terms, are hardly safer by buying our Collateral Trust Notes which carry the obligations of the original Debtor, the article as collateral or the guarantee of the Seller, and of our Company with an added reserve margin—practically four-name paper.

The major portion, therefore, of the Credits Receivable we purchase are of an unbankable nature and are burdensome for business concerns to carry with their own capital—notwithstanding the fact that many of our Customers are rated in excess of A MILLION DOLLARS.

The demand for our services has resulted in increases of our Capital from $300,000, ten years ago, to over $7,250,000 now—nearly twenty-five times over. Last year our combined volume was $79,347,241.16, with no obligation on the part of our Customers to do business with us for a single day. If they can make more profit on our money than it costs them, why not sell Credits as well as merchandise and make two profits instead of one?

Commercial Credit Co.

Cash Capital and Surplus $11,100,000

BALTIMORE

SAN FRANCISCO

SAN FRANCISCO OFFICE: 433 California Street

Affiliated With

Commercial Acceptance Trust, Chicago; Commercial Credit Co., Inc., New Orleans; Continental Guaranty Corporation, New York-Toronto.

Represented in the Principal Cities

Open Hearth Steel Castings

From one pound to 70,000 pounds each

CARBON—MANGANESE—ALLOY
To Meet Any Recognized Specifications.

The Largest Steel Casting Manufacturers West of the Rockies

COLUMBIA STEEL COMPANY

Rolled Steel Bars—plain, round and square
Round and Square Deformed for Concrete Reinforcing.

PLANTS AT

PITTSBURG, California

PORTLAND,
Oregon

SALES OFFICE:

351 California Street

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF

waukee's $7,822,000. There are numerous others of similar nature that will make up a very big total.

Between now and the first of January the government requires $1,000,000,000 of new financing, and within six months $3,300,000,000, which overshadows the market situation, but simply means a readjustment of the credits where they are now held. Big government financing is always temporarily disturbing, but with constantly easing credit conditions, government financing becomes less and less a disturbing factor.

Foreign bonds naturally declined first and most appreciably, and have been hammered down to prices comparative with those of 1917 for the low coupon rate bonds of that period, bringing yields up on the bonds of various of the great nations, to a return of close to 8½ per cent. to 9 per cent.

How long will it be possible for the reasoning investor, who took profits in our own Liberty bonds of seventeen to twenty points and as much or more in foreign issues, to withstand these investment opportunities in the bonds of great nations with hitherto unsullied financial reputation and with a record of perfect performance? The wise investor is taking advantage of the opportunity and his present number will become largely augmented as the ease of the money market becomes better known.

Whether or not money is easy is readily determinable by reference to the Federal Reserve Bank statements, which show that the necessity grows constantly greater for the Federal Reserve Bank to go into the open market to buy paper in order to make a living.

The Federal Reserve Bank is hard put to maintain a strong earnings basis. On October 19, 1921, its reserves reached the point of 17.3 per cent. and have since never fallen below that figure. On August 9, 1922, the Federal Reserve Bank reserve was 80.4 per cent., and on November 1, 1922, stood at 76 per cent. This is a remarkable contrast with the reserve ratio of 42.7 per cent. existing on October 15, 1920. These figures show whether or not the business of the country is in a boom stage and whether or not the banks are undergoing an expansion strain warranting an uprise in interest rates and a depreciating investment market.

Just how quickly the investing public will get over its mental trouble and come into the market is problematical; whether it will be before or after the turn of the year is not for me to say. There is every reason why it should be soon.

I have been writing about the present aspects of bonds. The future of the bond business is definite and certain. It is true, perhaps, that the multitude still visualizes material wealth as gold and silver and paper money, but it is also true that every year a greater number is coming to regard wealth in terms of income—its true status. This is what makes the bond business.

F. A. Vanderlip was credited with the remark a few years ago that Americans are economic illiterates. This is a clever generalization with some foundation; but even since Vanderlip said it there has been an advance in the average information of the public on economic subjects. Blue sky laws have, however, been almost a complete failure as a protection to the general public from investment in worthless securities. More discussion is needed to reach uninformed and misinformed public opinion. Competent authorities have estimated that losses to the American public last year on account of the purchase of worthless securities were about $1,000,000,000.

Newspapers and magazines gradually are giving more space to economics. Almost every newspaper of any pretensions publishes a daily financial page, and the best papers three or four. There are many columns of advertisements devoted to discussions of securities, and these are informative in themselves.

Bond dealers as a rule are merchants who buy for their own account and sell to investors and the public. They are not brokers, in that they do not buy or sell on commission. They deal in bonds and not in stocks.

It is hard to conceive of an organized business world without investment bankers. Large business enterprise leans on them very heavily. Some political statesmen suggested recently that railroads should sell their securities directly to the public instead of underwriting them with investment bankers. It can't be done. Investors do not buy securities voluntarily, except in rare instances. They would not buy them from the railroads. The investment banker performs a definite function, standing between the borrower and the final lender. Much of the character given to specific securities is a reflection of the character of the house that underwrites them. How would an investor know the particulars of the security behind a given issue of bonds unless he could have the word of a reputable house of investment bankers, after investigation, that this and that were so?

Cities, counties, and states have often tried to sell their own bonds. Invariably they have failed. These attempts are due, as a rule, to the circumstance that bids tendered for bonds are considered too low by the public officers charged with selling them. So the bids are rejected and the officers announce that they will sell the bonds to investors over the counter, at par. Sometimes six or a dozen bonds are sold in the course of a week or two, and then after a time the public officials decide they will sell the bonds to bond dealers, as they should have done in the first place.

The future of the bond business, in volume and in importance, is certain. It affords a career for young men equal to that of any of the professions. As a rule it does not promise large fortune. Few have become very wealthy in the bond business, but it does promise a close relation to the real matters of moment in America, which are inextricably associated with business. No other business, not even commercial banking, is so close to the energy that makes the wheels go round. The bond business does not promise any immunity from work—quite the reverse—but those who devote their lives to it find a great satisfaction in their close association with progress and development of whatever nature. No one can charge an investment banker with being a non-producer. No other profession makes so many blades of grass grow where only one grew before!

The tendency in every direction is to place added safeguards to insure the security of bonds. There is also a widespread tendency to expand the uses of bond financing. Here in California we have seen investment bankers remove irrigation bonds from a list of discredited securities and make them the most popular and marketable in the land. Bonds are issued for drainage and diking of lands, for building of highways and bridges—for every conceivable purpose that connotes material human progress.

With the widening of intelligence and information and the growth of wealth of the country the future of the bond business seems a very certain and tangible thing.

FRANK K. HITCHING

244 California Street

San Francisco

Cable Address "FRANKHITCH"

Steamship Agent and Broker
For Sale, Purchase and Chartering

—OF—
Steamers and Sailing Ships

MARINE Insurance

Switzerland

Thames & Mersey

Liverpool &
London & Globe

Hartford

LOUIS ROSENTHAL

General Agent

302 CALIFORNIA STREET

MCCORMICK,
McPHERSON & LAPHAM

Steamship Agents and Operators

AGENTS

OSAKA SHOSEN KAISHA
(Osaka Mercantile S. S. Co.)

THE TEXAS COMPANY
Petroleum Products

LOS ANGELES
Central Building

SAN FRANCISCO
503 Market St.

For better advertising use color

ONE of the greatest developments in modern advertising and selling has been the great increase in the use of colored illustrations. Color is economical: while the first cost is more, the most careful and accurate tests have proved that the results obtained from its use in most catalogs and advertising matter more than justify the additional expense.

Color is effective: only through its use can merchandise be faithfully reproduced in color, form, texture and pattern.

Fine color reproductions stimulate sales. When your next catalog or mailing piece is ready why not consult the color specialists.

INDEPENDENT PRESSROOM

E. L. ALTWATER

W. F. MCKANNAY

300 Broadway San Francisco

Telephone Douglas 6715

CALIFORNIA'S MINERAL INDUSTRY.

It Adds New Products Yearly to Its Supremacy in Platinum, Mercury and Gold.

By FLETCHER HAMILTON
State Mineralogist.

The first recognition by the government of the great industry of mining for precious metals on the public domain of the United States was the Act of Congress of February 27, 1865. By that time mining had been carried on in California for a period of seventeen years with a yield of $770,000,000 in virgin gold. Since the enactment of the mining law referred to almost one billion dollars has been added to the above figure, bringing the total gold production of the state from 1848 to 1921 inclusive to $1,735,922,923.

California's mining interests are state-wide in physical extent; in their diversity of character and variety they are world-wide. Every county contributes to some extent toward the state's output, and over fifty different minerals, not including the many varieties of gem material or miscellaneous stone, are commercially produced.

The annual production figures for individual items, both metallic and non-metallic, vary considerably from year to year. Antimony, cadmium, tin, and tungsten are minerals the value of which ran into thousands for the first three and into the millions of dollars for the last that are not at present on the active list; on the other hand almost every year records the commercial production of one or more mineral products not heretofore mined. Iceland spar, used for optical purposes, was first mined here in 1920, and it is believed the deposit in Modoc County from which it came is the only one in the United States producing calcite of optical quality. In 1921 calcium chloride was placed on the production list for the first time.

Through these vicissitudes California has long maintained its lead as the premier gold producer of the country.

This state is the sole producer of borax, and it remained for many years the only domestic source of chromite and magnesite.

It leads all other states in the output of quicksilver, platinum, and petroleum.

The figures representing the annual production of all minerals in the state, except for minor decreases at rare intervals, have consistently increased for several decades. In 1921 the new wealth thus produced reached the enormous total of $268,157,472. A net increase of $26,057,805 over that of 1920. This total represents the value of the crude minerals or raw products, no refined derivatives being included.

The annual output of mineral products in California is exceeded in value only by that of three or four of the states, usually the great coal and iron producers east of the Mississippi.

In 1921 increases were recorded for petroleum, gold, silver, cement, crushed rock and natural gas. Minerals showing a decrease were copper, quicksilver, lead, several items in the industrial materials group and all of the products of the saline group, with one exception.

It is difficult to discuss briefly and intelligently an industry so important and at the same time so diversified. The mining industry lacks the well-organized "group" force that the agricultural industry enjoys, and the lay public is prone to overlook the part mining plays in the development of our daily life. Yet it is second only to agriculture in importance. Indeed agriculture would find itself in sorry plight without the aid of the products of the mine and quarries. The tractor and gang plow would become a crooked stick, transportation by rail and truck would be unknown, and concrete highways would revert to muddy trails. In fact, civilization as we know it today would be lost in darkness, literally and figuratively.

For reasons such as these the development of the state's mineral resources should be of as deep concern to the banker, lawyer, merchant and artisan as it is to those directly engaged in the industry, for it means the creation of new taxable wealth and a better and richer civilization.

Roughly classified, the commercial minerals of the state may be grouped as fuels, metals, structural materials, industrial materials, and salines. Each group will be briefly mentioned.

FUELS.

The fuels, including coal, natural gas, and petroleum, are by far the state's most valuable mineral products, as measured by the dollar. Together they formed in 1921 nearly 78 per cent. of the state's entire mineral output.

Coal is known to exist in forty-three counties of the state. Many deposits with extensive surface showings have never had a pick driven into them. From their first discovery small commercial importance was attached to a majority of these deposits because the coal is usually low grade, of lignite or sub-bituminous variety, and better fuel has been readily available.

The earliest recorded discovery of coal in this state was in 1847, near the town of San Luis Obispo.

The date of the original discovery of coal in Alameda County is not known, but it was some time previous to 1857, as during that year a shaft one hundred feet deep existed at a point near the present town of Tesla, where a coal bed forty inches thick was exposed.

Coal production was a factor in the mineral industry of California from about 1860 to the early years of the present century, when competition with crude oil almost forced it off the market. As mentioned above, however, it will probably not be long before serious attention will again be given to the coal deposits, both developed and undeveloped.

The amount of coal remaining unmined is of course not absolutely known, but the United States Geological Survey has estimated that the total workable area in California is about 500 square miles and the original contents of all fields 1,000,000,000 short tons.

Total coal production to the end of 1921 has been 5,177,125 tons, equivalent to an exhaustion of approximately 7,000,000 tons, or 7 per cent. of the original supply.

The principal developed coal mines have been those north of Mt. Diablo, Contra Costa County; Corral Hollow, which lies on both sides of the divide between the Livermore Valley and the San Joaquin Valley, mostly in Alameda County; Ione field in the Sierra Nevada foothills, Amador County; Stone Cañon, Monterey County; and near Elnorino, at the eastern base of the Sierra de Santa Ana, Riverside County.

The first economic use of natural gas in California was made from the famous Court House well at Stockton, bored in 1854-1858.

The largest field of commercial importance thus far developed in California is in Western Kern County, followed by Orange, Los Angeles, Ventura and Santa Barbara. One hundred million cubic feet of gas is daily run into commercial gathering lines in Kern County alone. The new oil fields at Long Beach and Santa Fé Springs, in Los Angeles County, are showing up new gas resources. At present one company is selling from a single well eight million cubic feet per day under a casing pressure of 650 pounds per square inch and a tubing pressure of 450 pounds. This well is capable of producing twenty-five million feet per day, open flow. Another well of the same company is yielding five million cubic feet per day. Several counties produce gas not accompanied by oil, particularly Sacramento, San Joaquin, and the Tulare Lake district in Kings and Tulare counties.

Natural gases now being utilized range in heat value from 850 to 1200 B.T.U., which is considerably higher than that of manufactured gas. Over fifty plants are in operation in the state manufacturing gasoline from the gas accompanying the petroleum in the oil fields and during the past year 53,699,797 gallons of gasoline were obtained in this way. The usual recoveries are about one gallon of gasoline per 1000 cubic feet of gas.

The production of natural gas in 1921 was 67,043,797 thousand cubic feet, valued at $4,704,678.

Petroleum, the largest single item on the list of California's mineral products, needs little comment. In spite of the fact that California is known, from its enormous production of the yellow metal, as the Golden State, for the past fifteen years the value of petroleum annually produced has exceeded that of the gold. In 1910 it was double, and by 1920 it was more than twelve times as great. Crude oil production in 1921 amounted to 112,599,860 barrels, valued at $203,138,225. The leading counties contributing to this total are Kern, Orange, Los Angeles, Fresno, Santa Barbara and Ventura. The total value of petroleum produced from the inception of the industry to the end of 1921, though well over one billion dollars, does not as yet exceed the total gold production. Proved oil lands of the state now total 109,214 acres.

METALS.

Thirty-one of the fifty-eight counties of the state were on the gold-producing list the last year. Yuba, Nevada, Amador, Sacramento, Calaveras, Sierra, Butte, Trinity, Mariposa, Shasta and San Bernardino were the leading counties in the order named.

The 1921 production of $15,704,822, though less than that of every year, with one exception, since 1900, was more than twice that of any other state in the Union, including Alaska.

The output is about equally divided between the placer mines and the deep or lode mines. In 1921, due largely to dredge operations, the production of gold from the placer

Telephone SUTTER 4880

LAZARE KLEIN COMPANY DRY GOODS

WHOLESALE DISTRIBUTORS
COMMISSIONAIRES

87-89 First Street

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

HARDWOOD HEADQUARTERS

ASH-BASSWOOD-BIRCH
AROMATIC RED CEDAR COTTONWOOD-ELM-HOLLY
SOUTHERN RED GUM
HICKORY-LAUREL-MAPE
OREGON MAPLE-PLAIN OAK
QUARTERED OAK
WYBROCK BENDING OAK
POPLAR-WALNUT

BOKWOOD-EBONY-IRONBARK
JUNISERO-HOA-SPANISH CEM
LIGHTWYVITAE-MAHOGANY
ROSEWOOD-TEAK-RED BEAN
SPOTTED GUM-CASSIA WALNUT
LUMBER-TIMBER
HARDWOOD FLOORING
WYBRO VENEERED PANELS
DOWELS-TREENAILS-YENEERS

WHITE BROTHERS

FIFTH and BRANNAN STREETS

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Are you sufficiently interested in a good shoe to step off at

Mail's Shoe Store

Fillmore and Post Streets and get a nice comfortable pair of

"BUCKHECT" SHOES

Finest quality soft, mellow Calf Skins.
The price will suit you also.

Take this advertisement with you and get a 5% discount by mentioning The Argonaut

MOUNT DIABLO CEMENT

Awarded Gold Medal P. P. I. E.

Cowell Santa Cruz Lime

Always Used Where Quality Counts

Henry Cowell Lime and Cement Co.

2 Market Street, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

BRANCHES:

Oakland

San Jose

Santa Cruz

Sacramento

Portland, Ore.

Tacoma, Wash.

mines exceeded for the first time since hydraulic mining has been restricted that of the quartz mines. Thirty-five dredges were in operation the past year. Incidentally dredge operations have led to the erection of large rock-crushing plants.

Following gold, the most important metals are copper, silver, quicksilver, platinum, lead, zinc, manganese ore and iron ore. Other metals that have been produced commercially include antimony, cadmium, molybdenum, tin and tungsten. Deposits of nickel and vanadium are known, but to date these metals have not been produced.

Copper has long been second to gold; the principal copper districts being the Shasta County belt, the Coast Range deposits, the Sierra Nevada belt, extending from Plumas County on the north to Kern on the south; the eastern belt in Mono and Inyo counties, and the southern belt in San Bernardino, Riverside, and San Diego counties. Over 98 per cent. of the state's 1921 production of 12,088,053 pounds came from Plumas County.

Silver has usually been found in California associated with gold, copper, lead and zinc ores, but in the Randsburg district, San Bernardino County, a distinct silver camp has been developed in the last two years with a production record that placed the value of silver produced in 1921 ahead of that of copper.

This district has the unique distinction of having been first a gold producer, later during the war the principal tungsten mining district of the state, and more recently of being a phenomenal silver camp. The production of silver from San Bernardino County alone amounted to 3,210,706 ounces in 1921, valued at approximately $1 per ounce.

Quicksilver was one of the first metals mined in California, operations at the New Almaden mine in Santa Clara County dating back to 1824. Total production from 1850 to 1921 inclusive has amounted to 2,188,984 flasks, valued at $106,841,606, and represents approximately 75 per cent. of the nation's output.

Iron ores are known in Shasta, Madera, Placer, Riverside, San Bernardino and a number of other counties, but no cheap coke has been available in the state, and economic conditions have not been favorable for the development of an iron-smelting industry. Production has been nominal. This is not due to any lack of ore, and the development of a steel industry on this Coast in the near future is within the range of possibilities.

STRUCTURAL MATERIALS.
The mineral substances in this group are those more or less directly used in building or structural work. The total value of the products of this branch of the industry in 1921 was $33,477,100. Fifty-five counties contribute to the structural materials list. The largest single item is cement, which amounted to 7,404,221 barrels in 1921, valued at $18,072,120. Other minerals in this group are asphalt and bituminous rock, brick and tile, chromite, granite, lime, magnesite, marble, onyx and travertine, sandstone, serpentine, slate and miscellaneous stone, including paving blocks, grinding-mill pebbles, sand and gravel, and crushed rock. California is independent as far as these minerals are concerned.

INDUSTRIAL MATERIALS.
The mining of the industrial materials, like that of the structural group, is carried on without the romantic background associated with precious metal mining. They are as yet produced on a comparatively small scale, and in the majority of instances for local markets only. The demand for many of these products is growing rapidly, however, and there are many possibilities of development in the industrial materials branch of the industry.

The minerals considered under this heading are largely mineral earths and substances used in various chemical industries and manufacturing processes, not clearly belonging to the other four subdivisions. It includes asbestos, barytes, pottery clay, dolomite, feldspar, Fuller's earth, gems, graphite, gypsum, infusorial and diatomaceous earths, limestone, lithia, mineral water, pumice and volcanic ash, pyrites, silica, soapstone and talc.

Without going into details, a realization of the wide use made of these materials may be formed by glancing at the following list of industries into which a few of them enter.

Asbestos is used in making steam packing, furnace linings, asbestos brick, wall plasters, paints, tiling, asbestos board, shingles, insulating materials, stuccos, and in the manufacture of fireproof cloth, brake linings, rope, etc.

Barytes is used in the manufacture of lithopone, in tanning leather, in making lineoum, paper and rope, and in sugar refining.

Besides its use in pottery ware, clay enters into the manufacture of paper, cotton goods, and various chemicals. Some clays are used extensively in soap manufacture.

Dolomite is used as a refractory lining for steel furnaces and for its carbonic acid gas and magnesia; as a flux in smelting and in the making of paper.

Vegetable and mineral oils are filtered and clarified by the use of Fuller's earth.

Infusorial and diatomaceous earths enter into the manufacture of scouring soaps and polishing powders. They are used in making refractory brick for insulating against both heat and cold. They are used for making phonograph records, and in various pigments, also as a paper filler and in making sealing wax, fireworks, hard-rubber objects, matches, tooth pastes, papier maché, and in the chemical industry.

A complete list of all the industries dependent upon the industrial minerals would be a very large one.

Of one item alone, pottery clay, thirty-six counties made some production in 1921. The leading minerals of this group thus far exploited are limestone, mineral water, pyrite, pottery clays, diatomaceous earth and dolomite. Industrial minerals mined in 1921 were valued at $2,675,438.

SALINES.
Salines produced in California include borax, common salt, soda, potash and other alkaline salts.

Imperial, Inyo, Kern, Los Angeles, San Bernardino and San Luis Obispo counties comprise the area containing the principal saline resources.

Most of the common salt produced is obtained by the evaporation of sea water at plants located in San Francisco Bay, San Diego Bay, and at Long Beach. Borax and salt have been produced since the early 'sixties; soda since 1894; and more recently potash, magnesium chloride and sulphate, and calcium chloride. With the exception of the last, all the minerals of the saline group showed a decrease in 1921 in the value of output, especially borax, potash, and soda, the total production for the past year totaling $2,887,354, compared to over six and a half million for 1920.

As a side light on the mineral industry of the state and an index of its permanency and importance a glance at the geographical classification of the professional directory of engineers, which appears in the leading mining journal of the country, is illuminating.

New York alone exceeds California in the number of professional men listed, and the number in California exceeds those in Arizona, Colorado, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon and Utah combined.

According to the Industrial Accident Commission there were employed in the mines, dredgers, quarries, cement and brick plants approximately 13,000 men during 1921, and about 25,000 men in the oil fields, exclusive of refineries, making a total of 38,000 men employed in the mineral industries of California last year.

These authentic figures and records furnish a background from which no other than an optimistic view of the future of the mining industry can be drawn, and it is evident that with proper development the mineral resources of the state are capable of contributing, almost indefinitely and in ever-growing variety and amount, to the comfort and enjoyment, wealth and prosperity of the state and nation.

The oil refining industry always accumulates a stock of gasoline in the winter and early spring in order to take care of the heavy summer demand. During the first five months of this year the unsold accumulation amounted to 11.8 per cent. of the total production for that period.

Foster & Orear CANDY

Candy for your Holiday remembrances and Christmas Mail Orders
Quality Better than the Best

Breakfast Served regularly equal in quality and service to our Lunch and Tea

After the Theater
Our Kitchen Service is maintained until midnight

FOSTER & OREAR
Tel. Gar. 2500 137 Grant Ave.
FERRY BUILDING

CHAS. C. MOORE & CO., ENGINEERS

COMPLETE POWER PLANTS

Main Office: SHELDON BLDG., SAN FRANCISCO

—BRANCH OFFICES—

Los Angeles    Seattle    Salt Lake    New York    Portland    Tucson

C. J. HENDRY COMPANY

27 MAIN STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
PHONE SUTTER 6800

BRANCHES

435 FRONT STREET, SAN PEDRO, CAL.
C AND INDIA STREETS, SAN DIEGO, CAL.

SHIP CHANDLERY

Engineers' Supplies

Columbian Manila Rope
Coil Chains and Anchors

Fisheries' Supplies

Linen Salmon Netting and Threads
Cotton Netting, Rope and Seine Twine
Fishing Boat Supplies

COLUMBIAN ROPE COMPANY

Overboard—soaked through and through—chafed as it scrapes over the sides of vessels—jerked and strained towing through heavy seas—yet COLUMBIAN comes back ready for its next hard job—as strong and sturdy as ever. The next Manila Line you buy—order COLUMBIAN.

AUBURN, "The Cordage City," N. Y.

Branches: NEW YORK    CHICAGO    BOSTON

THEBO, STARR & ANDERTON, Inc.

ENGINEERS AND CONTRACTORS

DESIGN AND CONSTRUCTION OF POWER PLANTS
HYDRO ELECTRIC DEVELOPMENTS
IRRIGATION AND INDUSTRIAL PROJECTS
APPRAISALS - INVESTIGATIONS - REPORTS
PLANS
SPECIFICATIONS

Head Office:
Sharon Building
San Francisco

Branch Offices:
Merced, Cal.    Fresno, Cal.
Nagoya, Japan    Tokyo, Japan

Translation and Typewriting Bureau

ANNIE WINDSOR, Mgr.

EXPERTS FOR ALL LANGUAGES

Spanish    German
French    Italian, etc.
Catalogues Prepared

STENOGRAPHY    TYPEWRITING
MIMEOGRAPHING, ETC.

815 Merchants Exchange Building
TELEPHONE KEARNY 2283

Sugar Pine Lumber Company

California Sugar Pine,
White Pine,
Redwood and Spruce

Eighth and Harrison Streets
SAN FRANCISCO

Telephone Park 1484

CALIFORNIA OIL IN 1923.

Big Production, Foreign Shipments, and Increased Reserves Are New Factors Upsetting Calculations.

By M. E. LOMBARDI.

The fascination of the oil business, especially that part which deals with the production and sale of crude oil, lies in the fact that it is essentially uncertain. Its uncertainties were never more clearly demonstrated than during the year now drawing to a close. The general course of the business during 1921 might have been very accurately predicted at the end of 1920, but its course during 1922, especially in California, could not have been predicted in 1921. The year just past has been surprising and disconcerting to the would-be prophet. In a year of generally maintained or slightly rising wholesale commodity prices we have had two cuts in the price of crude oil and one in gasoline (I refer now to California only). In a year of increasing consumption, occasioned by the general revival of industry, we have had a large addition to oil placed in storage. In a year during which it was expected that the older proven fields would have to produce their utmost to supply the demand, we have seen the older fields slow up in development work and shut down hundreds of producing wells. And most surprising of all we have seen California oil shipped away from the Pacific Coast, its usual market, to the Eastern seaboard and even to Europe, via the Canal, sailing past the hitherto very prolific fields of Mexico.

All these surprising things were occasioned, of course, by a surplus of oil. This surplus was occasioned by the rapid development of three remarkably rich areas in Southern California—Huntington Beach, Long Beach, and Santa Fé Springs. All of these areas were proved to be oil-bearing previous to 1922, and Huntington Beach development was well under way a year ago. But the big increase in production came during the past year and the end of this movement is not yet in sight.

Statistics reflecting the trend of production, consumption, refining and other information which can be reduced to figures are given, with comments, at the end of this article, and the reader is invited to peruse them and perhaps draw some conclusions for himself. First, however, I will endeavor to point out some of the high lights of the business.

Broadly the oil industry is of two parts:

first, the production of crude oil, and, second, its refining and distribution to the public. There are many more producers of oil than there are refiners and distributors, though many of the large companies carry on both functions. The basis of the industry is the production of the crude; therein lies enormous and quickly convertible wealth, and therein also lie the uncertainties of the industry and the chance to conserve or squander the material wealth of the state. Refining is akin to manufacturing. It can go on forever as long as the raw material can be bought. If sufficient crude oil is not produced within the state it can be brought in. But the business of producing oil stops with the exhaustion of the state's oil resources—a large but unknown quantity—and it is therefore with mixed feelings that some producers view the present overproduction of oil in California.

At the beginning of this year field operations were just recovering from the effects of the so-called oil workers' strike of the fall of 1921. Most of the wells were on production again and although the supply was somewhat greater than the demand it was anticipated that business would be good in 1922. The price of oil in January was on a basis of $1.10 per barrel for crude at the well of 17.9° gravity or less. Costs of production and development were on a satisfactory basis. Wholesale commodity prices showed a tendency to rise and, assuming that the experienced operators would not overdevelop their holdings, there was no reason to expect radical reductions in the price of crude oil. In January production was 316,000 barrels per day.

About this time, however, two factors tending to increase drilling began to be felt. The first was the decision of the government to lease and require development of its holdings in the Elk Hills and Buena Vista Hills in Kern County (Naval Reserves Nos. 1 and 2). This move caused the production of at least 25,000 barrels per day which would otherwise have remained in the ground. It is but fair to say that, later, when the overproduction from the new southern fields became apparent, the government wisely allowed its lessees to reduce their drilling and shut in some wells.

The second factor tending to force production was the opening of Long Beach, Santa Fé Springs, and the deeper sands at Huntington Beach. These fields are essentially different from the older San Joaquin Valley fields in the following respect. In the valley the land overlying the oil measures was desert land. That part which was owned by citizens was in large blocks, but most of it was unappropriated government land or railroad grant land in blocks of one square mile each. The result was that the surface was acquired by oil men for oil purposes and in comparatively large lots—say forty acres or more.

In the case of the new southern fields, however, the surface of the land was divided into small holdings, small farms and even town lots. Sometimes these small holdings were consolidated by the large companies, who were first in the field, into leases of normal size, but too often each lot was converted into an generally the case in California while the bulk of production came from the valley and the old coast fields.

But the picture is not without its darker side also. The availability of small holdings of rich oil land attracted to our midst the well-trained stock company promoter from the Mid-Continent and Texas fields, who later developed into the "Unit Seller." These gentlemen scatter broadcast the opportunity to invest small amounts of money in oil. The probable profit on an acre is divided into infinitesimal parts and these parts sold for substantial sums. The buyer loses, unless a near miracle occurs, but the promoter is enabled to pay enormous prices for the land or the lease; thus preventing conservative operators from securing land at legitimate prices. Cases are known where land was leased at 50 per cent. royalty besides a princely bonus of several thousand dollars per acre.

By May of this year the state's production

| PRODUCTION BY FIELDS—CALIFORNIA. |             |                        |                                  |
|----------------------------------|-------------|------------------------|----------------------------------|
| Field.                           | 1921.       | 1922.                  | 1922 (est.)                      |
| Kern River                       | 7,456,515   | 6,715,680              | 7,402,937                        |
| McKittrick                       | 2,607,240   | 2,056,101              | 2,442,659                        |
| Midway-Sunset                    | 37,917,010  | 46,871,740             | 30,228,981                       |
| *Elk Hills                       |             |                        | 11,785,069                       |
| Lost Hills-Belridge              | 4,139,767   | 3,261,281              | 2,845,124                        |
| Coalinga                         | 15,464,198  | 12,340,637             | 9,325,946                        |
| Santa Maria                      | 5,928,060   | 5,563,324              | 3,889,551                        |
| Ventura-Newhall                  | 2,122,449   | 2,375,479              | 3,052,419                        |
| Los Angeles-Salt Lake            | 1,311,264   | 1,344,926              | 1,324,385                        |
| Whittier                         | 28,694,163  | 31,681,417             | 915,527                          |
| *Fullerton                       |             |                        | 6,142,571                        |
| *Coyote                          |             |                        | 7,187,911                        |
| *Santa Fé Springs                |             |                        | 9,383,616                        |
| *Montebello                      |             |                        | 6,911,617                        |
| *Richfield                       |             |                        | 8,413,092                        |
| Huntington-Newport               |             | 2,561,149              | 10,284,167                       |
| Long Beach                       |             |                        | 16,565,421                       |
| *Relondo                         |             |                        | 136,310                          |
| Summerland                       | 54,910      | 54,155                 | 54,461                           |
| Watsonville                      | 25,610      | 24,035                 | 23,127                           |
| Totals                           | 105,721,186 | 114,849,924            | 138,314,885                      |
| *Included in Sunset-Midway.      |             | †Included in Whittier. | ‡Included in Huntington-Newport. |

oil lease and the race for the precious and migratory fluid beneath was on. The inevitable result was overdrilling of the productive area, tremendous new production, great expenditure of capital with large profits and considerable losses.

An interesting and very satisfactory corollary, however, appears at this point. This great increase in wealth is largely staying at home. Californians right on the ground are sharing this wealth with the stockholders of the large oil companies. The population nearby is getting its share, through royalties, of the money made in oil. This has been the case in other states—notably Texas, where the wealth created through discovery and production of oil has been promptly reflected in the near-by communities. But it had not been had risen to 357,000 barrels per day. Indicated consumption was at that time 287,000 barrels per day, or about 70,000 barrels per day was going into storage. At that time production for the three new southern fields was as follows:

|                          | Bbls. per day. |
|--------------------------|----------------|
| Huntington Beach-Newport | 23,500         |
| Long Beach               | 25,700         |
| Santa Fé Springs         | 9,300          |

Total.....57,500
So that they were producing about 16 per cent. of the state's total.

New oil companies were being organized every day and several hundred new wells were being drilled. There was now no longer any doubt that the production of these fields would greatly increase during the summer

THIS BRAND

Wherever Found

Toilet Articles

Household Remedies

Greatest Reliability and Highest Merit

IT IS "THE BRAND OF EXCELLENCE"

ASK FOR IT AT YOUR DRUGGIST

PROPRIETORS
Langley & Michaels Company
SAN FRANCISCO

Mrs. NETTIE HARRISON'S 4-DAY HAIR COLOR is the only entirely successful and satisfactory preparation to STOP GRAY HAIR. Simple, cleanly and clear as water. Contains no lead, sulphur, or other harmful ingredient. Sold for twenty years, used and recommended by satisfied thousands. If "dyes" and "restorers" have disappointed you, try this. It never fails. $1.00. At all druggists.

and that the buying companies would be hard put to take care of the oil.

In October production of the state was 432,885 barrels per day, of which about 42,000 barrels per day was going into storage, the rest being consumed in the state or shipped outside of the state. The probabilities are that at that time some thousands of barrels per day were being shipped away from California's normal markets.

Of this October production the three new fields were supplying oil as follows:

|                          |        |
|--------------------------|--------|
|                          | Bbls.  |
| Huntington Beach-Newport | 41,000 |
| Long Beach               | 90,000 |
| Santa Fé Springs         | 59,000 |

Total.....190,000

So that they were supplying about 44 per cent. of the state's production. At this time some 70,000 barrels per day of old production was held "shut in," mostly in the valley and old coastal fields.

The latest figures available indicate that November production for the state will be about 460,000 barrels per day, and for these three fields:

|                          |         |                       |
|--------------------------|---------|-----------------------|
|                          | Bbls.   | No. of per day wells. |
| Huntington Beach-Newport | 64,000  | 190                   |
| Long Beach               | 111,000 | 125                   |
| Santa Fé Springs         | 89,000  | 62                    |

Total.....264,000 377

These fields, therefore, are supplying nearly 60 per cent. of the state's production at the present time.

The result was that during the summer of 1922 it became evident that a condition was developing which was quite similar to the one brought about by the Lakeview No. 1 gusher in 1910, i. e., a new production approximating 50 per cent. of the normal production was being dumped on the market without giving the marketing companies time to prepare for it and with no regard for demand. The inevitable reaction was a lowering of the price of crude oil. The base price at the well was reduced on July 15, 1922, from $1.10 per barrel to 85 cents per barrel, and on July 25th to 60 cents per barrel where it now stands.

It was no doubt hoped that this 50-cent reduction would accomplish two things, i. e., slow up the new drilling and increase consumption. It entirely failed to slow up drilling in the new fields above mentioned, though it did slow it up in the older fields, except where the government insisted on drilling by its lessees, and it shut down a large number of the older pumping wells. Eventually the price cut also increased shipments, since California oil is now going to markets hitherto supplied largely by Mexican oil.

In this connection it is interesting to note that competent engineers and geologists working under the direction of the American Petroleum Institute and the United States Geological Survey estimated the California oil situation as of July, 1921, as follows: Past

| PROVEN OIL LANDS—CALIFORNIA.(Source—California State Mining Bureau Reports.) |        |        |        |
|--|--------|--------|--------|
| County.  | 1920.  | 1921.  | 1922.  |
| Fresno   | 12,924 | 14,232 | 14,356 |
| Kern   | 58,371 | 59,757 | 68,557 |
| Los Angeles  | 2,931  | 2,959  | 4,524  |
| Orange   | 3,879  | 4,666  | 7,163  |
| Ventura  | 2,172  | 2,878  | 3,940  |
| Santa Barbara  | 9,663  | 9,223  | 9,343  |
| San Luis Obispo  | 772    | 772    | 772    |
| Santa Clara  | 80     | 80     | 80     |

Totals.....91,792 94,567 108,735

Note—Kern County, where the Elk Hills field is located, shows the largest gain in proven lands. Next in order comes Orange County (Huntington Beach) and Los Angeles County (Santa Fé Springs and Long Beach). It is notable that the great increase in production has come from a comparatively small increase in proven land.

NUMBER OF PRODUCING WELLS AND AVERAGE DAILY PRODUCTION AS OF AUGUST—CALIFORNIA.

|                  | 1918. | 1919. | 1920. | 1921. | 1922.  |
|------------------|-------|-------|-------|-------|--------|
| Producing wells  | 8,340 | 8,948 | 9,434 | 9,972 | 10,424 |
| Average per well |       |       |       |       |        |
| per days, bbls.  | 34    | 31    | 31    | 32    | 33     |

Note—The figure for producing wells, August, 1922, indicates the number of wells capable of production. As a matter of fact only 9006 wells were actually producing owing to the number shut down on account of overproduction. The average production per well on this latter basis was 38.6 bbls. per day, showing an apparent gain over 1921, due to the uniformly large wells in the new southern fields.

| CRUDE OIL PRICES—CALIFORNIA.(Source—Standard Oil Bulletins.) |        |       |      |      |       |      |          |          |      |
|--|--------|-------|------|------|-------|------|----------|----------|------|
| 1920.  |        |       |      |      | 1921. |      |          |          |      |
| Jan.   | March. | July. | Jan. | May. | Aug.  | Jan. | Jul. 15. | Jul. 25. |      |
| 14° to 17.9° Inc.  | 1.23   | 1.48  | 1.60 | 1.60 | 1.35  | 1.10 | 1.10     | .85      | .60  |
| 18° to 18.9° "   | 1.24   | 1.49  | 1.61 | 1.61 | 1.36  | 1.11 | 1.11     | .85      | .60  |
| 19° to 19.9° "   | 1.26   | 1.51  | 1.63 | 1.63 | 1.38  | 1.13 | 1.13     | .85      | .60  |
| 20° to 20.9° "   | 1.29   | 1.54  | 1.66 | 1.66 | 1.41  | 1.16 | 1.16     | .88      | .63  |
| 21° to 21.9° "   | 1.33   | 1.58  | 1.70 | 1.70 | 1.45  | 1.20 | 1.20     | .92      | .67  |
| 22° to 22.9° "   | 1.38   | 1.65  | 1.75 | 1.75 | 1.50  | 1.25 | 1.25     | .98      | .73  |
| 23° to 23.9° "   | 1.44   | 1.69  | 1.81 | 1.81 | 1.56  | 1.31 | 1.31     | 1.05     | .80  |
| 24° to 24.9° "   | 1.51   | 1.76  | 1.88 | 1.88 | 1.63  | 1.38 | 1.38     | 1.13     | .88  |
| 25° to 25.9° "   | 1.59   | 1.84  | 1.96 | 1.96 | 1.71  | 1.46 | 1.46     | 1.21     | .96  |
| 26° to 26.9° "   | 1.68   | 1.93  | 2.05 | 2.05 | 1.80  | 1.55 | 1.55     | 1.30     | 1.05 |
| For each increase in gravity for one full degree above           |        |       |      |      |       |      |          |          |      |
| 26° to 34.9° Inc. per bbl.                                       |        |       |      |      |       |      |          |          |      |
| additional   | .10    | .10   | .10  | .10  | .10   | .10  | .10      | .10      | .10  |
| 35° and above  | 2.58   | 2.83  | 2.95 | 2.95 | 2.70  | 2.45 | 2.45     | 2.20     | 1.95 | production, 1,415,000,000 barrels; future production, 1,680,000,000 barrels; ultimate production, 3,095,000,000 barrels.

The belief was, at that time, that we had some ten to fifteen years' supply still to take out, assuming a reasonable rate of increase in consumption, and that in considerably less than ten years the daily rate at which oil could be produced would not be sufficient to supply the state's daily requirements.

So often, however, have the pessimists been proven wrong in their prediction of a shortage

| AVERAGE PRODUCTION PER WELL PER DAY (SIX FIELDS) |       |
|--|-------|
| Old Fields.                                      | Bbls. |
| Coalinga   | 29    |
| Kern River                                       | 9     |
| Sunset-Midway                                    | 60    |
| New Fields.                                      |       |
| Santa Fé Springs                                 | 1200  |
| Huntington Beach                                 | 260   |
| Signal Hill                                      | 1000  |

The above comparison shows why a great many wells in the older fields have been shut down and illustrates the richness of the three new fields. On the other hand, costs of drilling in the new fields are very high, especially at Santa Fé Springs, where wells costing $130,000 to $150,000 are not unusual.

WELLS DRILLED DURING FIRST NINE MONTHS. (Source—Standard Oil Bulletins.)

| Field.                              | 1920. | 1921. | 1922. |
|-------------------------------------|-------|-------|-------|
| Kern River                          | 67    | 70    | 24    |
| McKittrick                          | 8     | 3     | 4     |
| Midway-Sunset (inc. Elk Hills)      | 223   | 223   | 204   |
| Lost Hills-Beiridge                 | 23    | 15    | 4     |
| Coalinga                            | 47    | 49    | 11    |
| Lompoc and Santa Maria              | 25    | 16    | 3     |
| Ventura County and Newhall          | 18    | 40    | 25    |
| Los Angeles and Salt Lake           | 7     | 5     |       |
| Whittier-Fullerton (inc. Richfield) | 96    | 126   | 68    |
| Huntington Beach                    | 40    | 270   |       |

Unfortunately Santa Fé Springs and Long Beach are not segregated in the above tabulation. Note that the bulk of the drilling in the first nine months of 1922 was in the Midway-Sunset-Elk Hills field (government leases) and in the new southern fields.

in former producing areas, and in function of the more prolific fields to supply these shortages.

The world war left us with a greatly augmented fleet of large and efficient tankers, so that the question of transportation for long distances by sea, as well as by pipe line and overland, is being rapidly solved. Therefore, it is uneconomical to contend that local deposits should be used locally only. It is the best thing for the oil business and for the wealth of the world to use our deposits as they are found and transport the oil from the places where it is plentiful to those places that need it. No better example of this can be found than the movement of oil through the canal in 1922. Previous to this year tremendously prolific wells in Mexico had led

DAILY AVERAGE PRODUCTION AND CONSUMPTION OF CRUDE OIL IN CALIFORNIA IN BARRELS.

| Month.    | Production. | Shipments. | Storage. |
|-----------|-------------|------------|----------|
| January   | 315,755     | 273,499    | 42,256   |
| February  | 324,267     | 303,977    | 20,290   |
| March     | 333,737     | 284,945    | 48,792   |
| April     | 341,077     | 271,487    | 69,590   |
| May       | 357,376     | 287,447    | 69,929   |
| June      | 355,274     | 306,186    | 49,088   |
| July      | 373,695     | 318,167    | 55,528   |
| August    | 382,221     | 299,000    | 83,221   |
| September | 406,838     | 340,600    | 66,238   |
| October   | 432,885     | 390,610    | 42,275   |
| November  | 460,000     | 415,275    | 44,725   |

Assuming that the figures for December will approximate those for November, the totals for the year 1922 will be: Production, 138,314,885; consumption and shipments, 118,882,029; put in storage, 19,432,856. This is a new high record in production. Total storage on November 1st was about $7,500,000 bbls., which is not as great as the peak storage in May, 1915, when it was about 59,600,000 bbls. However, the 1915 storage was accumulated during the few years previous and consisted mostly of fuel oil below 20° B. gravity. The present storage consists of fuel oil in reservoirs, but also very largely of refinable crude in expensive steel tankage and also of a large quantity of tops, so that its value is much greater than the 1915 storage. This is because of the change in the quality of oil being produced in the state as illustrated by the next table.

CHANGE IN GRAVITY OF OIL PRODUCED IN CALIFORNIA, 1909-1922.

|      | Pct. under 20° B. | Pct. 20° B. and over. |
|------|-------------------|-----------------------|
| 1909 | 85                | 15                    |
| 1910 | 71                | 29                    |
| 1911 | 69                | 31                    |
| 1912 | 69                | 31                    |
| 1913 | 56                | 44                    |
| 1914 | 47                | 53                    |
| 1915 | 35                | 65                    |
| 1916 | 26                | 74                    |
| 1922 | 26                | 74                    |

producers to develop a very large fuel oil market in the industrial centres of the East. With this market developed, the Mexican supply began to fail during the past year, a temporary failure we hope, but at the same time the new fields in Southern California

BALFOUR, GUTHRIE & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO AND LOS ANGELES

PORTLAND, OREGON

SEATTLE AND TACOMA, WASHINGTON, AND VANCOUVER, B. C.

MERCHANTS EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS STEAMSHIP AGENTS MARINE AND FIRE INSURANCE AVERAGE ADJUSTERS

AGENTS

HARRISON DIRECT LINE

Regular Fast Freight Service

BETWEEN

London, Liverpool, Glasgow and North Pacific Ports

INSURANCE AGENCIES

MARINE
AGENTS

The American & Foreign Marine Insurance Co.
British & Foreign Marine Insurance Co., Ltd.
The Yang-Tsze Insurance Association, Ltd.
North China Insurance Company, Ltd.
Queensland Insurance Company, Ltd.
Union Insurance Society of Canton, Ltd.
New Zealand Insurance Co., Ltd. (Marine Dept.)
The Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Company (Marine Dept.)

FIRE

PACIFIC DEPARTMENT

American Insurance Company, Newark, N. J.
Caledonian Insurance Company, Edinburgh
Camden Fire Insurance Association, Camden, N. J.
North China Insurance Company, Ltd.
Queensland Insurance Company, Ltd.
Rochester Dept. Great American Insurance Co., N. Y.
Union Insurance Society of Canton, Limited

— REPRESENTED BY —

BALFOUR, WILLIAMSON & CO.

London, Liverpool, New York, Havana

BALFOUR AGENCIES

Chicago

WILLIAMSON, BALFOUR & CO.

Valparaiso, Etc., Chile

came into production and it was easy, with our improved tanker service, to take up the burden where Mexico left off, and keep the wheels of industry turning in the East; and this is as it should be.

During this year of intense and successful activity in producing oil the other division of the industry, refining and distributing, made noble efforts also. It was necessary to build new storage facilities of some twelve to fifteen million barrels capacity costing from 25 cents to 50 cents per barrel besides miles of pipe line gathering systems, all installed in record time. Besides additions to the older established refineries new companies are now being formed to go into the business, though it is to be hoped that expansion of refinery capacity will not be overdue as it was in some parts of the Texas and Mid-Continent fields during flush production times. The established refineries are giving us plenty of gasoline and improving their products. During the year it has been demonstrated that a California refinery can produce the peer of the world's best lubricants from our native oil, a notable scientific achievement right here at home.

The large buying companies were confronted with a difficult problem in handling the flood of oil offered from the new fields.

| NUMBER AND CAPACITIES OF REFINERIES IN CALIFORNIA. |             |                   |             |
|--|-------------|-------------------|-------------|
|  | 1920.       | January 1st 1921. | *1922.      |
| Number . . . . .                                   | 41          | 41                | 50          |
| Capacities (bbls.) . . . .                         | 320,000     | 313,000           | 335,000     |
| *To December 1st.                                  |             |                   |             |
| CRUDE OIL REFINED.                                 |             |                   |             |
|  | 1920.       | 1921.             | 1922 (est.) |
| Barrels . . . . .                                  | 76,000,000  | 85,800,000        | 96,000,000  |
| GASOLINE MANUFACTURED.                             |             |                   |             |
|  | 1920.       | 1921.             | 1922 (est.) |
| Gallons . . . . .                                  | 496,000,000 | 520,000,000       | 645,000,000 |
| Imports . . . . .                                  | 90,000,000  | 120,000,000       | 100,000,000 |
|  | 586,000,000 | 640,000,000       | 745,000,000 |

They did not hesitate to invest millions in handling facilities. Some of them even shut in their own wells in other fields to make room for oil offered by small producers. They took care of the flush production promptly and efficiently with a minimum loss to all concerned.

Briefly the outstanding feature of the oil industry in California in 1922 has been the quick development of the three very rich areas in Southern California. The most important effects of the resultant overproduction have been as follows:

A drop in the base price of crude oil at the well of 50 cents per barrel.

Shipping of California oil into new markets which are far beyond markets hitherto served.

The investment of large amounts of capital in new facilities, while capital already invested in similar facilities in the older fields is lying idle because of the forced "shut down" of wells.

Greatly increasing the number of beneficiaries of the petroleum wealth of the state, but also increasing the number of small investors in unsound ventures with little chance of anything except loss.

The record for 1922 has been spectacular, and a justification of the optimist's view that our supply of oil bids fair to be continually augmented by future discoveries based on skillful and scientific prospecting.

CALIFORNIA SECURITIES IN THE EAST.

General Developments of the Year, and the Investment Bankers' Visit, Have Advanced them to High Position.

Substantial advance has been made by the great corporations of California during the year 1922. At no time in the history of the state have they occupied the position of esteem among investors that they now hold. They are now so well known in the Eastern markets, and the magnitude of their operations is so well recognized, that their securities occupy first rank and are among the leaders in their respective classes. The securities of the West no longer need an introduction to Eastern investors. On the stock exchanges, in the broader investment markets, at home as well as abroad, they have achieved preeminence. The world looks to California for much that it must have—that it can not do without—and the system of organization of the state's great corporations, their conservative yet withal enterprising management, their financial solidity, and the absence of "get rich quick" methods, have won for them the respect of the world of finance and business.

Yet much has happened during the year to still further strengthen them and advance them in the regard of investors. Although California and the Western states are able to assist the nation in great projects, and as well to do much of the financing of their own particular money needs, yet to such magnitude have these projects attained that always the help of the financial markets is needed. Anything that tends to advance the standing of the California corporations in these markets is a distinct gain to the state generally.

In this respect the holding of the Investment Bankers' Association at Del Monte during the year was one of the greatest of the world's financial events so far as the State of California was concerned. These bankers, men who are engaged now in underwriting and finding money for the great enterprises of the world, came to California and saw at first hand what they had been reading about and what had been proved to them by statistics, which do not always tell the whole story. They were shown the wonders of California's wealth, above the ground and below it, in the plains and in the mountains, and went away, not only impressed, but amazed. It was not only the princely entertainment, because these princes of finance were not of the sort to allow mere physical entertainment to overshadow more practical things, but the actual workings of the great corporations, their policies and management, and the great results that had been and would be accomplished. The hydro-electric projects now under way, some of them well toward completion, the work going on of furnishing a great part of the world's food supply, the vastness of the oil operations, a matter in which the nation is so keenly interested, and the general industrial development, were laid before them in a manner which they could not forget.

Their attitude is well expressed by one of the leaders of the association in a remark to the writer. "Why you have an empire!" he said. "It is almost unbelievable."

"This attitude they carried back with them, and the effect is bound to be noted when California needs capital for the successful completion of her great undertakings—indeed it is noted now when the standing of the California corporations during the recent slight market depressions is compared with those of other sections.

California does much of her own financing and there is scarcely an underwriting of importance in which her investment firms are not participants. Eastern money kings have learned that there is an investment market this side of the Rockies of which they have need. Here it is as well known that the need for their support exists as well. The amount of financing now going on in California is marvelous and is scarcely understood. When one is told that during the nine months ending with September the railroad commission, a conservative body, authorized the issuance of $152,896,312.10 par value of stocks, bonds and notes, every cent of which is to be spent in the state, and most of it on construction work by the corporations alone, and irrespective of what may be spent by private capital, or by corporations not under the jurisdiction of the railroad commission, in fact chiefly by the public utilities of the state, the magnitude of the amount is stupendous. This amount is $44,895,393.60 greater than the authorizations of the commission for the corresponding nine months of 1921, when the total was $108,918,050. The figures are exact and were furnished by W. C. Fankhauser, the commission's able stock and bond expert.

Very extensive construction work has been undertaken by all the public utility corporations and many of these projects are well advanced. The Pacific Gas and Electric Company during the year placed in operation the first important unit of its great Pit River power plant, which, when completed, will harness natural forces to the extent of 600,000 horsepower and will cost at least $100,000,000. It is probably the second greatest hydro-electric proposition in the world and second only to Niagara.

Pacific Gas and Electric Company was authorized during the first part of the year to issue $10,000,000 par value of its preferred stock and has been highly successful in the marketing of this. It was permitted as well to issue $679,976 of its common stock and $10,000,000 of its first and refunding bonds, the latter largely for the purpose of redeeming its outstanding 7 per cent. notes. It had already in the latter part of 1921 issued $10,000,000 in bonds for construction purposes. With the Pit River power plant placed in operation in September the 1922 construction expenditures of the company are estimated at $18,349,000.

It must be understood that the financing of these various corporations laps over from year to year and that actual issuance of securities does not always follow upon the heels of authorizations.

Great Western Power Company, which is also carrying forward to completion its remarkable Caribou project, has spent millions during the year. It received authorization to issue $3,232,000 of its preferred stock, and $3,000,000 of its bonds to complete its hydro-electric development, construct its new Golden Gate station, and for general additions and betterments to its system. It had also financed heavily during the previous year, much of the expenditure of the money raised having been carried into this year's operations.

Both Northern and Southern California utilities are carrying on the work of development of the hydro-electric possibilities of the state and the southern corporations have accomplished much and have extensive programmes. Southern California Edison Corporation will probably by the end of the year have spent more in this work than any of the other corporations of the state. Its 1922 expenditures are estimated at $22,500,000. The ultimate work of this company will run into several hundred millions of dollars and will include the harnessing of the Colorado River and the development of hundreds of thousands of horsepower for industrial activity on the Coast. Southern California Edison applied for and received authorization for much

Oakland's HOME BANK

The Oakland Bank and its branches form a distinctly "home" institution. To be of service in building up the city and accommodating its people, is the goal set by the officers of this bank.

The Oakland Bank (Formerly The Oakland Bank of Savings)

ESTABLISHED 1867

12th and Broadway
Oakland :: California

MAX I. KOSHLAND INVESTMENTS

Mills Building, Suite 12

GROUND FLOOR

SPECIALIZING

STOCKS, BONDS,
Investment Securities

MEMBER OF SAN FRANCISCO STOCK AND BOND EXCHANGE

THE FLOOD BUILDING

Market, Powell and Ellis Streets

THE LARGEST, HANDSOMEST AND MOST MODERN

MEDICAL BUILDING

IN THE WEST

Equipped in every particular for the Medical professions. Over 400 Surgeons, Physicians and Dentists. Special attention has been given to the requirements of the Medical professions in the reconstruction of the building. Every modern facility of the most approved type has been installed. All offices are equipped with hot and cold filtered water, compressed air outlets, alternating and direct electric current and gas. Dental and surgical floor drains at locations prescribed by the manufacturers of dental and surgical equipment.

A limited number of suites will be available February 1, 1923. Make reservations now.

For the convenience of tenants and their patients, a limited number of the highest type of commercial medical specialties and laboratories have been secured as tenants, the following being a partial list:

- |                                 |   |
|---------------------------------|---|
| 4 Prescription Pharmacies       | 1 Anatomical Laboratory                 |
| 7 Commercial X-Ray Laboratories | 9 Dental Laboratories                   |
| 6 Dental Supply Companies       | 3 Pathological Laboratories             |
| 1 Surgical Appliance Sales Room | 1 Medico Specialty Laboratory           |
| 1 Biologic Depot                | 1 Opticians' and Oculists' Supply Depot |
| 1 Radium Supply Sales Room      |   |

A careful scrutiny of references of all applicants for offices insures a building of exceptionally high character and desirability. Rents are as reasonable as in smaller and less prominent buildings.

For Reservations and Further Particulars apply to Telephone: Garfield 1718

OFFICE OF THE BUILDING, ROOM 603

G. CHEVASSUS, Manager

financing in 1921. During 1922 the company was permitted to issue $5,000,000 of common stock, $9,500,000 of preferred stock, and $2,775,000 of bonds. During October the company sold $10,000,000 of bonds for construction purposes. It further obtained funds by selling to the City of Los Angeles for approximately $11,800,000 net its distributing system located within the city limits. The proceeds of the sale of these properties are being used for construction purposes. Investment of the proceeds made it unnecessary for the company to entirely finance its expenditures for this year through the issuance of stocks and bonds.

Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation is another southern company which has a broad programme of development and enlargement of its present system of gas production and distribution system. Its estimated expenditures for the present year amount to, for construction, a total of $10,750,000. To meet this it has been authorized to issue $4,000,000 of preferred stock and $7,000,000 in bonds.

Western States Gas and Electric Company is constructing a new hydro-electric plant to further meet the needs of its customers in Northern California, and for its extensive work was authorized to issue $131,000 of preferred stock and $5,195,000 of bonds, of which $5,000,000 was for hydro-electric development. During October the company was authorized to issue another $5,000,000 to refund outstanding notes, and to pay for the construction of important extensions and betterments to its present system.

San Joaquin Light and Power Corporation will spend this year a total (estimated) amount of $7,374,000, all for construction purposes in the carrying out of its hydro-electric and irrigation projects, which like the other great corporations are on an ambitious scale. This company has been allowed to issue $5,000,000 of preferred stock and $6,125,000 of bonds to finance 1921 and 1922 construction expenditures, the previous year's financing and construction having been on a heavy scale.

San Diego Consolidated Gas and Electric Company is spending more than $2,000,000 this year in construction work and spent a great deal of money for similar work in the previous year. It received permission to issue a total of $1,687,000 of common and preferred stock and $1,500,000 of bonds during the year.

Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company took advantage of declining interest rates during the year and permanently financed, through the issue of $25,000,000 of 6 per cent. preferred stock and $25,000,000 of 5 per cent. bonds, its construction expenditures from 1914 to the end of 1922. This company estimates its expenditures for the present year, including those of its subsidiaries, as in excess of $25,000,000.

Here alone for public utility corporations of California are expenditures for 1922 of approximately $120,000,000, the greater part of which is spent in the state and much of it for labor and materials produced here.

This estimate will probably be increased, for the latter three months of the year sees the corporations without the dread of ruinous legislation such as the Water and Power Act, which, hanging over the heads of the companies during the summer and fall, must have been a deterrent, although the figures do not appear to show it. Killed by the people of California themselves, there is not the probability of any near future attempts and the companies are in a position to go ahead with the greater development work they have planned.

The figures given are only of the great corporations. There are hundreds of smaller projects, all being pushed ahead with the usual California grit and enterprise, nor are

From a garage to a skyscraper

FROM the foundation up we serve the builder in fabricating and installing steel bars in reinforced concrete structures. Architects and engineers confronted with difficult problems avail themselves of the knowledge and experience accumulated by this organization.

Gunn, Carle & Co.

444 Market Street

Sutter 2720

L. DINKELSPIEL CO.

113-135 BATTERY STREET

SAN FRANCISCO

Dry Goods

Importers and Exporters
Wholesale Dealers

Dry Goods; Men's and Ladies' Underwear, Hosiery, etc.; Notions, Ribbons, Laces; Silks, Dress Goods; Linens
House Furnishings, etc.

Your Account Is Invited
Catalogues Upon Application

NEW STANDARD OIL BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

GEORGE W. KELHAM, Architect

GRANITEX TERRA COTTA, GRANITEX FACE BRICKS and TILE ROOF
FURNISHED AND LAID BY

GLADDING, McBEAN & COMPANY,

CROCKER BUILDING

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

the figures of Hetch Hetchy development, which were very large, perhaps greater than they would have been under private enterprise, included.

California is leading the United States in hydro-electric development, and the figures just given are an indication that the lead will be increased.

Prosperity among the great corporations of the state is manifested by recent developments, chief perhaps of which is the action of Standard Oil of California in its stock dividend of 100 per cent., an achievement not yet equaled by any other corporation of the state, and only in amounts beaten by the declarations of sister Standard corporations. That a California corporation, deriving its revenues from production in the state, was able to show this indication of prosperity argues well for the industry and gave the lie to reports of declining profits from petroleum.

Union Oil Company of California is about to follow in the lead of Standard Oil; and others, such as General Petroleum Corporation, have under way heavy financing operations.

Productive activity increased greatly generally in California and wonders were accomplished by the oil corporations. The opening of the new Santa Fé Springs field greatly increased production, perhaps too greatly, for there was for some months an overproduction. In the petroleum fields during September the record figures was reached of 406,838 barrels a day and stored stocks on October 1st totaled 56,259,301 barrels, the largest amount held in storage since January, 1916.

There have been few failures in California among the manufacturing corporations or even individuals. Even during the times of depression the California companies were able to hold their heads above water, and every month brings reports of increasing earnings to almost every company. There has been little unemployment of labor, reports to the Federal Reserve Bank showing that in this respect the state has been a leader. Industrial activity was not halted by the matters which have affected other sections of the Union.

STOCK EXCHANGE SCORES RECORD YEAR.

Stock exchanges are business barometers as well as for assisting in business development. That the San Francisco Stock and Bond Exchange had a record year in the total of securities handled is in itself an indication of prosperity for the corporations whose securities were traded in. It is noteworthy as well that high prices of the securities of California corporations prevailed during the year and that the conditions which led to material declines in prices in Wall Street were followed here by comparatively slight recessions.

During the fiscal year ended with September the San Francisco Stock and Bond Exchange, which has become one of the most important mediums for the interchange of securities in the country and has some peculiarly distinctive features of its own, recorded the largest total value of transactions as well as the highest volume of business of any year in its history, the aggregate market value of the business being $132,462,445. Of this $64,025,266 represented transactions in bonds and $68,442,278 bond sales. The total of transactions for the previous year was but $97,913,644, thus showing a gain for the year of $34,553,900, or more than 35 per cent.

All the leading California stocks were well represented in the trading, with prices on the upward trend for most of the year. Public utility stocks were among the leaders, water stocks of the market value of $5,041,485 changing hands, sales of gas and electric shares amounting to $10,728,451, and railroad shares of $339,889. Other classes were insurance stocks, $834,978; bank stocks, $1,599,303; sugar stocks, $2,427,465; oil stocks, the leaders in activity, $37,318,527, and miscellaneous issues, $10,153,077. General Petroleum common was a strong leader, total exchanges of this stock amounting to 96,049 shares of a value of $10,576,082. Standard Oil of California was second with sales of 77,612 shares of a value of $7,839,205. Pacific Gas and Electric common was most active in its class, with sales of 74,616 shares, valued at $5,094,637, while the first preferred stock of the same company sold to the number of 50,809 shares, valued at $4,329,988. California Packing common, always a strong favorite at good prices, figured prominently in the trading with sales of 85,132 shares of a value of $6,571,970. The total number of shares of all stocks sold was 2,863,850.

That the bond business of the exchange reached the high figures of $64,025,266 reflects the growing importance of the exchange as a medium of assisting the flotation of bond issues and the financing of corporations. Liberty issues were naturally in the lead, the demand for United States government issues never having ceased for a moment. The aggregate trading in these was $36,481,156, and of this total $10,558,781 was in Liberty Loan Fourth 4 1/4 per cents., with Victory Loan Fifth 4 3/4 per cents second with total sales of $9,824,294. Liberty Third 4 1/4 also sold heavily, the total of exchanges being $7,023,474, while Liberty Second 4 1/4 changed hands to the amount of $5,914,411. The total par value of the Liberty bond transactions was $37,229,500, accounted for by the fact that the greater part of the trading in these issues was in the first part of the year before government bonds had reached par.

Trading in the various miscellaneous California bonded obligations was heavy and well distributed among the securities of seventy-two corporations. There is always a market for certain local issues, and while the volume is never heavy of these seasoned local bonds, they are always in good demand, with prices generally a fraction higher than for the same issue in the Eastern markets, which are supposed to furnish the guiding quotations. The total of sales of these bonds was $27,544,199, which represented a par value of $29,782,500. The heaviest trading was in the 7 per cent. issue of Miller & Lux with a total of $2,406,723 and with Spring Valley Company's 4 per cents next, the total of the latter being $2,383,220. Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company first mortgage 5 per cents sold to the extent of $1,956,983 and the general mortgage 5 per cents of Pacific Gas & Electric were traded in to a total of $1,837,785. Standard Oil of California 7 per cents were popular market features, reaching a total of sales of $1,683,128. East Bay Water Company first mortgage 5 1/2 per cent. bonds sold to the extent of $1,779,939, while sales of California Gas and Electric unifying and refunding mortgage 5 per cents amounted to $1,386,420. The 7 per cent. issue of General Petroleum Corporation was represented in the market to the extent of $1,157,076 and sales were recorded of Western Pacific 5 per cent. bonds amounted to a total of $1,256,610.

The counter market for bonds of all descriptions in San Francisco and in the West generally was heavier during the year than ever before, participations in almost every issue brought out in the East having been the rule, while the heavy financing of local corporations, a large part of which has been noted above, made demands upon the local investment market. The number of investment banking houses has more than doubled during the year and many of these have branches in various parts of the Pacific Coast territory.

During the latter part of the year a very considerable number of investment banking concerns, and some of the stock houses, affiliated with the San Francisco Stock Exchange, which has hitherto devoted its activities to trading in mining stocks. Lists of industrial and oil stock were added to the trading lists and bond trading is becoming general, with a distinct department devoted to that purpose. This exchange is erecting a new building and announces its intention to enlarge and broaden its scope in every direction. Already the effect of the new trading is being reflected in financial circles and the volume of bond business is being felt in the market.

Are Japanese Farmers Monopolizing California's Agricultural Industry?

By T. TAKIMOTO.

General Secretary of the Japanese Association of America.

Are Japanese farmers monopolizing California's agricultural industry, and are they strong and dangerous competitors of American farmers in California? No, absolutely no. A glance at the following table will indicate the truth of this statement. The value of products produced yearly by Japanese farmers in California averages $60,000,000. This is distributed as follows:

|   |              |
|---|--------------|
| To American landowners.....   | $20,000,000 |
| To American and Japanese labor.....   | 22,000,000   |
| To interest, taxes, insurance, merchandise (including seeds, etc.), freight, ware house expense, etc..... | 9,000,000    |
| To Japanese farmers.....  | 9,000,000    |
|   | $60,000,000 |

A careful investigation of the distribution of the proceeds of crops produced by the Japanese will clearly show whether or not Japanese farmers are monopolizing the California agricultural industry. In this connection it should not be overlooked that Japanese farmers have very poor knowledge of proper marketing, business methods, and other elements of scientific management. This has worked to their great disadvantage as farmers in California.

If the art or skill of merely PRODUCING crops was the essence of a farmer's success, we should have many potato, onion, bean and rice "kings" besides Mr. Shima, the potato "king." In the face of admitted facts, it is ridiculous to contend that Japanese farmers are monopolizing the agricultural industry of California or are even dangerous or strong competitors of the American farmers.

Have the Japanese farmers superior skill and greater efficiency? Do they work longer hours and maintain a lower standard of living than the European immigrant farmer in California? There has not been sufficient scientific research on this subject to support such an argument. As far as I am able to learn, the anti-Japanese leaders never have made a personal investigation of the Japanese farmer. They merely state that they have been told "so and so," and on that basis make their charges against the Japanese farmers. It may be true that Japanese farmers do work harder than others and possess superior skill at intensive farming—the latter because of their experience in Japan—but they are greatly inferior to the average American in extensive farming. On the average, I do not believe that the Japanese farmer or farm laborer works longer hours than the European immigrant farmer or laborer. The fact that ambitious and industrious white laborers tend to choose other occupations than agriculture has created a natural scarcity of farm labor. Japanese farm laborers are nearly all highly skilled. These circumstances combined have caused a constantly increasing demand for the Japanese and have enabled them to secure better hours, wages, and general working conditions.

The standard of living of the Japanese farmers in California, as indicated by housing and mode of living, has improved greatly during the past five or six years. Any one who has read the report of the State Immigration Commission (1921) concerning the Japanese farm camps in the Delta District will agree with me in this respect.

Six years ago the Japanese Association of America recommended the following budget for living expenses as a minimum standard for a family (in rural districts) consisting of husband and wife, and receiving not more than $800 per year:

|                            |          |
|----------------------------|----------|
| Provisions.....            | $240.00 |
| Heat and light.....        | 30.00    |
| Clothing.....              | 80.00    |
| Medical expense.....       | 10.00    |
| Taxes, dues, etc.....      | 18.00    |
| Social expenses.....       | 24.00    |
| Reading material.....      | 20.00    |
| Furniture and repairs..... | 28.00    |
| Sundries.....              | 20.00    |
| Incidentals.....           | 50.00    |
| Insurance.....             | 50.00    |
| Savings.....               | 250.00   |

$800.00

This budget applies only to rural districts, hence no items covering such things as eggs, milk, butter, vegetables, etc., are given, as these articles would naturally be supplied by each family from its own place. However, it may be said in passing that this schedule has had to be changed during the last few years on account of the increased cost of living. It is merely submitted as an illustration.

In any event, the standard of living among the Japanese farmers, whether lower than that of other races or not, will not be determined or affected by anti-Japanese agitation. In the long run it will be determined by the true facts alone. To ascertain the truth, we must not request a group of persons holding biased or even hostile views with respect to the Japanese problem to make an investigation. To be just and worth while, such an investigation should be made by a group of persons of high education and social standing and with no racial prejudices whatsoever.—Adv.

HOUSE OF GOOD BOOKS

A Book Store with a Home Library Atmosphere where you will find a Spirit of Friendliness, Comfort in Buying and Service.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS

|  |        |
|--|--------|
| The Outline of History —By H. G. Wells.....   | $5.00 |
| The Mind in the Making —By J. H. Robinson.....  | $2.50 |
| The Validity of American Ideals —By Shailer Mathews.....                                | $1.25 |
| The Divine Right of Democracy; The People's Right to Rule —By Clarence True Wilson..... | $1.00 |
| One Syllable Life of Christ —By Josephine Pollard.....                                  | $1.50 |
| Our Backdoor Neighbors —By F. C. Pellett.....   | $1.50 |

CHILDREN'S BOOKS

Visit our Children's Inglenook, where you will find a wonderful display of books for children of all ages

CHRISTMAS CARDS—BOOKLETS—CALENDARS

Best Fiction—Poetry—Biography—Travel

History—Theology—Nature Books—Gift Books

We carry a general line and will secure any book not found in our stock

THE METHODIST BOOK CONCERN

5 and 7
City Hall Avenue

ABINGDON PRESS
HOWARD M. BOYS, Manager

Phone
Market 72

mitsui & co., Ltd.

(Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, Ltd.)

General Importers, Exporters, Coal Suppliers,

Ship Operators, Shipbuilders, Ship Owners, Etc.

MERCHANTS EXCHANGE BUILDING

465 California Street
San Francisco

HEAD OFFICE: TOKIO, JAPAN

Other Offices in New York, Seattle, Portland, London, Lyons, Hamburg, and all other important corners of the world.

Postage Stamps for Christmas

A Gift That Will Give Pleasure for Years.

|  |                        |
|--|------------------------|
| 500 different $1.00                             | 1000 different $3.00  |
| 1500 different $6.00                            | 2000 different $10.00 |
| Many others up to 12,000 varieties for $300.00. |                        |

Scott's new 1923 Catalogue $1.60, postage included.

Big Stock of Stamps for Collections

Edwin P. Seeböhm
660 Market St. San Francisco

BRIEFER REVIEWS.

A Menage a Trois.

Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Popham Young, who has seen distinguished service in the British army in India, and who married Mrs. Marcus of San Francisco, is the author of a small volume of clever verse, "A Menage a Trois Across the Styx" (San Francisco: A. M. Robertson; $1), which is of a semi-burlesque nature, but it strongly tinged with Sir Frank's philosophic and optimistic beliefs. The author has a facility for the telling phrase such as "the circled world," a "crippled wound," and there are several fine verses that sum up the universe as follows:

Rapine, surrender, sacrifice, low greed, and lofty feasts
Of knightly chivalry, all inextricably bound and tied
Into the very fabric of the lives
Of men and mice and metals, hunter and hunted, prelates and butchers, doves, cormorants, cretaceans, prostitutes and wives.

Church Street.

Two books published by the Westminster Press of Philadelphia testify to the satisfactory format of that publishing concern. "Church Street," by Jean Carter Cochran, consists of short sketches of New Jersey village life—a very different exposition of the American small town from that of the Main Street school, but we think its quiet Down Eastern respectability a soothing and salutary antidote. The other book is a juvenile publication, "Verses for Children," by Cecil Trout Blancké, with illustrations by the author, done with the proper ratio for youthful interest—the text being subversive to the picture.

Good Neighbors.

The latest book in the able series edited by William F. Russell, Lippincott's School Text Series, is "Good Neighbors," a study in vocational and community hygiene, by Mary S. Haviland. Miss Haviland, who is research secretary of the National Child Welfare Association, has written a book whose advice adults as well as school children would do well to ponder. Too many of us confuse a sane regard for health principles with worrying about health, and hypochondriaism generally. Most of us abhor being fussy. "Good Neighbors" indicates the difference between foolish recklessness, or ignorance of the care of the body, and undue fussiness. The material is presented clearly enough for young children and vividly enough to hold any one's interest.

Heraldry in Decorations.

A useful manual for the decorator or student of graphic art is "Heraldry and Floral Forms as Used in Decorations" (Dutton; $4), by Herbert Cole, with profuse drawings by the author. The principles of the "picture writing" of heraldic designs are made clear by the concise text and the numerous illustrations. The latter will prove a reservoir of suggestion to every draughtsman, be he an interior decorator or a publicity artist. And incidentally the general reader with a taste for the decorative arts will find Mr. Cole's history and interpretation of the ancient art of heraldry interesting and informative reading.

Steel and Men.

Charles Rumford Walker is an enthusiastic student of social conditions who like William Whiting has put his principles to the test of practice. Like Mr. Whiting, who wrote "What's on the Worker's Mind," Mr. Walker went to work as a workman among the "Hunky" and "Dago" laborers of one of the great Eastern manufacturing centres. Mr. Walker chose Pittsburgh as a good place to learn the steel business, where he went to work on an open hearth furnace in order to study the economic condition at close range. His book, "Steel, the Diary of a Furnace Worker" (The Atlantic Monthly Press; $1.75), is the result of his life among the Pennsylvania steel workers, and his observation of their attitude and economic conditions.

The Book of Athletics.

We don't know how much athletes are given to reading books, even those of subjects germane to their profession, but those that do will be interested in a sort of cyclopedia of athletics, edited by Paul Withington, who appears to have participated in every sporting activity on the Harvard campus, and revised by Lothrop Withington, a relative of similar proclivities. The first "Book of Athletics," the editors tell us, was issued in 1895, but became obsolete in the course of years and these gentlemen issued a volume in 1914 to bring the matter up to date. This again in turn has become outdated, so rapidly and radically does the technic of sport and games change, and the present "Book of Athletics" (Lothrop, Lee & Shepard; $2) takes its place. Papers on the various athletics, football, soccer, baseball, basketball, tennis, golf, lacrosse, boxing, wrestling, rowing, swimming, and track and field athletics, are contributed by professional stars and are the latest authoritative information on the subjects covered.

New Books Received.

STAR: THE STORY OF AN INDIAN PONY. By Forrestine C. Hooker. Garden City: Doubleday, Page & Co.; $1.75.

With an introduction by Lieutenant-General Nelson A. Miles, U. S. A.

A TREASURY OF PLAYS FOR WOMEN. Edited by Frank K. Shay. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.; $3.

A selection of plays that can be staged and acted entirely by women.

THE THINGS WE ARE. By John Middleton Murry. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $2.50.

A novel.

NIGGER. By Clement Wood. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $2.

A story of the Southern negro.

ROLAND WHATELY. By Alec Waugh. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.

A novel of adolescence.

A HOMESTEADER'S PORTFOLIO. By Alice Day Pratt. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.

The experiences of a homesteader in Oregon.

QUEST. By Helen Hull. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.

A novel.

THE PINAFORE POCKET STORY BOOK. By Miriam Clark Potter. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $2.50.

A collection of bed-time stories, illustrated by Sophia Balcolm.

AN INDISCREET CHRONICLE FROM THE PACIFIC. By Putnam Weale. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.; $3.

By the author of "The Truth About China and Japan."

TIMOTHY TUBBY'S JOURNAL. New York: George H. Doran Company; $1.50.

"The American Diary of the Famous British Novelist."

CLOISTER AND OTHER POEMS. By Charles L. O'Donnell. New York: The Macmillan Company; $1.

HERALDRY AND FLORAL FORMS USED IN DECORA-

IT'S THE WATER.

Prepared with Glacier Water from Shasta Springs

AT ALL DEALERS

SHASTA WATER COMPANY

tion. By Herbert Cole. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $4.

With drawings by the author.

JACK AND I IN LOTUS LAND. By Frances Little. New York: Harper & Brothers; $1.40.

By the Lady of the Decorations.

JOAN OF ARC OF THE NORTH WOODS. By Holman Day. Harper & Brothers; $2.

A novel.

OVERLOOKED. By Maurice Baring. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; $1.75.

A novel.

All Books that are reviewed in the Argonaut can be obtained at
Robertson's
222 STOCKTON ST.
Union Square San Francisco

THE HOLMES BOOK CO.
707 Market St. 152 Kearny St. 22 Third St.
Largest variety of new and second-hand books in the city. A visit to our stores will convince you of the truth of this assertion. We buy libraries or single books for cash. See us before selling. Phone—Douglas 3283.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

IF YOU ARE A REAL BOOK-LOVER
Spend a pleasant hour in the real "Old Book Shop" at 2 TILLMAN PLACE, OFF GRANT AVENUE—below Sutter.
Rare Old Books Bought, Sold and Hunted For by GEORGE HARGENS (formerly of the White House)

BOOKS AT PAUL ELDER'S
239 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

NEWBEGIN'S BOOKSTORE
358 POST STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Opposite Union Square
A Shop known for its courteous service, and a pleasant place to browse.
Information on books, authors and editions gladly given. Books bought and sold. Buyer will call. Telephone Douglas 2810

JOHN HOWELL
IMPORTER BOOKS PUBLISHER
RARE BOOKS AND FIRST EDITIONS
Libraries Bought and Sold
328 Post Street Union Square
Sutter 3268
SAN FRANCISCO

Geo. E. Billings Roy C. Ward Geo. B. Dinsmore
J. C. Muesdorffer Jas. W. Dean
GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.
ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE
EFFECTED
312 California St., San Francisco, Cal.
Phone—Douglas 6400

The White House

The Blood Ship

By NORMAN SPRINGER

It has the elements that make it a bully story—snap and go, lots of action, the tang of the sea, and it certainly reads like the work of a man who knows ships and shanghaied crews. It is romance! Mystery! $1.90

Book Department, Main Floor
Phone Kearny 5000

Raphael Wall & Co. Inc.

GIVE

Books for Christmas!

CHRISTMAS CARDS

In Wonderful Variety at from 5c
Upwards

Calendars Gift Books
Books for the Children
Oxford India Paper Bibles
Scofield Reference Bibles
Weymouth New Testaments
Episcopal Prayer and Hymnals
Devotional Books

Send for New Holiday Book Catalogue

Presbyterian Book Store
278 Post St. Hammond Bldg.
Take Elevator

The Wright Magazine

("Not for self, but for others")

Only $1.00 a Year.

Besides a serial and short stories it contains departments for literary and music, women and children, farm and garden, a people's forum, manuscript markets, radio notes and other interesting features.

THE WRIGHT MAGAZINE
P. O. Box 894 Little Rock, Ark.

DR. ALBERT SHAW, Editor of The Review of Reviews, calls it: "The most extraordinarily interesting book I have passed under my eye for years."

Beasts, Men and Gods

By FERDINAND OSSENDOWSKI

Have you read this amazing book?

Do not miss it!

Send it to some man—or woman—for Christmas, as something at once unique and distinguished.

It is the people who have read the book who are using such superlatives as "most enthrallingly interesting" (Marcosson)—"a book of astounding, breath-taking, enthralling adventure" (Times)—"No novel could hold the thrills of this true book" (Benj. Musser).

EUGENE S. BAGGER writes: "It is the most stupendous and magnificent thing I have read in a long while."

At all book stores, $3.00, postage extra.

E. P. DUTTON & CO., 681 Fifth Avenue, New York

SIMON CALLED PETER

By Author of

"The Mother of All Living"

FEW BOOKS OF THIS YEAR ARE BEING SO SERIOUSLY DISCUSSED

The New York Evening Post calls it: "A 'significant' novel in the best sense of that word."

Life: "A good book that deserves to be widely read."

Philadelphia Ledger: "Strong and illuminating. . . . Something that will make most of its readers gasp a little—that is, if they were not in France themselves."

New York Herald: "Well worth reading . . . a graphic and undoubtedly veracious picture."

The Boston Herald: "A novel of real distinction, both in its manner and its matter."

The Boston Transcript: "His situations are true, vivid, and unexaggerated."

Price, $2.00, postage extra. At all book stores.

E. P. DUTTON & CO., 681 Fifth Avenue, New York

"THE DOLL'S HOUSE."

"The Doll's House" has become a classic, which means that it no longer belongs to our time. The Noras, if they possess husbands, are much more likely to dominate than to be dominated. Woman has attained her independence to a considerable degree, laws chivalrously framed by men protect her from injustice, and she can now air her lip-stick, her cigarette, her legs, and her "damn's" in public, and no one can say her nay.

Yet the old play holds its own. The theme, the admirable construction, the concise dialogue, even if you almost know it by heart, unite to weave their magic: the magic of the illusion of the theatre.

Mme. Medea Radzina's interpretation of the principal rôle was well conceived, and in respect to mood and gradation of expression was carried out as Ibsen would have wished; her great fault being a lack of high polish in her technique.

It is a puzzling fault, for the actress has talent and temperament. And she was trained in the Art School of Moscow, considered by authorities to be the best preparatory school for players in the world. Yet in both rôles, that of Madame in "Enter, Madame," and of Nora, Mme. Radzina entered the stage Medea Radzina playing a part, instead of entering it as the character she was impersonating. And it was quite a time before she submerged her own individuality and became the character represented.

And the same fault of incomplete control was noticeable in Mme. Radzina's Nora as in her Madame. She is, to be sure, partly handicapped by a strong accent, in which one remarks the Russian gutturals. But her instinct for acting is sure, and she is happy while she is engaged in the art. And how she must have delighted in a character of such contrasts as Nora's; a rôle which she had, no doubt, enviously seen played many times by the best of their actresses at the Moscow Theatre.

I judge that Mme. Radzina's fault is an insufficiently controlled excitement when she is on the stage. For in both her rôles as the play progressed the sense of fatigue in the spectator caused by a superfluity of high spirits on the part of the fair protagonist which caused over-acting gradually relaxed, and finally faded away.

Of course it is well to remember that in all her liveliness Nora was to some extent playing a part. For she had a secret burden on her mind, and besides, she was living up to Torvald's conception of his "little squirrel." But still, that was Medea Radzina playing with an excess of vivacity the rôle of Nora, instead of Nora herself; her movements, too, being characterized by the same lack of control as her voice.

Yet, to repeat what was said on a former occasion, Mme. Radzina has talent, an invaluable temperament, individuality, and the stage is her métier. As the play proceeded, and the shadows of destiny were darkening around Nora's slight figure, we noted the change in the young wife that so puzzled the fatuously uxorious Torvald. Playtime was over, and Nora's spirits no longer bubbled. Fear had entered her heart, and looked out of her eyes. By this time we had begun to forget Medea Radzina, and concentrate on Nora; and when the wife and husband had their final talk together the actress made her most poignant appeal to our sympathies.

For she showed us a new Nora; a woman who, deliberately depriving herself of the shelter promised her, prepared to face the world's cold blast alone. And we felt that the child-wife had entered upon her woman's heritage. Somewhere in the world there was a place for her, where this new, mysterious strength that we heard in her voice and saw in her eyes would carry her in safety.

And this Nora spoke with deliberate, quiet utterance, and voice and look expressed immutable resolve.

Thus, at the close, we found we had walked step by step with Nora along her gradually shadowed pathway.

I should like to see Mme. Radzina in a rôle in which she is not called upon to express a Latin-like temperament, so much better did she act out the sombre realization which afflicts Nora at the end and nerves her up to her great resolve.

It is a resolve I don't believe that Nora could ever have carried out. Only a stiff-necked old crank of a bachelor such as Ibsen was, who during his long life never sought the society of women or children, could have planned such a dénouement. I didn't believe, the first time I saw the play, that Nora, loving her children so tenderly, could thus have deserted them, nor do I believe it now. A solicitous mother preparing herself to be a righteous rearer of her children could have no better opportunity to learn how than to practice on them. And as for the sop that Ibsen throws us about Anna, the faithful old nurse, that's all guff, as every woman knows. No ancient nurse could take the place of a youthful, merry, adoring, comprehending mother. Yet what a powerful close it makes to the play! And why, since—as, I repeat, I firmly believe—Nora would never have done it?

Simply for the reason that the spectator is fiercely indignant with Torvald, the fair-weather Torvald, who, selfish egotist that he is, turns and rends his little songbird until the danger is removed. And Torvald gets his come-uppance when the door slams and Nora has vanquished the ranch.

Lloyd Corrigan gave an excellent Torvald, Mary Morris was simple and natural as Mrs. Linden, and Irving Pichel, while there was much merit in his impersonation of Krogstad, put too much sinister impressment in the Krogstadian manner; and similarly Harold Minger was quite too deathly during Dr. Rank's final call.

The three tots—gleams of sunshine in the play—who represented Nora's children were so spontaneous in their games that, although Everett Glass put the play on, I feel as if Mme. Radzina herself must have given extra time and pains in the rehearsals to convey to the children the idea of play, and to carry it out with them. For only the woman who figured so prominently with them in their scenes could have won such delighted, child-like response. Or so it seemed to me.

They run—intentionally—to a very slow tempo in the Guild plays. And a slow tempo is always better than an over-quick one. But it is a mistake to let a play spill over to reach the 11:45 p. m. point, which is probably caused by a too devout reluctance to shorten a few scenes.

THE CHILDREN'S THEATRE.

Last Saturday morning, taking alarm for fear the Children's Theatre might wing its flight to Berkeley, where they appreciate such earnest and persevering enterprise in the field of dramatic achievement as has been demonstrated at the Plaza, I visited that playhouse with an ecstatic little girl under my arm. I have been to children's theatres, heard the harsh phonographic tones of ill-trained child players, seen displays of children's vanity and self-assertiveness passing for acting, and disapproved of the inculcation of ideas in the play which, eagerly assimilated, would make the average child need to be soundly spanked.

Nothing of this kind was to be found in the play "Li Chen," a delightful little child comedy located in China, of which Mrs. John J. Cuddy is the author; and which tells a story which leaves everybody, including the miraculously reformed grandmother, in high good humor.

Mrs. Cuddy, as I understand, does all the training of the children, her selection of whom

ESMOND'S

"THE CAKE SHOP"
253 Grant Ave.

Mince Pies made from our own home-made mince-meat. Genuine English Plum Puddings and Fruit Cakes.

"ECCLES CAKES" Our Specialty

AGENTS WANTED.

DEFLEXOGRAPH. Fits any phonograph. Stops scratch and surface noises. Softens tone. Immense profits. VANTONE CO., Dept. 102, 1101 1244, City Hall Station, New York.

UNION LUMBER CO.

CROCKER BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

MANUFACTURERS and WHOLESALERS

— OF —
REDWOOD LUMBER
RAILROAD TIES
TELEGRAPH POLES
SHINGLES

— AND —
SPLIT REDWOOD PRODUCTS

is made more easy for her by her professional connection with the Teachers' College, the local training school of teachers, which has several hundred children listed as daily pupils.

From these it is evident that Mrs. Cuddy selects those gifted kiddies whose parents consent to their appearance on the stage, and who have the refined accent, or the ability quickly

"THE KNIT SHOP"

Gantner & Mattern Co.

Grant Avenue and Geary

FIVE FLOORS OF

Quality Knitted Ware

That Will Solve Your Holiday Problems

Sweaters

Silk—Fiber—Wool

Sport Coats

Finest Jersey Cloth

Hosiery

For Men and Women

Scarfs

In Endless Variety

Bath Robes

Blanket and Terry

Underwear

For Men and Women

Knitted Ties

Largest Assortments

Headquarters for Knit Wear

Dependable in Quality, Attractively Priced

We own and operate the Largest Knitting Mill in the West

Not only as a delicious food beverage—but for cakes, for puddings, for icings, for ice cream, candy and all frozen desserts—Ghirardelli's Ground Chocolate is the all-in-one chocolate. It is the chocolate of 100 uses—keep it handy in the pantry always. Say "Gear-ar-delly" and send for recipe booklet—free!

Since 1852 D. GHIRARDELLI CO. San Francisco

Ghirardelli's
Ground Chocolate

to acquire it, that is indispensable in order to forestall the criticism induced by a fastidious ear; and, I might add, to establish standards.

The first thing I noticed when the curtain rolled up and I resigned myself to an hour and a half of boredom—boredom which never came—was the tasteful stage setting and the cleverly designed costumes. And the next was the agreeable voices and speech of the children. And then I discovered that they had been trained so intelligently that they had lost all evidence of self-consciousness.

And, indeed, he or she would have been a dolt indeed to have clung to that fatuous self-assertion which stamps the hopelessly unsuccessful player. For the children were provided with such a lot of stage business that they were obliged to forget their hands and their feet and themselves willy-nilly. They moved with the instinctive grace of childhood, only it was properly regulated and controlled. They danced with pleasing abandon, and when they sang their young voices had not a note of that bleating and blating to which singing children, from pure love of noise as noise, inevitably tend when they are left to howl on their native heath, without control or direction.

And the youngsters knew their lines almost better than grown-ups do. For the play was charming in its irresistible appeal to child tastes.

Little orphaned Li Chen, who with his sister, Tai Chen, is under the thumb of a harsh grandmother, is to be exiled from his beautiful home because of his unregulated sense of humor. Prayers are made by little Li and Tai to the titular goddess of the household; who was shown in a beautiful shrine, which was really a jewel of beauty, with its cold yet rich, mysterious green rays lighting the marble white sculptured image with its great gold headdress; an image which looked at first almost like a flat picture, until it came to life, and in token of gracious acceptance of the children's prayers gave a sort of Egyptian-angular dance with its white hands; and then relapsed into beautiful immobility during the rest of the play.

There have been some very successful sets during the Stage Guild season just ending: the Victorian room in "The Truth About Blayds," both sets in "Heartbreak House," the inn in "S. S. Tenacity," and the "Doll's House" living-room, the only wholly unsatisfactory one being in "Enter Madame."

I thought, however, that the setting of this child play "Li Chen," next to the garden scene—or in partnership with it—in "Heartbreak House" was as deserving of appreciation and praise as anything they have done in that line during the twelve weeks' season; or perhaps I should give praise where praise is due, and specifically mention Mr. Rudolph Schaeffer as the designer of costumes and setting, a whole staff of young men under him working out his designs.

The birds' costumes, and more especially the headdresses which expressed their species, were both clever and pretty. They and the plumage were mostly made of paper, and when the beasts filed in—for the birds and beasts hold a conference to champion Li Chen's cause, and the stage becomes an enchanting menagerie—we saw that the yellow lion, the striped tiger, the brown monkeys, the wolves, and the bears, and the green alligator writhing along the floor were costumed in necessarily stronger muslin, which was put under a heavy strain to stand their antics, dances, and gyrations.

And mysterious, wisely softened music came from one instrument as they marched, capered, or writhed along; music which shadowed forth the insoluble mysteries of the jungle.

Oh, how delightful it all was! The birds and beasts chattered, discussed, and as the conferences assembled or broke up they would utter their characteristic squeals, chattering, whistles and calls. So that when the curtain went down we heard from the several hundred little folks in the auditorium an ecstatic echo of these various cries; the ever-intelligent author and director, whose judgment, taste, and understanding of childhood seemed to be absolutely infallible, having seen to it that these various whistles and cries were carefully suppressed to a pleasing note, which the child spectators unconsciously imitated.

One point that stood out in my mind as being particularly soothing in the production was the maximum effect with the minimum of expense. It is beginning to be recognized now pretty generally that talent and good taste, even if the owner of these qualities is not yet famous, can accomplish much more pleasing effects than the ostentatious expenditure of the hundreds of thousands of dollars with which the money kings of the theatres used to be so lavish.

I am sorry that I have come dragging along with this delighted appreciation so long after the children plays have begun. But cheer up, youngsters, you'll have more chances during the Christmas holidays, when, as it appears from the programme, they will put on "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

JOSEPHINE HART PHELPS.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE.

"The Gold Diggers."

David Belasco's production of Avery Hopwood's comedy, "The Gold Diggers," starts at the Columbia Monday evening, December 18th. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday. This play ran for two years in New York and a year in Chicago. The company, headed by Gertrude Vanderbilt, is made up of players of the first rank. The organization includes Charles Hammond, David Glassford, Thomas M. Reynolds, Day Manson, Harry Alexander, Lorraine Lally, Winifred Barry, Cora Williams, Daisy Rudd and Sally Bergman.

"Robin Hood."

The Peter Pan of American comic opera, "Robin Hood," will continue for its second week at the Rivoli Opera House, starting Monday evening.

Music lovers and amusement seekers have received the Hartman-Steindorff presentation of the opera with marked enthusiasm, due to the all-around excellence of the production of the piece. The Tylers have equipped the production with particularly attractive scenery.

The Orpheum Next Week.

Bobby Folsom, Jack Denny, and Dugan and Raymond headline the Orpheum show starting Sunday afternoon, December 17th. Bobby Folsom with her smart jazz and character renditions and Jack Denny and the unusual Metropolitan Orchestra as a background offer one of the best attractions of the season.

Thomas Dugan and Babette Raymond will be recalled for their previous hits.

Billy Wayne and Ruth Warren present "The Last Car," one of Paul Gerard Smith's comedies.

Lovers of music will be glad to know of the engagement of Eric Zardo, eminent concert pianist.

Fred Bernard and Sid Garry are a pair of young chaps from the South, who bring some comic interpretations of Southern syncopation.

Virgil and Blanche Florenis are European poseurs and equilibrists.

Little Billy, "Vaudeville's Tiniest Headliner," brings a new act for his second week. Hanchil and Maple offer a fantastic novelty.

The "deadly upas" of the African jungle is in reality no more deadly than a rosebush. The legend of its deadliness arose through circumstantial evidence. Some early travelers who slept under upas trees in the deep African valleys in which the upas grows were poisoned by carbon dioxide that had settled in these mountain crevices.

COLUMBIA THEATRE

Leading Playhouse of the West
Geary at Mason Phone Franklin 180

Two Weeks—Beginning Monday, Dec. 18

Matinees Wednesday and Saturday

David Belasco Presents

The Gold Diggers

Avery Hopwood's Famous Comedy
After two solid years at the Lyceum Theatre, New York

RIVOLI OPERA HOUSE

Market at Seventh. Phone Market 373

Matinees Saturday and Sunday

FERRIS HARTMAN

and

PAUL STEINDORFF

Offer the American comic opera classic

"ROBIN HOOD"

Next Opera "The Toymaker"

MATINEES 25 and 50c

DAILY

EVENINGS 25c to $1.25

Except Sat., Sun. and Holidays

ALWAYS A GREAT SHOW

SMOKING PERMITTED IN DRESS CIRCLE AND LOGES

Fine engineering in the New Peerless does not stop with major accomplishments. It extends itself to details which are sometimes neglected, as evidenced by the extra large diameter of the spring shackle bolts. This larger size reduces wear, of course; and when finally adjustments are necessary they are readily made without removing any of the parts.

1900 Van Ness Ave.

Phone Prospect 8800

The New
P E E R L E S S

Santa Fe
California
Limited
East

daily to Denver,
Kansas
City and Chicago

Solid Pullman train
with buffet smoker
and Observation cars
Fred Harvey
dining car service
Exclusively for first class travel

Grand Canyon Line

Tickets to and from Europe via all Trans-Atlantic Lines

Ask any Santa Fe Agent

R. D. Johnson, Div. Pass. Agt.

601 Market Street

Phone Sutter 7600

or

Market Street Ferry
Phone Sutter 7600

OAKLAND
484 13th St.
40th St. & San Pablo Ave.
BERKELEY
University Ave. & West St.
SAN JOSE
43 Ryland Block
SACRAMENTO
201 Calif. Fruit Bldg.

JOHN McCALLAN

Notary Public and U. S. Customs Notary

34 MONTGOMERY STREET

Near Sutter—Phone Sutter 6195

Residence, Sutter Hotel, corner Kearny and

Sutter Streets

Phone—Sutter 3060

VANITY FAIR.

Having consumed its summer with radio, polo, pogo, cigarettes, bootleg and golf, the smart set of New York screens its yawns with dainty finger-tips and decides it will go in for Couéism and music. Psychoanalysis on the Freudian plan was all used up last year, and telepathy is stale, and parlor magic has had nothing new in it for some time, and winter is coming, and there must be some indoor sport to fill each shining hour and keep it from becoming a dull and sooty one; and hence the recrudescence of an interest in music, with Coué running up. Intimes musicales are being arranged, and while many must feel that it is going to be an awful bore, there is really little else to do to keep out of mischief. Of course, there are drama readings and all that for those that feel too languid to read to themselves, but reading, after all, calls for a lot of painful attention and efforts at understanding, whereas music hardly interrupts the conversation, should any conversation start. So there is the salon, at least in plan, with these intimes musicales to fill the gaps and cover the holes. You don't have to talk if you don't feel like it, and if you can't think of anything to say you can pretend to be listening to the musicians. They are hired and paid, and are not in a position to complain whether you listen or not. So music, art divine, is coming into belated recognition in the chamber form, or the orchestration for gatherings in small halls, and the smart set is dividing into numberless smaller smart sets to make such diversions convenient. Recently a number of New York men and women have received engraved circulars notifying them of intimes musicales for December, January, and February and bearing the blessed assurance that the distinguishing features would be "delightful informality" and "no set programmes." In other words you don't have to know what is coming or what has just been rendered—don't have to know a thing about it. Subscribers are permitted to express preferences if any they have for this or that little thing, but the undertakers assume no obligations to deliver. A wild winter, we'll say.

The soirée musicales are to take place mainly at the Biltmore, for December, and at the Plaza for January and February. At first there was much curiosity as to the originators, whose names had been omitted from the prospectuses. People could not tell whether the music was going to be good or not. True, the names of the conductors were given, among them those of Leopold Stakowski, Ossip Gabrilowitsch, Georges Enesco, Walter Damrosch and Willem Mengelberg; but who were they? Society continued to hesitate until it leaked out somehow that the original sponsors included Mrs. Newbold Le Roy Edgar, Mrs. William B. Dinsmore, Mrs. Henry Fairfield Osborn, Mrs. Otto H. Kahn, Mrs. Francis Carolan, Miss Anne Stillman, Mrs. Samuel Untermeyer, Mrs. Paul D. Cravath and a number of others equally eminent. Then it went. Subscriptions poured in plentifully enough to assure several ventures in music preferred. Other lists are to be opened, but selectively filled. But not too selectively. There is such a thing as being narrow-minded in these matters, and that is not truly cultural. So invitations have been sent out to 100 women of various sets of society, who may perhaps be saved from mixing by some watertight compartment plan of little musicales at suitable distances. The great thing is to make music go this winter, to put it over. The fiddles will not begin to squeak until quarter past 9, which is bedtime for Gopher Prairie, but only late afternoon for Fifth Avenue and Sutton Place. It gives time to eat dinner and help with the dishes if the scullion has struck. Then the yawning can really begin. Music has even invaded the home, in the form of lecture musicales by the Schola Cantorum of New York. It has been bolstered, however, with some Oriental dancing of promising character, calculated to make the head of the house sit up and take particular notice. At one fashionable house during the week there has been a discussion, properly illustrated and demonstrated of course, of "Oriental Music and Dancing" by Dr. Ananda Coomaraswami, of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. The doctor does not do his own dancing, but has it done for him by a danseuse who has mastered the intricacies of the dance as danced in Java. This is calculated to make Pa stay home nights.

George V is said to be nearly as fond of walking as of riding, but unfortunately has little opportunity for the former. He has to content himself with outdoor books, which are his favorite literary diet, particularly those dealing with agriculture and old English country life. Another hobby is his stamp collection. He has personally compiled one of the finest in existence and much of his spare time is occupied with it. The queen does a vast amount of sewing. A housekeeper at a house where the queen occasionally stays reports that Queen Mary does more sewing in a day than the average housewife in a week. Her majesty also shares the king's fondness for musical evenings and she herself is an accomplished pianist.

This Christmas Give Bonds

Our Gift Bond Service for the Christmas of 1922 has several unique features. They will add pleasure and surprise to the presentation of your gift. Descriptive folder will be sent for the asking [no representative unless requested]

Bradford, Kimball & Co.

Insurance Exchange Building
433 California Street - San Francisco
Telephone Sutter 5200

THE CHARLES NELSON CO.

MANUFACTURER AND WHOLESALE

REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR,
SPRUCE, HEMLOCK,
SUGAR & WHITE PINE,
CEDAR SHINGLES & POLES.
230 California St. San Francisco

E. C. EVANS & SONS, Inc.

(Established 1881)

STEAMSHIP AGENTS

SHIP AND INSURANCE BROKERS
260 California Street, San Francisco
Phone Douglas 8040 Cable Address "DEWGRIP"

GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION

Offices at

SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES
Alaska Commercial Bldg. Higgins Bldg.

HAMMOND LUMBER COMPANY

260 CALIFORNIA ST.
REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR
AND PILING

Property Business Manager

City or Country

Successful business man will undertake the business management of a good city or country property with view to increasing net revenue returns. Stoppage of waste and loss; careful and efficient management; proper accounting and reports; full attention to every detail of business. Personal integrity with highest references. Address B, 2901 Scott St., San Francisco.

BALFOUR, GUTHRIE & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO AND LOS ANGELES,
PORTLAND, SEATTLE, TACOMA,
AND VANCOUVER.

MERCHANTS

EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS

MARINE AND FIRE INSURANCE

AVERAGE ADJUSTERS

Agents of

HARRISON DIRECT LINE OF STEAMERS
TO AND FROM EUROPEAN PORTS

Redwood Export Company

California Redwood
Lumber and Ties

Cargoes and Parcels

"To off shore markets only"

260 CALIFORNIA STREET
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

Phone Sutter 2163

Build for the Future

From time immemorial men have built their homes of materials most readily obtained from the particular locality in which that habitation was located.

Cave Men used tunnels in the cliffs.

Indians made wigwams of skins.

Nebraska pioneers dug the sod and built up houses with the turf using straw and earth for the roofs.

Brick and slate homes dotted many landscapes adjacent to where these two materials were manufactured or found nearby.

California today over its wide area of homes bears eloquent testimony to the wooden house built from lumber made in California and the Northwest.

Proximity of forests and milling operations coupled with ample rail and steamer transportation has made wood the logical material for building California homes.

Cheapness, durability, availability, all combine to make lumber the most important building material factor in the home building future of California.

Lumber does not go out of style.

Lumber is an appreciating value commodity. A home built today with lumber will be subject to no material depreciation because of the wooden material of which it is constructed over a long or short period of years.

Forests are rapidly and surely being depleted in the East and South. Larger shipments of lumber are being made out of the West into the East by rail and through the canal to supply this decreasing supply.

Each year sees the logging railroads further extended into the Western forests.

Lumber of tomorrow will cost more than lumber of today—but will cost less to the homebuilder of the West than to the homebuilder of any other section of the United States.

Build Now. Each succeeding year will put a new value into your investment.

RETAIL LUMBER DEALERS of SAN FRANCISCO

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

In front of a Broadway restaurant a ragged urchin was observed by a kindly disposed and prosperous individual who thought the youngster looked wistfully at the batter cakes being baked by the girl in the window. "Hungry, kid?" he asked. "Naw!" came the scornful reply. "Can't a fellow look at a swell dame without drawin' a crowd?"

An applicant for a part once asked the late Sir Beerbohm Tree to engage him solely on a newspaper report. "I enclose you a newspaper cutting about myself," he wrote, "to show that I have aptitude for the stage." The cutting ran as follows: "The prisoner, who denied the assault, conducted his own case, and defended himself in a somewhat dramatic manner."

Sir Harry Lauder, the Scotch comedian, said at his eleventh farewell dinner in New York: "Scotchmen succeed because they watch the pennies. 'Bang went saxeence.' That sort of thing, ye ken. 'So yer auld frin' Angus's marrit again,' I said to Donald Dhu one day. 'Oh, ay,' said Donald sadly. 'Losh, he's been a dear frin' tae me, has Angus. He's cost me three weddin' presents and two wreaths o' immortelles.'"

An old farmer visiting the city handed the clerk a telegram to be sent, consisting of the address and eight vertical strokes. "But surely you are not going to send this," said the clerk. "Now, that's all right, miss," said the old fellow. "If them strokes come out the same at t'other end my missus'll know as I shall be home at 8 o'clock. Her can't read or write, but her can count, so just see as you put the proper strokes in."

At a school in the mill district of a certain manufacturing town in the East a teacher received first-hand impression of how the other half of the world lives. A little Russian was painfully progressing through his reading lesson till he was finally stumped on the word "plate." To help him the schoolma'am kindly inquired, "What is it mother brings in the bread on?" The little chap's eyes lit up with the light of understanding. "The newspaper," he said.

Senator Hale of Maine was making a tour of the battlefields of the civil war and at one place found an old lady sitting in front of a modest home with a large front and back yard. Politely doffing his hat, he said: "Aunt, did they do any fighting near your home during the civil war?" "Well, sir, I should say they did," she warmly replied. "They fit all over my front yard and they fit all up and down my back yard, and they completely ruined a brand new ash hopper for me. War sure is horrible, aint it?"

E. E. Fournier D'Albe is the inventor of the 'optophone,' a machine which, by transforming print into light rays and thence into musical sounds, permits the blind to read. Professor D'Albe said modestly in an interview in New York: "Yes, my optophone is rather ingenious. It is almost as ingenious as your American business man who used for the combination of his safe the queer words, 'Oh, hell.' A lady asked him why he used such a queer combination as that. He answered: 'I have a very poor memory, and so, you see, ma'am, whenever I forget the combination it comes to me.'"

Robert Henri, the artist, told at a dinner in Rittenhouse Square—he had been lecturing in Philadelphia—a story about a rich Philadelphia painter. "Dodds," he said, "showed his uncle through his studio one day. 'And what do you do with all these—er—works?' his uncle asked. 'Sell 'em,' said Dodds. 'Do you mean to tell me that you sell 'em, honest?' 'Sure I sell 'em,' said Dodds, a bit huffed. 'Then,' said his uncle, 'you're thrown away in this miserable art business. Come and take over the management of my distribution department, and I'll start you in with a five-figure salary.'"

A negro company was stationed at Camp Lee, Virginia, for training during the late war. One afternoon during drill, announcement was made that the next morning the company would be trained in attacking a fortification. After the troops were dismissed a big, awkward-looking private approached the dapper young corporal in charge of his squad and said: "Corprul, what is a fortification, anyhow?" And in a tone of utter contempt for such ignorance the corporal replied: "Don' you know no 'rithmetic a tall? Anybody ought ter know dat two twentifications makes a fortification."

During the flue epidemic at Camp Bowie base hospital many of the doctors worked twenty hours a day, according to the American Legion Weekly. One rookie medico had a seventy-five-bed ward thrust upon him the first day of his army career. He struggled valiantly with his professional work, but failed to realize that he was now a soldier. He forgot the sacred morning reports. He forgot to make out the sacred mess regulations. He exasperated everybody. Finally the colonel haled him to the carpet and demanded: "Why in the blankety-blank-blank don't you read your army regulations?" The young doctor looked at him in sleepy-eyed surprise. "Army regulations?" he ejaculated. "Good Lord, colonel, I haven't even had time to read the newspapers!"

A Sunday-school teacher tells the following: "I had just been chosen as teacher for the smallest tots in our Sunday-school. The first lesson was about the verse, 'Suffer little children to come unto Me.' My listeners had been so attentive and repeated the verse so loudly in unison that I was sure I had made a deep impression. The superintendent dropped in to see how the new teacher was conducting the class and I confidently asked one bright-eyed little lad to tell Mr. Brown about the lesson we had learned that day. And then I received a shock. 'The man said it's time to eat,' piped the shrill little voice. 'What?' cried the bewildered superintendent. 'Yes, that's it. He said, "Supper, little children. Come to me.'"

Whimsical Walker the famous clown, has followed the prevailing fashion and written his recollections, which naturally abound with theatrical shop talk. Among his reminiscences of Drury Lane—the street, not the theatre—is the following: "I was on speaking terms with an undertaker there and he once invited me into his shop and brought out a bottle of whisky. I sat myself down on something covered with black cloth and we hobnobbed together in friendly fashion. The undertaker was an enthusiastic theatre-goer. He knew a host of 'stars' by sight and had acquaintance with a few of the lesser lights. We talked theatrical 'shop,' and I happened to ask the undertaker if he knew what had become of a certain actor whom I mentioned by name. 'Yes,' said the man, composedly, 'you're a-sitting on him now!'"

Miss Susan Brandeis, the brilliant young lawyer, said at a dinner in New York: "When you see a pretty girl with her throat bare on a cold day it doesn't mean that she is courting pneumonia—it means that she has hardened herself into a pneumonia-proof condition. I approve of this hardening process. I am almost like the Maine man who, to harden his son, used to take him camping in the depths of winter. The Maine man, one bitter night, noticed that his son had made himself a huge snowball for a pillow. He at once kicked the snowball from under his son's head. 'No effeminacy, boy,' he said."

The game of baseball is growing in popularity daily in Japan.

THE MERRY MUSE.

A Christmas Warning.

When to a child you wish to give a toy
And eventually you've found the proper thing,
'Twill add a lot to everybody's joy
If you take time to test your offering.

So blow it, squeeze it, see if it will wink
Or wind it up—whichever it may be;
You must be sure, you must not merely think
'Twill work for you before the presentee.

Should it consist of things which must be built,
Make sure that you can build them—every one;
That you won't feel a horrid sense of guilt
If later you are asked how they are done.

No greater disappointment is on earth
Than toys which do not function when they should;
And many a hope's been blighted at its birth
And many a giver's been misunderstood.

If you can't fly the airship, or explain
The proper way to build a pyramid,
You'll be a sight that always causes pain:
A great big Grown-up shame! before a kid.
—G. K. D. in Life.

ORNAMENTALS, FRUIT TREES,
VINES AND FIELD GROWN ROSES

Open Daily and Sunday to visitors and purchasers
GEO. C. ROEDING, Pres.

California Nursery Company
(Founded in 1865 by John Rock)
NILES, CALIFORNIA

DESTRUCTIVE "Sulpho" compounds are the cause of motor oils breaking down rapidly under engine heat. An enormous amount of money is annually lost through the presence of these unnecessary properties in oils.

Cycol will save engine owners this tremendous amount of money lost through wasted oil, wasted fuel, preventable repairs, because it is free from destructive "sulpho" compounds. These have been removed by the new Hexeon Process used exclusively by us.

When your oil contains destructive "sulpho" compounds it breaks down rapidly under engine heat. Its lubricating value becomes quickly impaired. The oil film is broken and serious damage may result.

Have your crank case thoroughly flushed—not with kerosene. Use the correct grade of Cycol as shown on the Cycol Recommendation Chart. Use Associated Gasoline. Then notice the improved performance of your motor.

ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY
SAN FRANCISCO

CYCOL

MOTOR OIL

FREE FROM DESTRUCTIVE "SULPHO" COMPOUNDS

PERSONAL.

Social Notes.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard T. Hanna gave a ball at the Hotel St. Francis last Friday night, introducing to society their daughter, Miss Virginia Hanna. A number of dinners preceded the ball; among those who entertained were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Maxwell Sharp with their daughter, Miss Adrienne Sharp, Miss Margaret Buckbee, and Miss Lawton Filer.

Miss Frances Lent, whose engagement to Mr. Hugh Porter has been announced, was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by Mrs. Stanwood Murphy at the Palace Hotel. The wedding of Miss Lent to Mr. Hugh Porter will take place on January 10th at the residence of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Lent, on Pacific Avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. George N. Armsby have been the recipients of much hospitality during their stay in Burlingame, and have been the honored guests at a number of farewell dinners in Burlingame and San Francisco, given before their departure for the East. Among their hosts were Mr. and Mrs. Harry Horsley Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Ross Ambler Curran, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Irving Scott, Dr. and Mrs. Max Rothschild and Mr. and Mrs. Roy Pike.

Major and Mrs. E. C. Huber entertained on Friday last at a bridge party followed by supper. Miss Eleanor McGowan of Los Angeles, who has been staying at the Hotel St. Francis with her parents Mr. and Mrs. Granville McGowan, has been the guest of honor at several affairs given by her friends in San Francisco.

Miss Lisa Stillman, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Stanley Stillman, who has recently graduated from Vassar, was a guest at a tea given in her honor by Mrs. Walter Baldwin.

Mrs. Marshall Dill entertained a number of her friends at the first of a series of afternoon teas given at her residence on Divisadero Street.

The revue, "Flapper Fads and Fancies," given for the benefit of the Junior League on Monday and Tuesday nights, was successful socially and financially. Mrs. Howard Park was both author and director of the revue, and Miss Elizabeth Magee, who has recently returned from the East, took a leading part. Among those who contributed largely to the success of the performance were Mrs. Nion Tucker, Mrs. James Moffitt, Miss Jean Carrigan, Miss Alice Moffitt and several of the season's debutantes. A number of table reservations were made at the St. Francis on Monday night for supper-dances after the revue.

Mrs. Clinton La Montagne gave a luncheon last week in honor of Miss Frances Lent.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Lowery were hosts at a recent dinner, entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Harry Horsley Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Filer, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dutton and Miss Marjorie Joselyn.

Mr. George de Long, who has been staying at the Palace Hotel, has been entertained by Dr. Harry Tevis at his country place in the Santa Cruz Mountains.

Miss Elise Houghton made her debut on Tuesday at a reception given at her home in Berkeley.

Mrs. John Studebaker Johnson gave a luncheon at the Francesca Club last week in honor of Mrs. Bromfield of Santa Barbara and Mrs. Nelson Riley of Kansas City.

Mr. and Mrs. Nion Tucker gave a dinner-dance last week in honor of Miss Josephine Drown, Miss Frances Ames, and Miss Leonora Armsby.

Miss Hazel King, whose engagement to Mr. John Bakewell of Oakland has just been announced, will be married next month at the residence of her mother, Mrs. Homer S. King.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth C. Kingsbury entertained a number of their friends at a dinner-dance in their new home on Pacific Avenue.

Colonel and Mrs. Thomas Pearce were hosts at a supper-dance at the Hotel St. Francis last week, given in honor of Miss Sue Alston McDonald, who sailed for the Philippines on Tuesday.

Mrs. Horace Davis Pillsbury entertained her friends at a luncheon given at her home on Pacific Avenue in honor of Mrs. Lorenzo Avenali, who has recently returned from Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Spieker gave a dinner last week in their home on Buchanan Street. Among their guests were Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Lowery, Mr. and Mrs. Charles McCormick, Mr. and Mrs. Roger Lapham.

Mr. and Mrs. James Flood are giving an Italian costume dance at their home on Broadway on Friday, December 15th.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Weatherwax are giving a Pierrot and Pierrette costume dance at the Burlingame Country Club on December 23d.

Mr. Raymond Armsby and Mr. Gordon Armsby gave a dance on Thursday evening at the Hotel St. Francis in honor of their debutante niece, Miss Leonora Wyman Armsby. The guests included the winter's debutantes and others of the younger set, only a few of the older members of society being present.

There will be two subscription dances given at the Burlingame Country Club, on December 16th and on January 19th. The patronesses are Mrs. John Drum, Mrs. Fentress Hill, Mrs. William Duncan, Mrs. Walter Martin, Mrs. Bernard Ford, Mrs. Cyril Tobin and Mrs. Charles Templeton Crocker.

A series of plays have been given recently at the High School in San Mateo, with Mrs. John Drum, Mrs. George Pope, Mrs. Charles Templeton Crocker and Mrs. Walter Martin acting as patronesses. The two plays already given are "Enter Madame" and "The Truth About Blayds."

Dr. and Mrs. Ray Lyman Wilbur were hosts at a luncheon given in Palo Alto at the home of the president in honor of Senator Albert Le Jeune, member of the Belgian Parliament. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hoover,

Mr. Jules Simon, Belgian consul in San Francisco, and Mme. Simon, Mr. Frank Deering, member of the Stanford board of trustees, Dr. David Barrows, president of the University of California, and Mrs. Barrows, and Mr. Egerton Shore, representative of Governor Stephens, and Mrs. Shore.

Mrs. Clifford Erskine-Bolst, who was Mrs. Fletcher Ryer of San Francisco, has had the pleasure of assisting in the campaign of her husband, Captain Clifford Erskine-Bolst, who was recently returned to Parliament.

Mrs. William Griffith Henshaw gave a bridge-luncheon on Thursday at the Hotel Oakland. Among her guests were a number of friends from San Francisco.

Mr. Henry T. Scott was host at a luncheon given at the St. Francis in honor of Mr. J. Sloat Fassett of Elmira, New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Maxwell Sharp have issued invitations to a dance to be given at the Hotel St. Francis on December 22d, introducing to society their daughter, Miss Adrienne Sharp.

Mrs. Charles J. Deering gave a luncheon on December 13th in honor of Mrs. Frank W. Fuller.

Mrs. Jonathan Kittle gave a luncheon recently at the Town and Country Club to twelve of her friends.

Mrs. Alfred Oyster gave a bridge party last week.

Miss Kathleen Farrell recently gave a large bridge-tea at the residence of her mother, Mrs. James Farrell, on Broadway and Octavia.

The Countess Annesley, now in Vancouver, will arrive in San Francisco shortly before Christmas and will be the guest of her cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Algernon Crofton. She will be joined by her son, Viscount Glerawly, who has been in Santa Barbara for the past six months.

Miss Louise Boyd of San Rafael has taken the Loring Pickering house on Washington Street. Mr. and Mrs. Pickering are spending a few months in Paris, returning to California next summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Farquharson are leaving for New York, from where they will sail on the Adriatic to Egypt, and will spend the winter there.

Mrs. Charles Mohun recently gave a tea at her residence on Maple Street in honor of Mrs. Seagrave Daly of London.

The first supper-dance of the Club Royal this season was given at the Fairmont Hotel last Saturday evening. Mrs. Frederick McNear was hostess at a large dinner given in the Gray Room at the Fairmont on the night of the dance.

Mrs. B. F. Vintner.

Beatrice F. Vintner, wife of James H. Vintner, daughter of Henry Corner and sister of Alice May Botting and Henry R. Corner, died in this city on December 7th. She was a native of England.

THE HILLCREST

American and European Plan
CALIFORNIA AND JONES STS.
Phone Franklin 3240

DEL MONTE

The Largest Resort Hotel Plant in the World
Where "Thinking People" can find Recreation in Hotel del Monte's Comfort, Service and Outdoor Life. "Here every sportsman can find his chosen recreation."
TWO CHAMPIONSHIP GOLF COURSES
CARL S. STANLEY, Manager
DEL MONTE CALIFORNIA

San Ysidro Ranch

Furnished bungalows of various sizes; situated on the foothills among the orange groves, overlooking the sea. Central dining-room, electric lights, hot and cold water. Good tennis court. Six miles from Santa Barbara, two miles from ocean. Booklet. Address MANAGER

San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara

Clark's Leadership

WE are Cruise Specialists who alone possess actual experience in cruising Round the World and have successfully managed Eighteen Mediterranean Cruises during 28 years in business. Reasonable rates for superior inclusive arrangements over itineraries of much charm in great steamers offering luxurious comfort. Secure our rate sheets for comparisons.

3rd Cruise
Around the World

S. S. "Empress of France," Jan. 22d
Four months travel, first class, $1000 upward (vacancies from $1500).

19th Cruise
to the Mediterranean

S. S. "Empress of Scotland," Feb. 3rd
65 wonderful days, first class, $600 upward (vacancies from $900).

With Both Cruises

Rates include hotels, guides, drives, fees; stop-over privilege in Europe. Shore excursions at all points. Complete program and rates of the Cruise that interests you; free upon request.

FRANK C. CLARK

Times Building New York
M. T. WRIGHT, Agent
American National Bank Building
485 California Street San Francisco

American Beauty Roses
For the Debutante.

JOSEPH'S
FLORISTS

Phone Sutter 423

233 Grant Ave.

Winter Excursions to Southern California Every Day

Tickets on sale daily until March 31st at San Francisco, Oakland, Alameda and Berkeley to Los Angeles, Long Beach or Wilmington at following fares for round trip—

$30.00 Return Limit
Four Months

$25.00 Return Limit
One Month

Tickets will also be sold to San Diego under same conditions at following fares—

$38.75 Return Limit
Four Months

$32.25 Return Limit
One Month

7 trains each way every day between
San Francisco and Los Angeles

Our Agents Will Gladly Furnish You With Detailed Information

Southern Pacific Lines

50 Post Street

Ferry Station
or Phone Sutter 4000

Third St. Station

"Travel Without Trouble"

COOK'S TRAVEL SERVICE

World wide—Complete—Efficient

Inclusive Tours for Individual Travel

arranged, to start any day by
any route.

Explanatory circular on request

THOS. COOK &amp; SON

(Est. 1841)

Agents for the best lines for travel by
Land, Water or Air

128 SUTTER STREET

(COOK'S BUILDING) Phone Kearny 352

SERVICE

To Sacramento

Observation Cars.

Dining Car Service on Meteor
leaving 4:40 P.M. through to Chico.

We Carry Baggage

SACRAMENTO SHORT LINE

A visit to the home of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE on the island of CORSICA—is but one of the memorable incidents filling the 66 Summer days this winter of the

AMERICAN EXPRESS Luxury Cruise on the

Mauretania to the Mediterranean

From New York February 7th—66 Days of Enchantment

The MAURETANIA your home all the way

Visiting Azores, Madeira, Cadiz, Seville, Gibraltar, Tangier, Algiers, Monte Carlo, Nice, Naples, Pompeii, Rome, Athens, Constantinople, Palestine, Egypt, Corsica, Lisbon, Southampton, London (5 days), Cherbourg.

Send for illustrated announcement

AMERICAN EXPRESS
Travel Department

Market St. at 2d, Kearny 3100, or at the
Emmorum, Market St. near 4th, Douglas 1

STRINGER STORAGE COMPANY

Sutter near Fillmore
and
Steiner near Sutter

Conducting a Storage
Business Founded
in 1880

Storage—Shipping
Expert Packing, Protection
and Dispatch

A fully informed representative, anxious to give you any desired information, will respond to your phone call.

Phone West 999

PERSONAL.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Mr. and Mrs. George N. Armsby, who with their debutante daughter, Miss Leonora Armsby, have been spending the early winter in Burlingame, will leave for their home in New York on December 18th. Miss Armsby will remain in California with her uncle, Mr. Raymond Armsby, until the middle of January.

Miss Mary Martin returned last week from New York. Miss Martin has been visiting friends in the East for the past two months.

Miss Elizabeth Magee has recently returned from the East.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Lent returned last week from New York, where they visited their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Hermon Leonard Underhill.

Mr. George de Long of New York, who is visiting San Francisco, is staying at the Palace Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Dearborn Clark returned last week from New York, where they have been for the past two months.

Miss Mary Julia Crocker accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Dearborn Clark on the journey from New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Daulton Mann, accompanied by Miss Elena Folger, returned on the S. S. Venezuela from Central America, where they have been for the past six weeks.

Mr. Tallant Tubbs, who has been in New York for several months, has returned home by way of the Panama Canal, arriving on the S. S. Venezuela. Mr. Tubbs joined Mr. and Mrs. Daulton Mann's party at Guatemala and made the rest of the trip with them.

Mrs. Gordon Bromfield of Santa Barbara is making a brief stay in San Francisco.

Mrs. Hyppolite Dutard returned recently from abroad, accompanied by her niece, Miss Elise Houghton, of Berkeley.

Lieutenant-Commander Alfred Montgomery, U. S. N., and Mrs. Montgomery left last week for their home in Coronado, after visiting Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Folger during the Thanksgiving holidays.

Mr. Edgar Walker, the sculptor, has returned from a year's sojourn in Italy, and is established at the Fairmont for the winter.

General John B. McDonald and Mrs. McDonald with their daughter, Miss Sue Alston McDonald, sailed on the transport Thomas last Tuesday for Manila. They will visit their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon McPherson.

Mrs. Lorenzo Avenali has recently returned to San Francisco from Europe.

Mrs. Julius Kruttschnitt, Jr., of Arizona, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Pickering of San Francisco, is visiting her family and former home.

Mrs. Norris Davis of Santa Barbara has gone East to spend the Christmas holidays with her two daughters, Nancy and Marjorie. They are planning a trip to Bermuda.

Mrs. William Mayo Newhall has left for Europe and expects to be away for about three months.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Filer with their daughter, Miss Lawton Filer, have taken Mrs. Elyse Hopkins' apartment at the Brownlee Apartments on California Street for the winter season. Mrs. Hopkins has recently gone East.

Mr. Daniel C. Jackling with his guests, Mr. Charles Black and Mr. Charles Templeton Crocker, has returned from a hunting trip in New Mexico. Mrs. Daniel Jackling, accompanied by her sisters, Mrs. Herbert C. Moffitt and Mrs. Herbert Allen, met Mr. Jackling in Los Angeles and returned to San Francisco with him.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph O. Tobin and their two little daughters have returned from Europe, after a visit there of nine months.

Mr. and Mrs. George Cameron are spending a month in San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Georges de Latour Miss Hélène de Latour, and Mr. Richard de Latour have gone south on a motor trip. They expect to go as far as Coronado, and will return just before Christmas.

Mrs. Harry Macfarlane and her little daughter sailed for their home in Honolulu last Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Latham McMullin have returned from the East, where they have been for the past month. They will spend the winter at their home on Broadway.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Pond have closed their country house in Woodside and are settled in their home on Scott Street for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Welch will return to California on December 23d and will live at the Burlingame Country Club until February 1st, as their own home has been rented until then.

Mrs. Daniel T. Murphy, who has been traveling in Europe, is expected to arrive in California very shortly. Mrs. Murphy will occupy her town house on Van Ness Avenue for the winter.

Mrs. George Pope, who has been at the Plaza Hotel in New York, passed the Thanksgiving holidays with her daughter, Mrs. Moseley Taylor of Boston, who has lately returned from Europe. Mr. and Mrs. George Pope will occupy their town house on Pacific Avenue for the winter.

Mrs. Milo Potter and her daughter, Mrs. Desider Vecsei, who have been at the Hotel St. Francis for a short visit, have returned to Montecito.

Mr. J. Sloat Fassett of Elmira, New York, and his son, Mr. Newton Crocker Fassett, after making a short stay in San Francisco, sailed for the Orient last Thursday, and expect to be there for several months. Mr. Newton Fassett is a grandson of the late Judge and Mrs. E. B. Crocker of Sacramento.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Parker Currier have returned to San Francisco from Europe and are settled at the Fairmont for the winter.

Colonel Sir Frank and Lady Popham Young, who have lived in India for many years, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Arthur Bixby in Montecito. A book of poems by Sir Frank is now being published in San Francisco.

Senator Albert Le Jeune, member of the Belgian Parliament, has been a recent visitor to San Francisco. Last week Senator Le June unveiled at Stanford University the statue presented by the Belgian government to the university in recognition of the relief and reconstruction work carried out by Mr. Herbert Hoover and his associates.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hoover with their son, Mr. Herbert Hoover, Jr., have left Palo Alto for Washington. Mr. Herbert Hoover, Jr., will return for the beginning of the winter quarter at Stanford.

Colonel William Bannister, U. S. A., and Mrs. Bannister are leaving the Presidio very shortly for Milwaukee, as Colonel Bannister is retiring from active service.

Mrs. Seagrave Daly of London with her daughter, Miss Marie Daly, and her son, Mr. Arthur Daly, is in San Francisco for the winter.

Dr. and Mrs. David Starr Jordan arrived on the President Cleveland on December 14th. They have been traveling in Japan and the Hawaiian Islands.

Polo at Del Monte.

The strong feature of a programme of winter sports at Del Monte will be the Pacific Coast polo championship. The Pacific Coast sub-committee of the American Polo Association has announced that the title tournament will come to Del Monte, but the dates have not as yet been determined. There will be three weeks of play with a start probably the third week in March. Polo is going to be conducted on a new schedule in California this winter, with the clubs playing a round robin at fields of each club and finishing with one big tournament where all clubs will have play. This tournament, which takes the title of the Pacific Coast Championship, will alternate yearly between the north and south, Del Monte being favored with the award of the first tournament.

The polo season will open at Del Monte shortly after the first of the year and will continue right on through until the fall.

Golf, as usual, will figure prominently. The Del Monte and Pebble Beach courses are both standard and championship in character and the scene every year of more tournaments and competitions than any other course in the country. California championships are held there and thousands of visiting golfers get an opportunity of coming in contact with California players.

At the St. Francis.

The rains have not dampened the spirits of the fashionable folk for their usual Monday luncheon parties in the Garden and Fable Room of the St. Francis. Mrs. Walter Filer was hostess in the Garden to Mrs. Gerald Rathbone and Mrs. George Newhall. Mrs. Charles Templeton Crocker was with Miss Marjorie Josselyn. Another group included Mrs. Robert Hays Smith, Mrs. Ross Ambler Curran, and Mrs. George Cameron. Mrs. A. P. Hotaling, Jr., Mrs. Lavina Hotaling, Mrs. Ritchie Dunn and Miss Jennie Blair were together. Mrs. Philip E. Bowles, Jr., had a group with her including Mrs. Ellsworth Wylie, Mrs. George S. Romanovsky, and Miss Anne Peters.

John Breunel & Co.
of
San Francisco

281 Geary St., nr. Powell

Grandfather Clocks

—It is the ambition of most every one who is striving to make their dwelling a real home to be the possessor of one of these tall and stately clocks. We have a nice assortment, selling up to $850 and some as reasonable as $175

THE SANTA BARBARA GIRLS' SCHOOL

Resident and Day Pupils. Eleven acres. Country Life and Sports. Sleeping-porches. Open-air school rooms. Riding. Swimming all the year round. Basis of work, clear thinking.

MARIAN L. CHAMBERLAIN, A. M., Principal
P.O. Box 548, SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

The GREATEST SHOW in TOWN Gorham's Follies New Numbers Every Night

Undoubtedly the finest hotel performance ever presented. A bevy of really beautiful girls appearing in twenty sparkling numbers—musical and dancing. Each evening's performance continues with intermissions but without repetition from seven to one. Dancing between numbers.

Special dinner in the Palm Court every evening except Sunday $4.00, including cover charge. Also a la carte. Cover charge after 9 P. M. $1.50.

PALACE HOTEL

Christmas and New Year's DINNER DANCES

Good old-fashion Xmas Dinner with vested choir singing Christmas carols. Dancing during dinner. December 25th.

Jolly New Year Celebration December 31st. Frolic starts at 9 P. M. Dancing 'til early morn. Ernie Milliken's U. C. Toddler Orchestra.

Reservations are now open.
Phone Lakeside 100.

HOTEL OAKLAND OAKLAND • CALIFORNIA.

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"All that woman thinks of is clothes."
"From all appearances, I should say she was practically thoughtless."—Penn State Froth.

Office Boy—Say, boss, what is free verse?
Country Editor—Poetry clipped from the exchanges, William.—Judge.

"Do you think the end of the world is near?" "Well, it's nearer than ever before."
—Stevens Tech. Stone Mill.

Professor—Why should we read all the best of the present-day literature? B. S.—So we can appreciate the parodies.—Amherst Lord Jeff.

"What time do you want me to be back tonight?" "Any time at all, my dear, provided you are here to the minute."—Paris Sans-Gêne.

Mother (alarmed)—Why do you keep Jack in suspense? Why don't you say "yes"?
Daughter coolly—I'm just getting even with him.—Judge.

Mrs. X (as very fat lady passes)—What would you do, sweetie, if I were to get as fat as that? Mr. X—Oh, I should write once in a while.—Life.

Parent—Who is the laziest boy in your class, Johnny? Johnny—I dunno. Parent—I should think you would know. When all the other children are industriously writing or studying their lessons, who is it that sits idly in his seat and watches the rest, instead of working himself? Johnny—Teacher.—Los Angeles Times.

Doorman at Concert—My dear young lady, you're too late. The singer has just started and if I opened the door half the audience might rush out.—Stockholm Kasper.

Tutor—Now then, Smith, have you proved that proposition in Euclid? Student—Well, sir, "proved" a strong word, but I can say I've rendered it highly probable!—London Humorist.

"How does young Johnson stand at college?" "Not very well. He's all right in his studies, but he is more than suspected of cutting football games."—Boston Evening Transcript.

She (with newspaper)—Here's another musical-comedy girl married a young fellow who was just left a fortune. He—I suppose those singers naturally find it easy to pick up an heir.—Boston Evening Transcript.

Interviewer—And what made you take up weight-lifting as a profession? Professor—Well, I've always had a weakness for that sort of thing.—London Windsor Magazine.

Director of $200,000-a-Year Child Star—Now, lissen, Jimmy. Ya gotta use your im-

you have any favor to extend your loved ones none would be more appreciated than placing your valuable papers, etc., in a Safe Deposit Box, where after your death your heirs may get same without any trouble.

Boxes $4.00 a Year

Crocker Safe Deposit Vaults

Crocker Building

Post and Market Sts.

"Fore!"

Only those who have waited their turn to tee off on the municipal golf links at Lincoln Park realize how urgently San Francisco needs another golf course.

On the Lincoln Park links one cultivates patience while waiting for an opportunity to cultivate driving and putting. Is there a more congested course anywhere in the United States?

To accommodate the ever-increasing numbers of men and women, boys and girls who want to play the health-giving game that all the world has borrowed from Scotland, the city of San Francisco has laid out another municipal course.

The site chosen is the Lake Merced Rancho, known as "the golfer's stamping ground."

On the Lake Merced Rancho there are already the links of the San Francisco Golf and Country Club, the California Club, the Lake Merced Golf Club, and the Lakeside Club of the Olympians to which they are now adding thirty-six holes.

So the new municipal course will be in good golfing company.

For this Lake Merced course the city, through the Park Commission, has leased 170 acres from the Spring Valley Water Company.

Like the Lincoln Park course the new one will be "sporty" and will have a magnificent scenic setting. Play will commence there next summer.

SPRING VALLEY
WATER COMPANY

The Catacombs of Cypress Lawn

Comparable with the luxurious tombs of ancient Egyptian kings, yet within the means of people of moderate circumstances.

A stone edifice, highly artistic in appearance, containing a magnificent chapel. Eleven Tomb Rooms, 425 Crypts.

Cypress Lawn Cemetery Association

Phone Douglas 4772

995 Market St.

KING COAL

High in Heat Units
Low in Ash

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS
IN CALIFORNIA

KING COAL CO.
Main Office
EXCHANGE BLOCK
San Francisco
Wholesale Only

FOR A
CLEAR COMPLEXION
and a
HEALTHY COLOR
eat
FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST
Three Cakes a Day

MACEDONIAS

Specialy Made to Order from the Finest Imported
Turkish Tobacco

Monogrammed to Your Idea

Aristocratic in Aroma and Appearance

Call, Phone or Write

The Macedonia Tobacco Co.

46 Kearny Street
Phone Sutter 4483 SAN FRANCISCO

WESTERN ASBESTOS MAGNESIA CO.

INSULATING ENGINEERS AND CONTRACTORS

Asbestos and Composition Roofings
Asbestos and Asphalt Slate Surfaced Shingles and Roofing
Magnesia and Asbestos Pipe and Boiler Coverings
Cold Storage Insulation
Sectional Expansion Paving Joint
"Linofelt" Sound Deadener
Mastic and Magnesite Floorings
Wall Board
Celotex Insulating Lumber
Cork Pipe Covering, Board and Granulated Cork

21-29 SOUTH PARK, BETWEEN 2nd and 3rd STREETS

Telephone Douglas 3860

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

NOTE—We employ a force of Skilled Workmen and Contract for the Application of our Coverings, Roofings, Cold Storage Insulations, Waterproofing and Mastic Flooring.

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXXXXI. No. 2387.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 23, 1922.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE: The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $5.00 per year; six months, $2.55; three months, $1.50, payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $6.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, Alto Building, 381 Bush Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco Postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., Breams Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue; and at Daws Steamship Agency, 17 Green Street, Leicester Square, and can be ordered from any of the news-stands of W. H. Smith & Son. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-Fourth Street. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at Adams' News Agency, Ninth and G Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & Orear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Van Nooy-Interstate Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Telephone, Sutter 6373. Publication office, 381 Bush Street.
WM. J. MILLIKEN, Business Manager.

FORTY-SIXTH YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| EDITORIAL: A Sane Christmas—Subsidies for All—Schools and Economy—How Federal Disbursements Grow—Editorial Notes .....    | 417-419 |
| LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.....  | 419     |
| VOICES FROM THE PRESS.....  | 419-420 |
| OLD FAVORITES .....   | 420     |
| INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes About Prominent People All Over the World.....   | 420     |
| REVELATIONS OF A CABINET MEMBER: Franklin K. Lane Reveals in His Letters the Observations and Anxieties of a Patriot..... | 421     |
| BANKING AND INVESTMENT NEWS.....  | 422-423 |
| BOOKS ON THE TABLE: Notes of Books and Authors... ..  | 424     |
| REVIEWS AND NOTICES: New Books Received.....  | 425     |
| DRAMA: "The Gold Diggers"; The Players Theatre; Metropolitan Attractions. By Josephine Hart Phelps..                      | 426     |
| FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE CHAT.....  | 426     |
| VANITY FAIR: Couéism in New York Society—Consternation Among the Goats—International Marriages.....                       | 428     |
| STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise .....   | 429     |
| THE MERRY MUSE.....   | 429     |
| PERSONAL: Social Notes—Movements and Whereabouts... ..  | 430-431 |
| THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day.....   | 432     |

A Sane Christmas.

If you are going to play Santa Claus this Christmas, don't put off the preparation of your costume and make-up till the last minute, go up in the attic and make your whiskers of cotton, or flax, and then drag them across a candle flame, reaching for little Willie's tin locomotive high on the tree. True, it is often done, but it is not often repeated by the same person; it has been found that Christmas cheer can not be materially augmented that way. If you are going to set up a Christmas tree, do it properly. Make a job of it. Brace it. If you don't understand what a brace is, look it up in the dictionary, and if you don't see its application, use a heavy box, or get a carpenter. It is better to go to a little trouble with a Christmas tree than a great deal of it with a burning house or a mutilated child. And having set up the tree, don't bedeck it with various kinds of fancy kindling; put the kindling in the fireplace, and ornament the tree with things that will not ignite. You can get plenty of flake asbestos, metal tinsel, and mica, and it makes good frost and snow. And don't use candles. They are beautiful, but difficult to attach securely, and are never safe even when well attached. One open flame in a living room is bad enough—thirty or forty on a tree hung with presents that love is eager to distribute and for which little hearts are expectantly waiting, is foolishness. A line of small electric lights of different colors may be almost as beautiful, and it is much cheaper than a line of trained nurses trying to save a life, or a young face from disfigurement. Don't make snow of cotton. When it catches fire it does not in the least resemble snow.

Don't buy cheap electrical toys, with poor connections that may spark dangerously in operation. They have caused many fires. Look out for home motion pictures—most reels are inflammable, almost explosive. Do not jeopardize young life with gifts involving the use of gasoline, alcohol, or kerosene. There are plenty of toys that work some other way. You will enjoy a home dinner a great deal more if you haven't burned down the home. You will enjoy it more if the family is all there, and safe. You will enjoy it more in your home, with your family safe, than at your neighbor's who has taken you into his house because you burned yours. When Christmas is over, get rid of the tree before it dries to a torch. In England it is said that Christmas trees standing after New Year's bring bad luck. Probably the superstition embodies a lesson of experience, as many superstitions and folkways do. "Never walk under a ladder" is good advice—it may fall on you. Never let a Christmas tree stand after New Year's; or until New Year's—it may take fire and set your family on the street. These warnings are suggested by the National Board of Underwriters, whose business it is to understand the causes of fires and reduce their number; wherein again we see that great social dynamo, the hope of private profit, working for the general benefit. Observe these little admonitions, and if your life is reasonably clear of sin and debt, and you are on good terms with your relations and your banker, you will probably enjoy a Merry Christmas.

Subsidies for All.

The reformation of the United States has begun. It is to be accomplished by the application of subsidies. Senator Brookhart, the newly-chosen radical messiah from Iowa, brings in an amendment to the shipping bill to pay subsidies to "producers, industrial and agricultural." These are to be in addition to the protection already granted them by our latest tariff monstrosity, and in addition to the subsidies to be granted shipping, if any there shall be. The proposal in the Iowa senator's scheme is to base the aids to production on the fact of export in a subsidized American bottom. We can not tell, because we are not in his confidence, whether his purpose is to make the shipping bill palatable to the farmers, or unpalatable to the rest of the country, but it seems more likely that it is in sincere and serious pursuit of the radical ideal of making everything dependent on the government in order to reach the Russian millennium in which everything is done socially instead of individually—a position so advanced that the Russians began their retreat from it eighteen months ago in order to escape starvation.

The Brookhart proposal was bound to come. It is in accord with the principle of governmental assistance. But if it is to be consistently advocated by the reformationists it ought to be trued up and made consistent with conditions. In the first place, there should be some better understanding of the term production than that with which the social millenniumists appear to be equipped. And in the second place, no class of producer should be discriminated against.

The production in which society is interested is the production of values, rather than the production of things. Value is a term over which endless disputes have raged, and will. But it may properly be conceived, without strain on the intellect, as a contribution to welfare. And it is a matter altogether subjective, altogether of relationship; relativity, perhaps. It depends, not on the thing itself, but on the relation between the thing and the condition of the user or consumer. Dinner to a hungry man is valuable, but another dinner, just after he has eaten one, has no value to him at all. It is, in that place and at that time, overproduction. And therefore value is largely a matter of timeliness and of geographical position, and of possession by the persons having use for the object evaluated:

requirements commonly studied out and met by sinful capitalists, whose financial lives depend on finding the right answers. Karl Marx thought value was labor cost. And, practically speaking, socialism with its condemnation of the capitalistic and individualistic system as a despoiler of labor is based on that idea.

Now, if we are to subsidize producers, we should subsidize producers not of things merely, but of values, for such producers really serve society and deserve its rewards. And if any, then all. And if all, then each in proportion to the values he produces. Senator Brookhart should not, for example, overlook the transportation men, who do not produce things, but who do produce values, by getting the things others produce from the places where they are made to the places where they are wanted—for things are never produced, in commercial volume, at the point where they are consumed. And so we should subsidize the butcher boy that used to bring the porterhouse and now brings the hamburger, and the bakery wagon driver that used to bring the bread and cake and now brings the bread. We should subsidize all the street-car conductors, who transport our nickels from us to the corporations that need them, and we should subsidize the motormen that transport us from where we are to where we wish we were; or from our homes, where we have little value to society, to the shop or office where the optimist that hires us hopes we may have more. We should subsidize the man that has a valuable thought, for of all valuable things thoughts are likely to have the largest values. A small commission of about a hundred thousand omniscient philosophers should be able readily to distinguish the valuable thoughts from the worthless ones.

Under any consistent scheme of subsidization we should subsidize mothers, for they are producers, but we should only subsidize mothers of valuable men. Of course, this involves waiting until the men are dead, and then appraising them. There is no use subsidizing the mother of a criminal—she has done nothing to deserve it; she has not produced value, but destruction. The appraisal of the valuable men, in order to subsidize the mothers, if still living, in proportion to the values they have produced, should be an easy task for another omniscient millennial commission. And then there are the fathers. And the dentists and the doctors and the actors, good and bad. There would be plenty of work for commissions. There could be one for evaluating works of art; as, for example, paintings. The academicians, and the impressionists, and the Barbizonians, and the post-impressionists, and the pre-Raphaelites and the cubists and the futurists and the neo-futurists could all be represented, and we could give them six-ounce gloves, get the four-round limit raised, and let them go to it. Then there is music. How valuable is that? An aria sung by Calvé is valuable to those that like it, but how about the same sung by Gadski? Ask the American Legion at Los Angeles, which did not wish to hear her at all. If Calvé were to be subsidized, should Gadski be? Of course, an omniscient millennial commission should be able to decide a little thing like that off-hand, and satisfy everybody the first time. And then there are the poets. We can think of some who, on the basis of subsidizing producers according to the values they have produced, might be entitled to subsidies, but they are almost all dead. And to go from the sublime to the merely useful and valuable, there is the garbage man. Now, he does not produce any material thing. Neither does he take things produced by others from the point of production to the point of use and consumption. His processes are the reverse of that. He takes things from the place where they have been used to some other place, and we none of us care where, just so he gets them out of the back yard. Isn't he to be subsidized, if all the rests of us are? And we will all admit being valuable and therefore all entitled to subsidies. If mothers, then fathers. If musicians and painters, then editors and car washers. There is no logical limit.

And have the subsidizers duly considered whence the subsidies are to be derived? If all the people are to be subsidized there is but one source of the necessary revenue, and that is all the people. Under any logical development of the subsidy system of bringing on the millennial dawn and guaranteeing human happiness, all the people should pay subsidies to one another. They would then approximate the fortunate condition of the inhabitants of the Scilly Isles, who, it will be recalled, prosper greatly by taking in one another's washing. They have learned the real secret of national happiness. Senator Brookhart and other uplifters of his type should go there and see their theories in operation in their logical completeness. That is what the Italian socialists did in the case of Russian communism: they went, or sent, there and looked at it. And Fascisma followed. We should not expect any similar result from a study of the industrial system of the Scilly Isles on the part of Senator Brookhart and his disciples. But we should like to know where those indefatigable laundrymen and laundresses get the money to buy the soap.

Schools and Economy.

California appears to be about to "take profits" on the adoption of the budget amendment to the Constitution, and the election of Friend William Richardson to the governorship. The governor-elect announces that he will submit, during the first three weeks of the coming legislative session, a budget for the next biennial period aggregating $79,000,000, or about $12,000,000 less than the appropriations made in 1921 for the present biennial period. This is a very good start, creditable to the disposition and abilities of the governor-elect, and encouraging to the hope that even greater cuts may be made. Our state government has taken on too many functions, set up too many bureaus to do for the individual what the individual should be doing for himself, and would be doing for himself if professional law-makers did not see personal profit in the multiplication of laws and commissions and jobs. It is not the will of the majority that our political institutions should develop this way; still less is it that of the conscious taxpayer. If there is a demand for such institutions from other than political sources it comes from small and noisy minorities of idealists and sentimentalists, usually persons who pay no taxes directly and suppose they have nothing to lose, and who burn with the desire to reform the world through paternalistic inventions, often German in origin, and always distinctively socialistic in spirit, tending toward that heaven where life will be equalized by taking the money from those that earned it and giving it to those that did not. It is no wonder Bernard Shaw has said that the idealists are ruining the world.

This artfully accelerated drift toward paternalism is most apparent in the expansion of the activities of the schools. It is an expansion no one seems to have had the courage to oppose, because a sacred quality has attached to the whole subject of education in this country, and what is imbued by the popular imagination with the quality of sanctity can never afterward receive rational analysis except by the most irreverent. Democracy is supposed to rest on education, and to a large extent it does, and so, to suggest any restriction of educational development, no matter how useless such development might be, no matter how far out of line with the real spirit of democracy, almost takes on the aspect of treason. Many of the school men themselves, eager to expand their industry and inflate their professional importance, have lent themselves to the promotion of every fad that came along and was supposed or claimed to be for the benefit of the children and the school system. At any rate, if any influential school man has stood up and fought to defend the public and the schools themselves from the undue and irrational expansion of school activities we do not now recall his name—and if any there be we should like to be reminded of him. We have been egregiously "sold" on all sorts of fads that were not essential and not even helpful to the development of American character—which is what schools are for. We have gone to seed in the matter of kindergartens, cookery, athletics, millinery, and household economics, once taught in the household by the mother, who understood about it because she had to practice it instead of drawing materials from the school department at the expense of the taxpayers.

A state law now requires that twenty minutes out of the school day be devoted to athletics, and this is done under the instruction of high-salaried athletic directors; whereas a few minutes of classroom calisthenics, morning and afternoon, led by the regular grade teacher, once sufficed to promote circulation, and aeration of the lungs, and keep the pupils in health as far as such exercises could do it—but it was not sufficiently expensive to suit the faddists. Twenty minutes a day may not seem much to devote athletics; but a rather significant fact in relation to it is that no law devotes twenty minutes a day to spelling. And then there is story telling. Of course there must be specialists to teach that—drawing more salaries. The fads and frills cost like sin, and are no part of such education as the public ought to be taxed to supply. And they all involve, for their coordination and control, heavy additions to the "overhead" in the form of swollen office forces. These things are no part of the "rights of childhood." Childhood, in the American conception and habit, has a right to a little freedom for its own spontaneous development. If the faddists extend their system much farther, American childhood will be reduced to the sort of regimented state slavery that causes so many child suicides in Germany.

Our school buildings now involve the most expensive construction and the most intricate architecture. They must have assembly halls and kitchens and gymnasiums and laboratories, even in the grade schools—all very well if the funds available were limitless, but they are not, and when those we are able to devote to the schools are eaten up providing for things that do not properly come into the picture of education, but are mere expensive socialistic appendages to it, calling for more and more housing and professional staffing, there is less and less to apply to providing every child with rudimentary instruction in fundamental and disciplinary subjects, in suitable buildings, and we find ourselves forced into heavier and heavier bond issues and more taxes to meet interest and sinking funds, while the system presents the distressing spectacle of part-time classes for lack of accommodation; and all this in spite of the fact that in most of our cities the population to share the tax burden is increasing and should by that increase be able to carry the legitimate costs of keeping plant and staff up to requirements.

It is for such reasons, in general, that the state treasury, which pays about 48 per cent. of the costs of maintaining our schools, besides providing for the university, is called upon to increase its disbursements for this object by $7,000,000 for the next two years. It is altogether too much. No one could reasonably question the demand if only the essentials of education were being supplied, with due provision for upkeep and replacement of plant when necessary. But when it is evident that a large percentage of what the taxpayers contribute to education is squandered on frills and foibles, on cooking and folk dancing and bonnet designing and higher athletic direction, and a lot of fads of that sort, to the neglect of scholarship, we recognize the stigmata of perversion and the waste of political work-making. Here is a field in which Governor-elect Richardson can force retrenchment, in the further execution of his pre-election pledges. He should go at it with an axe and an easy conscience. Those that understand will not criticize, and those that pay will not condemn. There will be a howl, of course, from some of the self-seeking professional specialists. But in such a juncture it is well to remember Carlyle's admonition—"Get it done and let them howl."

How Federal Disbursements Grow.

Led by the organized pacifists of the country, many of our newspapers and public men seem to imagine that militarism is the great tax-eater. The statistics make an impressive showing because the calculators pack into them the pensions, Veterans' Bureau expenditures and the non-military activities of the army, including the rivers and harbors work, the Panama Canal, and like subjects. The new budget shows that the operations of the army for the national defense are to cost $256,552,887 and those of the navy for the national defense $289,880,993; a total of $546,433,880, or about two-thirds of the combined Veterans' Bureau and Pension Bureau disbursements. Actually the total sum is only a little greater than the Veterans' Bureau alone will disburse.

Any one that will study the President's budget message and the accompanying budget presented to Congress early this month must be impressed by the vivid manner in which the country's fiscal condition is pictured. But the student must be alarmed when he examines the restrained phrases of our chief executive and analyzes the charges that are imposed upon the treasury.

The sources of our revenue, and the purposes for which it is expended, have been revolutionized since 1917. We are getting the bulk of our income from sources then untouched, and we expend most of it for purposes new in the category of government obligations. The graphic charts presented by the Budget Bureau show that the average dollar of revenue flowing into the treasury is made of 72.1 cents of internal revenue receipts, 12.7 cents of customs receipts, and 15.2 cents of miscellaneous receipts. From income and profits taxes alone come 44.6 cents, and from miscellaneous internal revenue taxes 27.5 cents. The income and profits taxes are relatively new, and they are the largest source of revenue. The 15.2 cents of miscellaneous revenues includes 6.9 cents from interest, premium, and discount, and 8.3 cents from "other receipts," including royalties on coal and oil lands, sales of public lands and similar subjects.

Then we find that the average dollar to be expended by the government during the fiscal year beginning July 1st next is to be divided among the services as follows: General functions, 2.8 cents; military functions, 32.7 cents; civil functions, 27.3 cents; non-functional operations, including interest on the public debt and debt retirements as the chief items, 37.2 cents.

But even this showing is not quite accurate, for the figure of 32.7 cents for military functions includes 19.2 cents for military pensions, retirement pay, annuities, world war allowances and life insurance claims, leaving only 13.5 cents for actual national defense. This analysis will be a sad blow to some of our working pacifists that have been raising statistical hobgoblins on the subject. Of the 27.3 cents to be expended for civil functions, 1.4 cents goes for promotion, regulation, and operation of marine transportation; 15.5 cents for postal service; 4.4 cents for public works, and but 6 cents for other civil functions. The largest single classification in the list is 37.2 cents for what are called non-functional operations. Public debt retirements will take 9.2 cents of this and interest on the public debt 25.2 cents, or a total of 34.4 cents for public debt charges; and 1.8 cents represents the handling of trust moneys, including the Indian funds.

The departments and independent boards, bureaus, and commissions that will expend the money, and the amounts they will expend, follow: The Veterans' Bureau will require 12.2 cents of every Federal dollar; Department of Agriculture, 4.1 cents; Department of Commerce, 0.5 cents; Department of the Interior, 8.5 cents (largely due to civil war pension payments); Department of Justice, 0.5 cents; Department of Labor, 0.2 cents; Navy Department, 8.5 cents; War Department, 8.4 cents; Postoffice Department, 15.5 cents; State Department, 0.4 cents; Treasury Department, 39.3 cents; District of Columbia, 0.6 cents, and legislative branch and independent establishments, 1.3 cents.

Glancing over the functional totals, one observes that almost half the budget is composed of three classes of expenditure, all created since 1917. The largest of these is $950,000,000 for interest on the public debt; next comes approximately half a billion dollars for the Veterans' Bureau; and third, one hundred million dollars for public roads.

"Can there be any reasonable expectation of further reduction in governmental expenditures in the near future?" asks the President. He points out that "approximately two-thirds of the taxes collected go to pay certain fixed charges over the expenditures of which there can be exercised little or no administrative control. The interest on the public debt, the chief of the fixed charges, must be paid. This will be $950,000,000 for the fiscal year 1924, constituting nearly one-third of the total expenditure of the government. Among these are also certain permanent and indefinite appropriations for various purposes and certain large annual appropriations sanctioned by law and public opinion."

Obviously the President was referring to pensions and that form of pension and gratuity expended by the Veterans' Bureau. This bureau will disburse considerably more than half a billion dollars during the coming fiscal year. The budget asks $253,000,000 for pensions, chiefly civil war, for the year, a slight advance over the current year, but not quite so much as during the fiscal year ending June 30th last.

Put another way, we are now giving gratuities as a result of previous wars to veterans and their dependents aggregating three-quarters of a billion dollars a year, or just about three-fourths of the total cost of administering this government prior to 1917. Public attention has been concentrated largely in the past two or three years on payments to the disabled of the great war through the Veterans' Bureau. But while public attention has been so diverted the civil war and Spanish war pension advocates have been progressively piling new pension charges on us. Back in 1883, when we were paying $66,000,000 a year for pensions, it was estimated that the peak of this charge had been reached. When the pension charge had increased to more than $160,000,000 a year we were told that that was the end. It has been going forward steadily since then and the figure for the fiscal year 1921 was $260,000,000.

And immediately after the reading of the President's message containing these words of warning the House, on motion of Representative Fuller, suspended the rules and passed without debate a bill which had passed the Senate making a revolutionary increase in civil war pensions.

This bill raises to $72 a month the pensions of civil war veterans of ninety days' service and Mexican war veterans of sixty days' service. The basis is ninety days' service and sixty days' service, and not the disability required in the pension laws up to 1907, when the first so-called service pension was put through. When some five or six years ago the service pension was raised to a basis of $1 a day or $30 a month the country thought we had gone pretty far.

But this isn't the only revolutionary thing in the bill. Section 2 advances to June 27, 1915, what is known as the "widow's date." In earlier pension legislation Congress tried to break up the practice of young girls marrying decrepit veterans in the hope of getting a widow's pension at an early date thereafter. Earlier legislation had fixed the "widow's date" in the 'seventies. A few years ago it was raised to 1907. Now it has advanced to 1915, with the further extraordinary provision that a widow who married a veteran after June 27, 1915, and who "after said date shall have lived and cohabited with the soldier, sailor, or marine for at least two years and continuing until his death," shall likewise be pensioned, precisely as if the marriage had been prior to the date, at the new established widow's rate of $50 a month.

The recent annual report of the Pension Bureau shows that there were on the roll at the end of the fiscal year June 30th last 547,016 pensioners, classified as follows: Civil war veterans, 193,881; widows, minor children, and dependents of civil war veterans, 272,194; war of 1812 widows, 49; Mexican war soldiers, 73; Mexican war widows, 1878; Indian war soldiers, 3867; Indian war widows, 2748; Spanish war soldiers, 44,965; Spanish war widows, minor children, and dependents, 9198. The total soldiers pensioned and living are 256,828, but there are 282,965 widows, 2106 minor children, 927 helpless children, 4100 dependents, and 90 nurses. But the President manifestly has given up hope of making any savings in expenditures of this character.

In 1909 the expenditures of the Department of Agriculture were about $13,000,000 a year. By 1912 they had risen to something just short of $20,000,000. This year $154,000,000 is asked for that department, but of this $100,000,000 is for public roads expenditures. Thus the comparable figures are the $20,000,000 of 1912 against the $54,000,000 for the fiscal year 1924.

Has the farmer or has the country received a compensating benefit for this tremendous percentage increase?

The President plainly has in mind also good road expenditures. This was not the subject of Federal appropriations to any considerable degree until the fiscal year 1918, when the first appropriations under the new Federal cooperative road law entailed the expenditure of $843,474. The expenditures for the ensuing years follow: 1919, $3,665,694; 1920, $24,555,180; 1921, $62,498,203; this year it is $75,000,000 approximately, and now $100,000,000 is asked for the ensuing fiscal year 1924.

Go through the detailed appropriations proposed by the budget for practically all the departments and you will find large increases, but they are more notable in the Department of Agriculture than anywhere else, save in the treasury, where the increase is accounted for by the necessary enlargement of the personnel connected with the administration of the new internal revenue laws. The national defense must be absolved from charges of tax-gouging. The trouble is in the other departments. But it is a grave trouble, which manifests no decline with the years.

Editorial Notes.

It is an imperfect world and one in which the good need be as wise as serpents. It may be necessary to use a man like Burns in order to protect the country from a man like Gompers.

In enforcing the Wright Act it is to be hoped Chief O'Brien will remember that its advocates loudly declared before election it would call for no increase of the police force. Let us see if it does.

If there is any such thing as a popular associate justice of the Supreme Court, Pierce Butler is likely to be one. Most of the United States, until it forgets all about him, is going to "love him for the enemies he has made."

A Japanese official is quoted by David Starr Jordan to the effect that the $400,000,000 spent on the Siberian forces of occupation would have rebuilt Tokio as a modern city. If that is what they would have done with the money it is a good thing they wasted it in Siberia.

The dispute between Russia, Poland, Esthonia, Latvia and Finland about reduction of armaments, and the difficulties they are having to determine just how large Poland's army is, would indicate that the self-determined new nations are carrying concealed weapons just like the old ones.

Keep your eye on Ismet Pasha. He says he will not consent to have the League of Nations administer the affairs of the minority populations in Turkey, for it would encourage those minorities to appeal to an outside agency, and enable the foreign powers to continue their interference in Turkish affairs. It would, he says, "result in the exploitation of minorities for political ends under the lying cloak of humanitarianism." He says the Turks have always been able to get along with other nationals when those nationals keep out of politics and are not stirred up by outside influences. That may not be a welcome statement to the sentimentalists, but it does seem to have a measure of sense in it, and some rough correspondence with the truth.

One might well infer that Mr. Ben W. Hooper, chairman of the Railroad Labor Board, is a hard man to hoodwink. Speaking before the Western Railway Club at Chicago, he said:

There is today an element of men who call themselves progressives, but who might be more aptly denominated "crawfish progressives." They imagine they are going forward, but as a matter of fact they are traveling backward. The so-called progressive convention at Cleveland last week was dominated by certain leaders of labor organizations, associated with prominent representatives of the Socialist party. This convention adopted a platform which, boiled down, meant: "Every man who has anything to sell shall have higher prices for it and every man who has to buy anything shall get it at lower prices."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Encore!

YUMA, ARIZONA, December 7, 1922.

The Argonaut, San Francisco, Cal.—

GENTLEMEN: Enclosed find check for $5 in payment for subscription renewal to the Argonaut. This is a Christmas treat to myself. San Francisco is my old home town, and I am proud to know it is the home of the finest weekly published anywhere. Best wishes and Merry Christmas.

Sincerely yours,

F. J. MARTIN.

Real Reciprocity.

SEATTLE, December 4, 1922.

TO THE EDITOR—Dear Sir: Enclosed please find $5 to renew my subscription to your valued paper for another year. For the past twenty-five years I have been a constant reader of the Argonaut. No periodicals come into my home that gives myself and family greater pleasure.

Wishing you continued success, believe me,

Sincerely yours,

W. A. IRWIN.

A Reader's Judgment.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 11, 1922.

The Argonaut, San Francisco—

GENTLEMEN: Enclosed please find my check for $5 and kindly renew my subscription to the Argonaut. And do not forget that we still have the curse of prohibition with us. Your remarks in the past have been most enlightening and to the point on this question.

Yours very truly,
H. G. BADGER, JR.

Sweden today counts 40,000 automobiles, according to recent statistics, double the number in use two years ago. Stockholm alone has 5000 cars. Swedish farmers, formerly hostile to the invasion, have become reconciled and are buying cars. Much of the gasoline and an overwhelming majority of the cars come from the United States.

VOICES FROM THE PRESS.

NORTH AMERICA AND LIQUOR.

(Manchester Guardian.)

The North American continent is clearly in sad difficulties. Unabashed smuggling of liquor from Canada to her nominally "bone dry" neighbor goes on with the connivance, or at least the apathy, of Canadian authorities. The Toronto correspondent of the Times writes that cargoes of liquor are being openly loaded at Canadian ports for transport to the States. A new sort of desperado, with a swift and capacious motor launch, makes a fortune that Flint or Silver might have envied in the rather mean adventure of transporting drink across the Great Lakes. The root of the trouble lies in the fact that in this matter Canada is divided; and unless, where smuggling will pay, it is possible to get a common policy over all the area concerned, the effect of local restrictions is apt to be a multiplication of law-breakers. On the North American continent Quebec and British Columbia remain incorrigible anti-prohibitionists. The one has an essentially English, the other a purely French, tradition of a humane use of beer, wine, and even of spirits. As a result, when the young, ardent, reforming heart of Canada, in the prairie provinces and Ontario, follows the American prohibitionist's example and goes "all out" to abolish the "saloon," these awkward conservatives, with memories of rafted inns and of historic cafés, where great men have warmed to gaiety, wit, and enterprise, simply refuse to toe the line. It makes a difference in one's view of the "public-house" if it recalls Shakespeare at the Mermaid, Burns at Poosie Nancy's, or even poor Villon screwing another imperishable ballad out of himself with a final flagon, rather than just Tammany bemusing, in the interests of "graft," the electorate of New York. The upshot of this difference of outlook is to make chaos of the liquor laws in North America. The United States and the major part of Canada have embarked on a legislative experiment in teetotalism which, whatever its result, will be historic. The unregenerate corners of the continent will have to disown and subdue attempts to destroy that experiment by piracy. If they have the right of the matter on their side it will in time prevail, but not by these means.

LET THE CONSTITUTION ALONE.

(St. Louis Globe-Democrat.)

The so-called progressives, in and out of Congress, plan a series of constitutional amendments. No less than five are advocated by them, or some of them, and two are already under consideration in the Senate. One of these would fix the time of the regular meeting of Congress following an election in the ensuing January and the inauguration of the President at the same time. The other would abolish the Electoral College and provide for the certification of the vote to Congress by the state authorities. Of those to be proposed later on, perhaps in this session, one would apply to child labor, another would provide for the direct nomination of presidential candidates by the people, and still another would embody La Follette's scheme to make Congress superior to the Constitution.

There is nothing objectionable per se in the first proposal mentioned. The Globe-Democrat has often favored the change of the meeting dates for Congress and the inauguration of the President to the first of the year. There is no good reason for postponing the meeting of a newly-elected Congress until sixteen months have elapsed. There is no constitutional prohibition against earlier regular meeting, and no such delay as has become customary was ever contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. The Constitution prescribes that at least one session shall be held each year, and that "such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day." Congress therefore has the power to "appoint a different day." The Constitution does not say when a President's term of office shall begin, nor does it fix the date of presidential or congressional elections. The first Congress met as soon as its members could get together after their election, and the first President was inaugurated just as soon after his election as he could be notified and reach New York. Washington was declared elected on April 6th and inaugurated on April 30th. This shows that the founders of our country had no thought of delayed action. Congress would have the power to make any or all of the changes proposed but for the fact that the Constitution fixes the terms of office of the President and members of Congress, and these changes can not be made without cutting two months from the term of one President and from the terms of all the members of the Congress affected by the change.

As to the abolition of the Electoral College, it would do no harm in itself, nor can we see that it would do any good. It would not make the slightest difference in our present election system, except to remove a mere formality that has long ceased to have any value, and to put all the cumbersome machinery of constitutional amendment into operation for such a purpose seems to us to be bad precedent. Really, the Constitution ought not to be tampered with unless great public necessity demands it.

WALLOONS AND FLEMINGS.

(Washington Post.)

One of the legacies of disunion and bitterness left by the world war is the conflict in Belgium between the Walloons, or French-speaking Belgians, and the Flemish-speaking element. This conflict, it is true, does not date from yesterday, but has existed for decades. The Flemish tongue is recognized as an official language in Belgium, its use, on an equality with French, being permitted in the law courts and in the Parliament, while all laws and decrees are promulgated in the two languages.

The ever-increasing use of French aroused, however, a strong spirit of resistance among the partisans of the Flemish tongue, who naturally turned for moral support to their brothers-in-race in the Netherlands and in a lesser degree to the Germanic race, to whose language their tongue is allied. The fact that the Flemish language boasts of a literature of considerable importance and has played a leading rôle in the history of the Low Countries increased the enthusiasm of the Flemings for the use of their language.

Before 1914 there was a considerable diminution in the bitterness of the conflict between Walloons and Flemings, and something like a modus vivendi was found which allowed of French and Flemish existing side by side without too much bickering. There was, however, one place in which the cessation of the conflict was viewed with disfavor, and that was in Berlin. Harboring the designs on Belgium which she did, Germany encouraged the Flemings in their resistance to the French tongue. The Germans reckoned on creating such a breach between Walloons and Flemings that the latter would hail the Germans as their allies and protectors and would regard everything French with hostility.

During the German occupation of Belgium no stone was left unturned to conciliate the Flemings and widen the breach between them and the Walloons. The Germans, however, did not succeed, as they had hoped to do, in creating among the Flemish population a movement in favor of the union of Belgium with Germany, though they did succeed, to a certain extent, in reviving the bitterness of their conflict. This has continued to a certain degree even after the peace. The Flemish element demands that the French university of Ghent shall be transformed into a Flemish one. This has naturally aroused the resistance of the Walloons, who insist on its maintenance as French. At the same time they have no objection to the Flemings also having their own university. In defense of the French point of view a demonstration of the Walloon element of western Flanders, attended by more than 20,000 people, was recently organized at Ghent. To this the Flemish element organized a strong opposition, with the result that a clash took place in the streets of that city, which was only suppressed with difficulty by the intervention of strong forces of gendarmerie, both mounted and on foot.

ASTOR AND ASTORIA.

(New York Herald.)

The ill fortune that befell Astoria, Oregon, recently, when a great fire swept away its business section, causing property loss estimated at $15,000,000, brought into the news a city whose name figures very infrequently in the dispatches. Astoria was intended for great things. It was a city founded on a vision. The vision faded, and the town that grew up on pilings driven into the flats of the Columbia River eight miles from its mouth plodded on to a soberer and less magnificent destiny.

John Jacob Astor, its founder and the founder of the Astor family in America, dreamed of making Astoria the commercial centre of a vast trade with the Far East. The fortunes of the war of 1812 and British domination of the fur trade in the Northwest blocked his plan and diverted his ambition into other channels. Astoria grew up, not to become a powerful commercial centre and the nucleus of a new and separate American civilization on the Pacific Coast, as Astor and President Jefferson expected, but a busy little fishing and manufacturing city with a modest future before it.

Here in New York Astor planned the enterprise which was to make Astoria the clearing house and the feeder of an even vaster fortune than the one he founded. In his shop on Water Street, where he cured with his own hands the skins he obtained on trading expeditions among the Indians of the Adirondacks and Canada, he began to turn over in his mind the reports brought back by the expedition of Lewis and Clark. He pictured a string of trading posts across the Western country extending to the fort built by Lewis and Clark, near where Astoria now stands.

He established his post at Astoria in 1811, but the enterprise did not thrive. The British trading companies were too strongly entrenched. In the war of 1812 his trading post was seized by the enemy, who held it for several years. Astor tried for a time to pursue his project and then shifted his operations to the Middle West, making his two most important posts at Mackinac and St. Louis.

President Jefferson, who warmly approved Astor's project, wrote of the enterprise that he looked forward "with great satisfaction to the time when the descendants of Astoria shall spread themselves over the whole coast, covering it with free and independent Americans, unconnected with us but by the ties of blood and interest, and enjoying, like us, the rights of self-government."

But it was not Astoria's portion to be the colonizing centre of the Oregon country. Portland, much further inland, near the junction of the Columbia River and the Willamette River, became the chief port of the first successful American colony on the Pacific Coast.

Never the city it was intended to be, Astoria had to struggle to become the city it is. For years the barrier of silt and sand piled up by the tides at the mouth of the Columbia endangered shipping seeking its wharves. Millions of dollars have been spent by the government in dredging a forty-foot channel off Cape Disappointment and Baker Bay.

But if Astoria has not made itself the centre of a China trade it has made itself the centre of the salmon industry on the Columbia, and its population of 14,000 persons find employment also in lumbering and other industries. Astoria has lived through a great deal, and there is no doubt that it will build stronger and better on the ruins of its fire.

AN IMPERSONAL BENEFACTOR.

(Los Angeles Times.)

Nations as a whole are generally supposed to act very much as the individuals composing that nation would act under similar circumstances. Neither nations nor mobs in reality act as any single person. The mob swings to one extreme, the nation to the other—the single persons of which both are made up would again do something quite different.

One can see this illustrated in the way Uncle Sam has acted since the war toward the nations of Europe—and is still acting—after the treatment he has received from all the contestants without exception.

America's post-war actions have been bitterly criticized everywhere in the European press. Her motives have been impugned. Her largesse has been first accepted and then laughed at. Her relief work has been belittled. Every effort to inject a touch of humanity into diplomatic readjustments has been scorned. Her aims have been misrepresented and her motives maligned. A simple request for plain business honesty in international relations has brought shrieking across the ocean a gusty storm of hysterical abuse.

A mob, under this provocation, regardless of consequences, would have been at the throat of its detractors. An individual would have washed his hands of them and their troubles and put up the "not-at-home" sign on his office door.

Uncle Sam has not acted as one mob to another mob nor as one man to another single man. But as one-half of a world that nothing but a divine convulsion can split into two disconnected hemispheres, Uncle Sam remains unwearied in well-doing, slacks nothing in his relief work, offers sympathy, assistance, and advice to all who ask for it, gives them the services of his best-trained accountants to straighten their muddled finances and treats with kindly indulgence their petty trickeries and temperamental vapors.

This is solely due to the advantage of being a well-knit nation. It avoids both the passion of the mob and the egotism of the individual.

GOVERNOR-GENERAL HEALY.

(New York Times.)

The appointment of Timothy Healy as governor-general of the Irish Free State is something like a stroke of political genius. Doubtless the choice was made by the British government in consultation with the Irish provisional government, but from whatever source the suggestion of Mr. Healy came, it was most sagacious. Looking strictly to the terms of the Anglo-Irish treaty, which promised Ireland treatment, in her relations with the crown, like that of the Dominion of Canada, it might have been expected that a duke or viscount or at least a lord would have been chosen to uphold the dignity of the first governor-general of Ireland. But the distinction is given to an Irishman and a commoner—though "Tim" Healy is a man very much out of the common. The reputation which he made as a member of the British Parliament has outlived his retirement from politics. He had an abundant share of Irish wit; had a sharp tongue; was independent to the point of never being able to agree long even with his fellow-Irishmen and his own party; and withal possessed industry, marked legal ability, and a great mastery of the public business. Gladstone is said to have remarked that no one understood his first Home Rule bill except himself and Mr. Healy.

As governor-general and direct representative of the king Mr. Healy will have a heavy responsibility. He may be called upon to give advice to the nascent Free State, and to make decisions which ought to have weight with his fellow-countrymen, coming from one of themselves. He will probably find it easy to resist the temptation to assume the pomp of power. If he is installed in Dublin Castle he may, indeed, need to maintain a guard against those bedeviled Irishmen who will probably think it their first duty to murder him if they can, but will put away all the regalia and flourishes of high office in dealing with the Irish authorities and the people who really want peace and an orderly government. It may be that his native good-fellowship, his jovial give-and-take in humorous exchanges, and his ability to coin the pungent and apposite phrase for a given political situation, will stand him in better stead than all the flummery and military force with which the Irish viceroys have been accustomed to surround themselves.

OLD FAVORITES.

Christmas in the Olden Time.

Heap on more wood!—the wind is chill;
But, let it whistle as it will,
We'll keep our Christmas merry still.
Each age has deemed the new-born year
The fittest time for festal cheer:
Even, heathen yet, the savage Dane
At Iol more deep the mead did drain;
High on the beach his galleys drew,
And feasted all his pirate crew;
Then in his low and pine-built hall,
Where shields and axes decked the wall,
They gorged upon the half-dressed steer;
Caroused in seas of sable beer;
While round, in brutal jest, were thrown
The half-gnawed rib and marrow-bone;
Or listened all, in grim delight,
While scalds yelled out the joy of fight.
Then forth in frenzy would they hie,
While wildly loose their red locks fly;
And, dancing round the blazing pile,
They make such barbarous mirth the while,
As best might to the mind recall
The boisterous joys of Odin's hall.

And well our Christian sires of old
Loved when the year its course had rolled
And brought blithe Christmas back again
With all its hospitable train.
Domestic and religious rite
Gave honor to the holy night:
On Christmas eve the bells were rung;
On Christmas eve the mass was sung;
That only night, in all the year,
Saw the stole priest the chalice rear.
The damsel donned her kirtle sheen;
The hall was dressed with holly green;
Forth to the wood did the merry-men go,
To gather in the mistletoe.
Then opened wide the baron's hall
To vassal, tenant, serf, and all;
Power laid his rod of rule aside,
And Ceremony doffed her pride.
The heir, with roses in his shoes,
That night might village partner choose;
The lord, underrating, share
The vulgar game of "nought and pair."
All hailed, with uncontrolled delight,
And general voice, the happy night
That to the cottage, as to the crown,
Brought tidings of salvation down.

The fire, with well-dried logs supplied,
Went roaring up the chimney wide;
The huge hall-table's oaken face,
Scrubbed till it shone, the day to grace,
Bore then upon its massive board
No mark to part the squire and lord.
Then was brought in the lusty brawn,
By old blue-coated serving-man;
Then the grim boar's-head frowned on high
Crested with bays and rosemary.
Well can the green-garbed ranger tell
How, when, and where the monster fell;
What dogs before his death he tore,
And all the baiting of the boar.
The wassail round, in good brown bowls,
Garnished with ribbons, brightly trowls.
There the huge sirloin reeked; hard by
Plum-porridge stood, and Christmas pie;
Nor failed old Scotland to produce,
At such high-tide, her savory goose.
Then came the merry maskers in,
And carols roared with blithesome din;
If unmelodious was the song,
It was a hearty note, and strong.
Who lists may in their mumming see
Traces of ancient mystery;
White skirts supplied the masquerade,
And smutted cheeks the visors made;
But, O, what maskers richly dight
Can boast of bosoms half so light!
England was merry England, when Old Christmas brought his sports again.
'T was Christmas broached the mightiest ale;
'T was Christmas told the merriest tale;
A Christmas gambol oft could cheer
The poor man's heart through all the year.

—Sir Walter Scott.

A Birthday.

My heart is like a singing bird
Whose nest is in a watered shoot;
My heart is like an apple-tree
Whose boughs are bent with thickset fruit;
My heart is like a rainbow shell
That paddles in a walyon sea;
My heart is gladder than all these
Because my love is come to me.

Raise me a dais of silk and down;
Hang it with vair and purple dyes;
Carve it in doves, and pomegranates,
And peacocks with a hundred eyes;
Work it in gold and silver grapes,
In leaves, and silver fleur-de-lys;
Because the birthday of my life
Is come, my love is come to me.

—Christina Georgina Rossetti.

Every great reform which has been effected has consisted, not in doing something new, but in undoing something old. The most valuable additions made to legislation have been enactments destructive of previous legislation; and the best laws which have been passed have been those by which some former laws have been repealed.—Henry Thomas Buckle.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

The Duke of Abercorn, who has been appointed governor of Northern Ireland by King George, has been lord-lieutenant of Tyrone since 1917 and is a major of the North Irish Horse. The new ruler of Ulster was one-time treasurer of his majesty's household. He is keenly interested in zoology.

Mrs. Wanda Helbig, the daughter of a Polish nobleman, is the first of her sex to receive a mate's license on an American ship. Mrs. Helbig's life is said to be suitable material for a Conrad novel. She claims to have discovered the monkey-tailed men of Palawan, she has been kidnapped by a Moro suitor, rescued by her husband from an Eastern harem, and has visited every country of the globe. In addition to her nautical accomplishments, she is a polyglot equally at home in seven languages.

Gabriel Narutowicz, late Polish minister of foreign affairs, and newly-elected and assassinated president of Poland, was a relative of General Pilsudski, retiring president. Narutowicz was a member of the various Polish cabinets since 1920, when he was appointed minister of public works under Premier Grabski—a position to which he was reappointed by Premier Poniowski. As foreign minister he was one of the signatories of the military covenant framed by the premiers of Poland and the Little Entente powers at the secret conference held at Marienbad in August. He was also Polish delegate to the Baltic disarmament conference. President Narutowicz was a radical, his assassination following the great opposition aroused by his appointment among the moderates of the Diet.

Timothy Michael Healy, the first governor-general of the Irish Free State, and famous advocate who has figured in every cause célèbre, political and criminal, heard in Ireland for the past twenty years, shares with Clemenceau the nickname "Tiger." Tim Healy, as he is known everywhere in his native land, says his first aim will be to establish friendly relations between England and Ireland and to promote a better spirit between the North and the South. Healy was born in 1855, called to the Irish bar in 1884 and the English bar in 1903, became king's counsel in 1910, and has been a member of Parliament since 1880. He is one of the wittiest fighters of a nation of wits and fighters. He is reported to have said once in the Commons, "Mr. Speaker, there are two united parties in this house; I'm one of them." Since he quit his Cork seat in 1918 in favor of a Sinn Féin, Healy has not taken an active part on the surface of Irish politics, but he has been an invisible power and the chief counselor of inexperienced members of the provisional government, among whom his nephew, Kevin O'Higgins, is prominent.

Georges Clemenceau is described by his biographer, M. Georges Lecomte, as believing in the strenuous life. Says M. Lecomte: "It is true that he gets up regularly at 3 o'clock every morning, and sometimes earlier. Not having need of a long sleep, he is not far from believing that sleep is a prejudice. In order to furnish him with the latest news of the evening the secretary has it sent by messenger to his home. It is slipped under the doormat, where Clemenceau knows he will find it. But often in his haste to know of events and get to work, thinking that he has slept too long, the impetuous old man comes to lift up the mat before the messenger has brought the dispatches. This famous old statesman comes every night to look under the doormat for the news of some event which he can interpret in the light of his knowledge of life and men for the instruction of his contemporaries. Then, when the precious envelope has appeared, for three or four hours he enjoys the delight of a hard battle, in solitude, until the illuminating idea springs forth and hits upon his stirring phrases. After that he indulges in a half-hour's gymnastic exercise, which keeps up the vigorous suppleness of his muscles and insures, through a perfect circulation, the calm lucidity of his mind."

The first woman to sit in a court of general jurisdiction, legal and equitable, civil and criminal, and the first woman in the world to preside in first degree murder cases is Judge Florence E. Allen, who has been elected to the Supreme Court of Ohio as an independent candidate, after serving as judge of the court of common pleas, Cleveland. Judge Allen, who is still a young woman—she was born in 1884—has had a varied and brilliant career. Entering college at thirteen, she studied music at home and abroad and for two years wrote criticism for the Musical Courier. Drifting into journalism via music, she was from 1906 to 1908 on the editorial staff of the Cleveland Plain Dealer. During that period she taught, and completed working for her master's degree from Western Reserve University. Following a year at the Chicago University Law School, she served as legal investigator for the New York League for the Protection of Immigrants. Later she entered the New York University Law School, from which she was graduated in 1913. In 1914 she returned to Ohio and was admitted to the bar. Born in Utah and brought up in the Middle West, where her ancestors were pioneers, Judge Allen is the athletic type of woman. She rises every morning at 5, does her own housework, and walks five and a half miles to court. The men and women who have just elected her were of both parties, and it is interesting that she took no active part in her own campaign.

REVELATIONS OF A CABINET MEMBER.

Franklin K. Lane Reveals in His Letters the Observations and Anxieties of a Patriot.

Of the books that have appeared this year from which future historians will draw materials for the story of our time "The Letters of Franklin K. Lane" is one of the most important. As a member of President Wilson's Cabinet preceding and during the war Lane had an opportunity to observe closely the passage of events in which he took a not inconsiderable part. He was a conscientious correspondent, and since his death in May, 1921, Mrs. Lane has collected some of his important letters and, with Louise Wall, has issued them in a volume of unusual significance.

Letters, of themselves, do not form a connected story, and it is possible that in arranging them the editor may unconsciously select those that go to prove some special point. On the other hand, letters do record the impressions of the time and have therefore a greater interest than some later work would have, in which the writer has the thoughts of his period overlaid and modified by considerations of later events.

Franklin K. Lane was born on Prince Edward Island, Canada, and was brought to California when seven years of age. He studied law, was admitted to the bar, worked on newspapers, tried owning one, married, and finally got into politics by being elected city attorney of San Francisco under a charter he had helped frame. He served in this position three terms and then ran for governor, being defeated by Dr. Pardee. In 1903 he was defeated for mayor of San Francisco by Schmitz, who is still with us, though not as mayor. The defeat of Lane by Schmitz has led some exasperated persons to question the validity of the old saw that says "the voice of the people is the voice of God."

As the people of San Francisco did not want Lane for mayor and the United States needed him, President Roosevelt made him Interstate Commerce Commissioner and President Taft reappointed him. He served on the commission and then President Wilson made him a member of the Cabinet as Secretary of the Interior. Like every one else who worked with Mr. Wilson, he gradually became estranged, and, after the war and when the President had recovered from his breakdown, Lane resigned, largely to make some money for his old age. His health had given way also, and the year after leaving the Cabinet was a struggle for life which ended in defeat.

Passing over the letters of his early life to the time when he was Secretary of the Interior, he writes regarding the policy of conservation that tied up all development in the West:

It is none of my business, but I have just seen an article coming out over your name respecting Pinchot, the wisdom of which I doubt. I have never found any good to come by blurring an issue by personal contest or antagonisms. I am deeply interested in water power development and something may result this session. If those who are in favor of water power development get to fighting each other, nothing will result.

For five long weary years I have been agitating for the use of the water powers of the United States. We estimate the unused power in tens and tens of millions of horsepower. Right in New York you have in the Erie Canal 150,000 horsepower, and on the Niagara River you probably have a million unused. If you had a great dam across the river below the rapids we should have water power in chains, like fire hoses in their stalls, that could be brought out at the time of need. But we are thinking in large figures these days, and while we used to be afraid to ask for a few hundred thousand dollars we now talk in millions, and some day we may realize that to put the cost of a week's war into power plants in the United States would be money well invested.

We have no law under which private capital feels justified in investing a dollar in a water power plant where public lands are involved, because the permit granted is revocable at the pleasure of the Secretary of the Interior, and capital does not enjoy the prospect of making its future returns dependent upon the good digestion of the Secretary. But if we get this bill, which I enclose, through, we will be able to handle the power on all streams on the public lands and forests and on all navigable waters, and give assurance to capital that it will be well taken care of if it makes the investment.

It is an outrage that we should have a total of nearly six million acres of land withdrawn for oil, three million for phosphates, and one million for water power sites, potash, etc., and allow session after session of Congress without producing any legislation that will sensibly open these reserves to development. The extreme conservationists, who are really for holding the lands indefinitely in the Federal government and unopened, and the extreme anti-conservationists, who are for turning all the public lands over to the states, have stood for years against any rational system of national development.

Largely through Lane's efforts, some modification of the extreme restrictions on the use of water powers was made, but the hand of the national government is still heavy against any scheme of development of the resources of the West, except by some form of state socialism sponsored and directed from Washington.

The chief interest in Lane's letters is found, however, in his record of the doings of the Cabinet prior to and during the war. Like many others, Lane was favorable to the President at the beginning of his term and only changed as time went by:

What you say regarding the President-to-be is extremely interesting. That he is headstrong, arbitrary, and positive, his friends admit. These are real virtues in this day of slackness and sloppiness. I have just returned from New York, where I talked with McAdoo and House, who are extremely close to him, and advising him regarding his Cabinet, and they tell me he is a most satisfactory man to deal with. He listens quite patiently and makes up his mind, and then "stays put." His Cabinet will be his advisers, but no one will control him.

How much advice the Cabinet was able to give the President is shown in the following extracts regarding the work of that body after the war started. Lane's opinion of the other departments is also apparent, together with his impatience with Wilson's vacillations and notes to Germany:

I am going to write you in confidence some of the talks we have at the Cabinet and you may keep these letters in case I ever wish to remind myself of what transpired. A week ago yesterday (February 1st) the word came that Germany was to turn "mad dog" again, and sink all ships going within her war zone. This was the question, of course, taken up at the meeting of the Cabinet on February 2d. The President opened by saying that this notice was an "astounding surprise." He had received no intimation of such a reversal of policy. Indeed, Zimmermann, the German minister of foreign affairs, had within ten days told Girard that such a thing was an "impossibility." At this point Lansing said that he had good reason to believe that Bernstorff had the note for fully ten days before delivering it, and had held it off because of the President's Peace Message to Congress, which had made it seem inadvisable to deliver it then. In answer to a question as to which side he wished to see win, the President said that he didn't wish to see either win—for both had been equally indifferent to the rights of neutrals—though Germany had been brutal in taking life, and England only in taking property. . . .

The St. Louis, of the American Line, wanted to go out with mail, but asked the right to arm and the use of guns and gunners. After a long discussion, the decision of the President was that we should not convoy because that made a double hazard—this being the report of the navy—but that ships should be told that they might arm, but that without new power from Congress they should not be furnished with guns and gunners.

The President said that he was "passionately" determined not to overstep the slightest punctilio of honor in dealing with Germany, or interned Germans, or the property of Germans.

At our dinner to the President last night he said he was not in sympathy with any great preparedness—that Europe would be man and money poor by the end of the war. I think he is dead wrong in this, and as I am a member of the National Council of Defense, I am pushing for everything possible. . . .

The army and navy are so set and stereotyped and standpat that I am almost hopeless as to moving them to do the wise, large, wholesale job. They are governed by red tape—worse than any union.

The chief of staff fell asleep at our meeting today—Mars and Morpheus in one!

Today's meeting has resulted in nothing, though in Mexico, Cuba, Costa Rica and Europe we have trouble. The country is growing tired of delay, and without positive leadership is losing its keenness of conscience and becoming inured to insult. Our ambassador in Berlin is held as a hostage for days—our consuls' wives are stripped naked at the border, our ships are sunk, our people killed—and yet we wait and wait! What for I do not know. Germany is winning by her bluff, for she has our ships interned in our own harbors.

Another Cabinet meeting and no light yet on what our policy will be as to Germany. We evidently are waiting for the "overt act," which I think Germany will not commit. We are all, with the exception of one or two pro-Germans, feeling humiliated by the situation, but nothing can be done. . . .

On Friday we had one of the most animated sessions of the Cabinet that I suppose has ever been held under this or any other President. It all arose out of a very innocent question of mine as to whether it was true that the wives of American consuls on leaving Germany had been stripped naked, given an acid bath to detect writing on their flesh, and subjected to other indignities. Lansing answered that it was true. Then I asked Houston about the bread riots in New York, as to whether there was shortage of food because of car shortage due to vessels not going out with exports. This led to a discussion of the great problem which we all had been afraid to raise—Why shouldn't we send our ships with guns or convoys? Daniels said we must not convoy—that would be dangerous. (Think of a Secretary of the Navy talking of danger!) The President said that the country was not willing that we should take any risks of war. I said that I got no such sentiment out of the country, but if the country knew that our consuls' wives had been treated so outrageously that there would be no question as to the sentiment. This the President took as a suggestion that we should work up a propaganda of hatred against Germany. Of course, I said I had no such idea, but that I felt that in a democracy the people were entitled to know the facts. McAdoo, Houston, and Redfield joined me. The President turned on them bitterly, especially on McAdoo, and reproached all of us with appealing to the spirit of the "Code Duello." We couldn't get the idea out of his head that we were bent on pushing the country into war. Houston talked of resigning after the meeting. McAdoo will—within a year, I believe. I tried to smooth them down by recalling our past experiences with the President. We have had to push, and push, and push to get him to take any forward step—the trade commission, the tariff commission. He comes out right, but he is slower than a glacier—and things are mighty disagreeable, whenever anything has to be done.

I don't know whether the President is an internationalist or a pacifist, he seems to be very mildly national—his patriotism is covered over with a film of philosophic humanitarianism that certainly doesn't make for "punch" at such a time as this. . . .

I took your letter and your proposed wire as to our going into war and sent them to the President as suggestions for his proposed message, which in a couple of days will come out—what it is to be I don't know—excepting in spirit. He is to be for recognizing war and taking hold of the situation in such a fashion as will eventually lead to an Allies' victory over Germany. But he goes unwillingly. The Cabinet is at last a unit. We can stand Germany's insolence and murderous policy no longer. Burleson, Gregory, Daniels and Wilson were the last to come over.

The meetings of the Cabinet lately have been nothing less than councils of war. The die is cast—and yet no one has seen the message. The President hasn't shown us a line. . . . Politics, politics, curse of the country! It has gotten into the whole war programme. Hoover and McAdoo are at swords drawn. Hoover had a cable signed by the three premiers, George, Clemenceau, and Orlando, crying for wheat and charging us with not keeping our word—and starvation threatening all three countries—in fact, almost sure, because we have not been able to get the wheat to the ships; and with starvation will come revolution, if it gets bad enough. . . . I asked Hoover about this on Sunday night, . . . and he said that a list of eight hundred cars had been on McAdoo's desk for a week. . . .

Yesterday, at Cabinet meeting, we had the first real talk on the war in weeks, yes in months! Burleson brought up the matter of Russia. . . . would we support Japan in taking Siberia, or even Vladivostok? Should we join Japan actively—in force?

The President said "No," for the very practical reason that we had no ships. We had difficulty in providing for our men in France and for our Allies (the President never uses this word, saying that we are not "allies"). . . .

Nothing talked of at Cabinet that would interest a nation—a family, or a child. No talk of the war. No talk of Russia or Japan. Talk by McAdoo about some bills in Congress, by the President about giving the veterans of the Spanish war leave, with pay, to attend their annual encampment. And he treated this seriously as if it were a matter of first importance! No word from Baker nor mention of his mission or his doings. . . .

Yesterday we had a Cabinet meeting. All were present. The President was manifestly disturbed. For some weeks we have spent our time at Cabinet meetings largely in telling stories. Even at the meeting of a week ago, the day on which the President sent his reply to Germany—his second note of the peace series—we were given no view of the note, which was already in Lansing's hands and was emitted at 4 o'clock; and had no talk upon it, other than some outline given off-hand by the President to one of the Cabinet who referred to it before the meeting; and for three-quarters of an hour told stories on the war, and took up small departmental affairs.

Then others took a hand. Wilson said the Allies should be consulted. Houston thought there was no real reform inside Germany. McAdoo made a long talk favoring an armistice on terms fixed by the military authorities. Strangely enough, Burleson, who had voted against all our stiff action over the Lusitania and has pleaded for the Germans steadily, was most belligerent in his talk. He was ferocious—so much so that I thought he was trying to make the President react against any stiff note—for he knows the President well, and knows that any kind of strong blood-thirsty talk drives him into the cellar of pacifism. . . .

The inability of the President to get on with people or to listen to any advice constitutes one of the tragedies of our war period. It explains the confusion in Washington and the facts brought out in General Pershing's report that in nearly two years of war, and with unlimited means, practically no airplanes, guns, rifles, ammunition or other army material reached the army in France, the lack being supplied by the Allies. When Lane finally decided to quit he wrote to his brother:

Do not be surprised if you hear that I am out of the Cabinet soon, for I have been offered two fifty-thousand-a-year places, and another even more. I don't want to leave if it will embarrass the President, but I do not want something with a little money in it for awhile. . . .

I have served him (the President) long and faithfully under very adverse circumstances. It is hard for him to get on with any one who has any will or independent judgment. Yet I am not given to forsaking those to whom I have any duty. However, we shall see. I write you this, that you may not be misled by the thought that there has been or is any friction. Of course you won't speak of it to any one.

The impression must not be gained from the above extracts that the letters relate only to government and war activities. There are many that deal with other questions, such as present themselves to men as they go through life. On the subject of Americanism, Lane had some very definite opinions, and his regard for his country was more than a sentiment. Many will recall his stirring speeches before, during, and after the war. Here is a letter that summarizes his thoughts:

But to be infallibly right is to be hopelessly smart. Thus it is with all who take a paper system and apply it to that strange thing called Life.

This is the defect of the Intellectuals, the "parlor" Bolsheviks. (Better by far be an outdoor Bolshevik, a Red Guard, if you please, one who is in and of the fighting, who acts, who lives on theory!) They do not think in terms of human nature, of natural progress, of real facts. They say, "all men are born free and equal," and at once conclude that the stable boy can step from the stable door to the management of a factory or into the legislature. Now experience teaches that this is a most dangerous experiment, both for stable boy and society. The true philosophy of democracy teaches that the stable boy shall have, through school and the step-ladder of free institutions, the chance to rise to the management of industry or the leadership of the Senate. That is why the foundation of democracy is political. For out of political freedom will come social and economic freedom.

In many of his letters Lane dwells on his religion, the subject evidently being one that entered his thoughts many times. A broad humanitarianism runs through all:

My conviction is that we can find no solution for the problems of social, political, economic, or spiritual unrest. "The man's man" philosophy has taken hold of the world. We have lost all traditional moorings. We have no religion. We have no philosophy. Our age is greater than any other that the world has seen. We have been lifted clear off our feet and taken up into a high place where we have been shown the universe. The result has been a tremendous and exaggerated growth of the ego, and we have regarded ourselves as masters of everything, and subject to nothing. Agnosticism led to sensualism, and sensualism had its foundation in hopelessness. We are materialists because we have no faith. This thing, however, is being changed. We are coming to recognize spiritual forces, and I put my hope for the future, not in a reduction in the high cost of living, nor in any scheme of government, but in a recognition by the people that after all there is a God in the world. Mind you, I have no religion, I attend no church, and I deal all day long with hard questions of economics, so that I am nothing of a preacher; but I know that there never will come anything like peace or serenity by a mere redistribution of wealth, although that redistribution is necessary and must come.

The letters reveal an earnest, hard-working American who desired to serve his country and did so during one of its most troubled periods. The impression left after reading them is that of a very kindly nature, sympathetic, friendly, and at the same time earnest and capable. Californians of the present generation will read the book with interest because many of the letters are written to men of affairs of the present: Phelan, Dr. Wheeler, Adolph Miller, James Moffitt and Charles K. Field; and to Roosevelt, Walter Page, and Colonel House, as well as to Lane's immediate family. Where praise is due he awards it without stint, as in the constant references to Herbert Hoover and his work. It was a pity that in his devotion to duty he ruined his health and died at the relatively early age of fifty-seven when at the height of his powers.

THE LETTERS OF FRANKLIN K. LANE. Boston and New York: Houghton Mifflin Company; $5.

BANKING AND INVESTMENT NEWS.

San Francisco bank clearings for the week ending December 16, 1922, were $163,400,000; for the corresponding week of last year, $151,000,000; an increase of $12,400,000.

The strangulation of the productive powers of the country by the starvation of its transportation facilities is a matter hardly less serious than the hampering effects of the friction between employers and employed. Given entire freedom from strikes, the railroads would be unable to handle the traffic, owing to inherent deficiencies in equipment, trackage, and terminal facilities. It is, in fact, only during periods of industrial strikes and commercial depression that the car shortage condition is not noticeably acute, says Strassburger & Co.'s Review.

FOR CHRISTMAS
A GOOD BOND
In $100 and $500 Denominations
Get your children started right on savings and investments.
Send for Special Offering

FREEMAN
SMITH
&
CAMP
CO.

SECOND FLOOR
FIRST NATIONAL BANK BLDG.
Douglas 2121

While there have been other factors, the fundamental explanation of the situation is to be found, as the Secretary of Commerce points out in the advance summary of his forthcoming annual report, in "the cumulation of experiments in public relations to the railroads, both national and state." Regulation is to some extent necessary, but its application must cease to be a matter of guesswork, and finished by earnings in excess of the 6 per cent.) administered by the Interstate Commerce Commission to provide loans to carriers or for the purchase of transportation equipment and other facilities, has not materialized, for the simple reason that there have been no resources to create it. If there had been, they would have been provided by the excess earnings of the stronger or better situated railways, and these alone—needing the assistance less—would have obtained the benefits of the fund. The stronger railways can get, however, financing from public investors. Consolidation, if voluntary, might ease the situation, but it is useless to talk of future possibilities when faced with a need for immediate action.

The urgent needs are drastic adjustment in rates, such as to enable the railways to earn enough to provide for expansion; and contact between the public bodies that deal with rates and wages. We have now what amounts to governmental fixing of wages and conditions of labor, with no regard to the rates that are imposed on the companies.

There is needed, too, more courage in the fixing of rates and less yielding to popular clamor.

During the last thirty days commercial and industrial activity has reflected the usual stimulation of fall and winter demand. Retail trade in the larger cities is more active than at the corresponding period of last year, and seasonal acceleration is evident throughout the country, says Commerce Monthly. Uncertainty as to the volume of purchases by the farmers has not been dispelled, however. Wholesale trade has been good throughout the current period. Stocks of many kinds of goods in the hands both of wholesale and retail dealers are light, but neither this fact nor threats of higher prices have been sufficient to induce buyers to make substantial forward purchases. The conservatism shown justifies the belief that the catastrophe of 1920 has not been forgotten.

Total car loadings, and combined loadings of miscellaneous freight and of less than carload lots are practically at record levels. Despite car shortage, especially for coal and for the movement of farm products, the railroads are handling freight remarkably well. Coal has been rapidly moved to the lake ports for shipment to the Northwest before the close of navigation. Receipts of wheat at primary markets to date, while somewhat less than for the corresponding period of 1921, are well above receipts for 1920. The live stock movement is satisfactory. Cotton is moving more rapidly than in 1921. Some industrial consumers are beginning to accumulate coal reserves, and the disappearance of premiums for immediate delivery is evidence of improved transportation for steel.

The manufacturing industries as a whole are operating at not far below normal. Steel output is at 75 per cent. of capacity. There has been a notable expansion of pig-iron production, which for October exceeded any month since December, 1920. Railroad orders continue heavy. Demand from the automobile and building industries is good, due account being taken of seasonal declines. Buying by agricultural implement makers is still light. The indications seem to be that demand for steel may slacken somewhat during the remainder of the year, but that recovery will be made early in 1923. Demand for machine tools is fair.

The woolen and worsted industry is at between 80 and 85 per cent. of capacity. Boot and shoe manufactures range from 80 per cent. in New England to capacity at St. Louis. Cotton consumption in October was 533,950 bales, compared with 494,745 and 401,325 bales in October, 1921 and 1920, respectively. October output of automobiles made a new high record for that month. Building is exceptionally active for the season, this condition being reflected in the various industries producing building materials.

Mr. Summerfield McCartney, formerly first lieutenant in the economic section of the military intelligence service during the world war, and who served two years overseas, has recently been appointed advertising and publicity manager for William Cavalier & Co., investment bankers, with offices in the Insurance Exchange Building.

The recent reaction of the stock market in many cases has wiped out within two or three weeks the accumulated profits of a year and a half. The bull market is not at an end, but breaks from time to time must be expected and those who can not afford to assume a heavy risk have been sharply reminded of the fact. It is possible to combine speculation with investment, however, and it is for those who desire neither prime investment securities nor highly speculative issues that the accompanying list is offered.

The preferred stocks suggested here form what might be termed a business man's list. Dividends are relatively safe in each instance, and at present prices the yields are high. On the other hand, as business improves the investment position of these stocks will strengthen, and as the market rights itself this should be reflected by higher prices. The dividend requirements are being well covered or indications are that they will be well covered; but it is suggested that instead of concentrating on one or two of the stocks mentioned, the investor apportion his commitment over the entire list in order to distribute the risks. In this way if one stock does not come up to expectations, it may be offset by unusual improvement in another.

The Allis-Chalmers Company manufactures a diversified group of machinery, among which is that used upon farms, in building construction, roadway construction, and electrical equipment. The outlook for these branches is particularly good at this time. It is reasonable to expect that the company will operate at a high rate over the next year or two at least. In the first nine months of 1922 sales amounted to $14,930,000, while unfilled orders at the close were $8,289,000. During this period net profits were $6.22 a share on the preferred stock, and if the same profit is realized in the last three months as averaged in the earlier part of the year the preferred should earn at least $9 a share for the calendar year. As a matter of fact, earnings have increased consistently during each of the three quarters, and actual earnings for the entire year may exceed this estimate. The company began 1922 with the largest amount of net working capital ever reported—approximately $24,000,000. Inventories were down to the level of 1917.

Within the last seven years the American Ice Company has doubled the value of its sales, and, by increasing the efficiency of production, operating profits during this period have tripled. Indicated earnings on the preferred stock have increased about four and one-half times. The year 1921 proved to be the best, the preferred earning 15.70 per cent. No statement of earnings has appeared for 1922, but it is understood that the volume of sales for the year to date compares favorably with last year, while production expenses have been further reduced. It is expected that the preferred dividend requirement will be earned at least twice over this year and possibly at a higher rate. The common is paying 7 per cent., the dividend on this issue being a junior claim to that of the preferred stock.

Associated Dry Goods for 1921 earned 20.52 per cent. on the first preferred; for 1920, 13.87 per cent.; for 1919, 23.86 per cent.; for 1918, 11.60 per cent., and for 1917, 11.08 per cent. The full 6 per cent. on the first preferred has been paid since December, 1917. The retail merchandising business has recovered remarkably and it is believed that earnings for 1922 will equal, if not exceed, the showing made last year. In June, Lord & Taylor paid 12 per cent. on account of accumulated dividends on its first preferred, of which Associated Dry Goods owns $2,061,900 out of a total of $2,500,000. There remains an accumulation from December 1, 1918, and it is believed that Lord & Taylor will soon pay off a substantial amount of the arrears. Lord & Taylor's earnings are reported to be considerably larger than a year ago.

Baltimore & Ohio, which made an exceptionally favorable showing during the earlier months of the year, suffered a setback in September. This was due to a special cause, however, and is temporary. About two-thirds

The Oldest Bond House in California

Member of San Francisco
Stock and Bond Exchange

E. H. ROLLINS & SONS

300 Montgomery Street, San Francisco

Telephone Kearny 3807

of this road's traffic is composed of coal and early in September the movement was considerably below normal. There has been a steady gain in coal shipments subsequently, the total for all railroads now being about 33 per cent. larger than in the first week of September. Inasmuch as such a high percentage of the B. & O. traffic is represented by coal, October earnings should show a substantial improvement. The preferred has paid its full 4 per cent. dividends regularly

$980—plus accrued interest, will yield $60.00 yearly in

TOOLE COUNTY IRRIGATION DISTRICT 6% GOLD BONDS

Exempt from all Federal Income Taxes

Phone Sutter 334

G. E. MILLER & COMPANY

105 Montgomery St. 229 First Nat. Bank Bldg.
SAN FRANCISCO OAKLAND

PORTLAND
SEATTLE

SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES

since the company was reorganized in 1899. There is no reason to question the stability of the preferred dividends at this time, and, in fact, the common may not be far from a resumption of dividends. The company closed 1921 with the largest amount of net working capital ever reported.

As a result of the acquisition of the Lackawanna Steel Company, Bethlehem Steel has been recapitalized, new 7 per cent. preferred

McDONNELL & Co.

And Other Leading Exchanges

633 Market St., at New Montgomery

SAN FRANCISCO

TELEPHONE SUTTER 7676

N. Y. Office, 120 Broadway

L. A. Angeles, 634 So. Spring St.

PRIVATE WIRES

CARSTENS & EARLES, INCORPORATED

GOVERNMENT, MUNICIPAL
AND CORPORATION BONDS

ESTABLISHED 1891

Ground Floor

California Commercial Union Building

San Francisco

Telephone Douglas 6050

SEATTLE

LOS ANGELES

SPOKANE

SAN FRANCISCO

Private Wires
Coast to Coast

E. F. Hutton & Co.

MEMBERS
NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

HUTTON BUILDING

Montgomery and Bush Sts.

HOTEL ST. FRANCIS

DEL MONTE HOTEL

being given for the present 8 per cent. and 7 per cent preferred stocks. When the re-financing is completed there will be approximately $77,000,000 of new 7 per cent. preferred outstanding, upon which dividend requirements will be $5,390,000 annually. The respective funded debts of the two companies will not be altered and fixed charges will remain unchanged. The combined companies will have to meet fixed charges and preferred dividends of approximately $16,000,000 annually. In 1921, which was an unsatisfactory year, there were available approximately $17,500,000, or slightly more than the requirement. Under normal conditions the dividend requirements on the new 7 per cent. preferred should be earned by a comfortable margin, probably in the neighborhood of twice over.

$1,750,000
American Bolt Corporation
First (Closed) Mortgage 15-Year
7% Gold Bonds
 (Free of normal Federal Income Tax up to 2%)
Convertible into 7% Cumulative Participating Preferred Stock.
Price 100
 Full Particulars From
STRASSBURGER & COMPANY
 133 Montgomery Street - San Francisco
 Telephone Douglas 2220

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, which showed earnings equivalent to about $3 a share on the common up to July, was hard hit by the shopmen's strike and has been handicapped by its inability to have cars returned from the Eastern lines. The company also has been setting aside liberal allowances for deferred maintenance. Income for the first nine months does not show the dividend requirements on the two classes of preferred stock quite covered, but about 30 per cent. of the operating income accrues in the last three months of the year, and, judging from October and November car loadings, decided improvement is to be expected. Income available for preferred dividends for the entire year will likely be well covered.

General Motors, for the first six months of 1922, earned $28.86 a share on the 6 per cent. debenture stock. A preliminary estimate for the entire year places the dividend being earned about eight times over. The company has made remarkable progress this year, liquidating about $45,000,000 of liabilities, and it is stated that it now owes nothing to its banks. As compared with September 30, 1920, liabilities have been reduced to $110,000,000. Production is running at about 45,000 cars per month.

Mack Truck is one of the leaders in its field, and the investment position of its first preferred stock does not appear to be appreciated. In the first nine months of 1922 earnings available for dividends on the first preferred amounted to $25.41 a share. The requirement for the entire year was thus earned three and one-half times over within nine months. On September 30th the company owed only $2,157,000 and had current assets of $22,063,000, of which $3,519,000 was cash.

The Philadelphia Company 6 per cent. preferred (par value $50) has not only paid the full dividend regularly since it was created in 1913, but the company has proved such a consistent earner that dividends have been paid on the common since 1886, with the exception of 1897. The preferred dividend has been earned four to twelve times over each year during the last nine years, with the exception of 1921, an extremely poor year, when it was earned two and one-half times over. Net earnings for the first nine months of 1922 were approximately 50 per cent. in excess of those during the corresponding period of 1921. The coal scarcity and the revival in the iron and steel industry have both proved to be boons to the Philadelphia Company.

Announcement by Secretary Mellon of the Treasury Department's December refunding operations as the feature of an otherwise uneventful week in the investment market, says Commerce and Finance. In its general outlines Mr. Mellon's plan follows rather closely the forecasts of bankers whose analysis of investment market conditions had indicated a reversion from long term to short term financing. That had been expected because obviously the government could not have sold another 4 1/4 per cent. long-term bond at par under existing circumstances.

Three distinct series are offered: first, three months' treasury bills; second, one-year notes, and third, two-and-one-half-year notes. The three months' bills will bear 3 1/2 per cent. The one-year notes will carry a 4 per cent. coupon, and the notes of more distant maturities will yield 4 1/4 per cent. a year. The first two classes will together amount to $400,000,000, while the longer-term notes will total $300,000,000 with the right reserved to allot additional two-and-a-half-year notes to the extent that outstanding Victory 4 1/4 per cent. notes are offered in exchange.

The same success is indicated for these latest treasury offerings as has characterized all of Secretary Mellon's previous refunding operations. As usual, he has gauged investment market conditions correctly and has arranged an offering which appeals because of the variety of maturities, the rates presented, and the amounts offered. The yields fixed on the several issues just about coincide with the going rates in the open market for money, although they were somewhat lower than expected in some banking quarters. Bankers had guessed at a 3 1/4 per cent. rate for the three months' bills and at a 4 1/4 per cent. return on the one-year notes. On the other hand it is admitted that a 3 1/2 per cent. rate for three months' bills, which will mature on the date when the first installment of 1922 taxes falls due, appeals strongly to corporations and individuals whose only alternative to investment in the new issue would be to let their money on deposit in banks at a lower rate of interest than the government will pay them. Preliminary inquiries for all three series of the new offering have been very good in the New York Federal Reserve District. An oversubscription of all of them would occasion no surprise.

In arranging the terms of his latest refunding operations as he has Mr. Mellon has acted consistently with his avowed policy of doing nothing to disturb the market for outstanding government bonds. As the longest maturity offered is only two and a half years, the new securities will not compete with any of the Liberty issues or the United States Treasury refunding bonds brought out in October. Mr. Mellon's hope is to restore those issues to par and he is bending every effort to that end. In so doing he has the government's interest at heart as well as that of the largest investing public. It will not be possible for the government to do any additional long-term financing until outstanding bonds reach a level above par. The higher above that price they go the better the government's chances of floating another bond of distant maturity.

The satisfaction of investors with the government's programme was evinced by a general stiffening of prices in the open bond market. Liberty and other government issues had discounted it to a certain extent by the advances registered during the previous week. However, a number of them were stronger, particularly the Fourth 4 1/4s. United States refunding bonds, which had enjoyed the maximum recovery the week before, did not make much further headway, but held very firmly around their best prices. Corporation bonds also were generally firm, particularly railroad descriptions yielding from 5 per cent. to 5 1/2 per cent. Several of the speculative railroad issues also showed improvement, but weak spots developed in that group because of the uncertainty which prevails regarding the future solvency of certain roads.

Foreign bonds were very steady. The feature of that group was the sharp advance of United Kingdom 5 1/2s of 1929. They registered a new high price for the year at 112. The strength of that issue is due specifically to the remarkable rise in sterling exchange last week to the highest level at which it has been quoted in nearly three years. The premium at which those bonds are selling is based chiefly on their convertible feature. They may be exchanged for British National War 5 per cent. bonds at par and interest, sterling being computed at the fixed rate of $4.30 to the pound, or 26 cents better than the current market. The National War bonds are redeemable at maturity at 105.

New offerings last week continued small, totaling only $35,317,000. Year-end inquiry for bonds has begun already and is absorbing all new financing, but most new offerings are being held back for January. Financing in November was unusually heavy for that month with a total of $236,789,450 against $184,427,500 in October. However, municipal financing fell off to a marked extent. State and municipal offerings according to the Bond Buyer aggregated only $50,000,000 last month, compared with $73,000,000 in October and $118,000,000 in September.

Both the seasonal and the main trend of business continues upward, due, to some extent, to the approach of the holiday season. Cold weather has also had its effect and retail trade is better. Moreover, employment is now universal throughout this country with labor in sharp demand, wages high, and as a result buying power is greater than it was a year ago, say McDonnell & Co. in their monthly letter.

Notwithstanding the present operations of business, it would not be reasonable for the conservative merchant or manufacturer to consider that the volume of trade is going to remain undiminished from the present high levels. The practical and important question at this time is how far the winter reaction in trade will go. The reaction itself is practically certain to occur, because it is based upon the passing of the crop movement and the coming of winter.

One of the chief features influencing the present situation is that the buying power of this country has been steadily rising because of the high wages and general employment. The South is getting good prices for cotton and tobacco. Trade throughout that section feels the stimulus. Also the recent advance in grain prices has had a beneficial effect to some extent on Western trade.

There are five major groups of manufacture which are operating well above normal. High production has been made for the past two months in the textile, lumber, paper, food, and house-furnishing groups. These have all shown an activity well above normal.

The textile trades are in a favorable position. Orders continue to be placed in satisfactory volume. Conservative buying to meet requirements is the rule, and with such conditions as are now prevailing textile manufacture can remain at a high percentage of capacity.

Lumber production is holding up in a surprising way. During the entire 1922 year lumber production has never dropped below normal. Active building operations and heavy railroad business caused large demands for lumber, and will probably hold back the expected seasonal decline for at least another month.

Paper manufacture has shown a decline from its high record set in September. However, mills are running at capacity and there is every indication that the present satisfactory conditions in the trade will prevail for some time to come.

The volume of food manufacture has been well above normal since January of this year, and reached its high in August, but since that time has shown a sharp decline indicating the possibility of a severe seasonal reaction.

The house-furnishing group has shown the greatest come-back of any. In the early part of 1921, carpet and rug loom activity had declined to 53 1/2 per cent. of normal. From that time steady increase in activity took place until in October of this year, operations were at the greatest rate reported in the industry in the past four years.

The present dull condition of the bond market is not likely to last long, since the January reinvestment demand will make itself felt soon and should result in a brisk market.

Reaction in prices has been in progress for over two months. The highest point reached by the average of forty bonds was a little above 92 made in the middle of September. At the present time the averages have reached approximately 88 1/2 or a net loss of three and a half points. This level is about half way between the high in September and the level of one year ago. Action of the bond market in the past three weeks indicates a bottom for the first time during the recent decline.

While the decline of three and a half points, on the average, is of importance to bond traders, for the investor it is immaterial since the long trend is upward. Present levels, however, enable the investor to get in to new issues at favorable prices.

Tests made by the bureau of mines at the

Safeguarding Investments

Securities, no matter how stable, are always subject to changing value. Therefore, ready access to accurate and timely market information is a very necessary factor in investment procedure.

The watchful interest and co-operation of our personnel, our complete chronological statistical files and fast private wires to all important Eastern and Canadian centers make Sutro investment service second to none.

SUTRO & CO.

ESTABLISHED 1858
 410 MONTGOMERY STREET
 SUITE 3434
 Members of the San Francisco Stock and Bond Exchange

University of California indicate that Portland cement-gunite will stand up in a hot fire. The guniting of timbers will prevent the starting of a mine fire in or the spread of flames through the gunited section. The magnesium-oxychloride-cement-gunite slabs did not stand up under the fire test; the gunite crumbled to powder and scaled off, permitting the slabs to ignite. It is reasonable to conclude that head-

INVESTMENT SECURITIES

Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds for the investment of Banks, Trust Companies and Individuals

Inquiries invited

HUNTER, DOLIN & CO.

256 MONTGOMERY ST.
 Telephone Douglas 188
 SAN FRANCISCO

Los Angeles Pasadena Oakland Office 500 Syndicate Bldg. Santa Barbara San Diego

frames, shaft collars, shaft timbers, shaft stations, in fact all timbering permanent underground workings—including mule barns, ventilation doors, power stations, hoist stations, timbered haulage-ways and fan stations—can be effectively fireproofed by gunite coatings. On the surface, transformer houses, assay offices, powder magazines and other buildings can be fireproofed by gunite coatings.

INVESTMENT SECURITIES

COMMERCIAL PAPER AND ACCEPTANCES — GOVERNMENT MUNICIPAL AND CORPORATION BONDS

BOND & GOODWIN & TUCKER
 AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK BUILDING
 200 SAN FRANCISCO
 LOS ANGELES SEATTLE PORTLAND

Let Us Help You Invest

INDIVIDUAL circumstances affect the policy that any investor should follow. For some, long term securities are advisable; for others, short term; for some, the interest rate is more important than ready marketability; but, for all, security should be the main consideration.

Let us advise you as to a wise diversified selection of bonds.

Our experience of 35 years as a bond house in California is at your service.

WM. R. STAATS CO.

Established 1887
 Alexander Building
 Montgomery Street, corner of Bush
 San Francisco
 Los Angeles San Diego Pasadena

BOOKS ON THE TABLE.

The Man Who Knew Too Much.

That Chesterton should make a first-class writer of detective stories is obvious to any one conversant with his ubiquitous paradoxes, for a good detective story is only an expanded paradox with an appended rider supplying the solution in an explanatory paragraph. And like Mr. Chesterton's more familiar form of twisted truth set forth in numerous essays, all of the paradoxical adventures of Horne Fisher are dazzlingly simple when expounded in that concluding and conclusive paragraph. Not but what the yarns that go to make up "The Man Who Knew Too Much" are the best mystery concoctions we have ever tasted. They are full of meat and highly flavored with intrigue. And Mr. Chesterton is an honest craftsman who painstakingly proves his problem backwards even though he does sometimes have recourse to the reductio ad absurdum. But the most interesting thing in these stories, as in all of the author's other work, is his method—which is always transparent to the skeptic gaze. Chesterton has a formula for fiction as well as for essays, though it is more implicit in the former. And he should be given more credit for the elaborate fancy that his much-involved crime stories call for, and which he supplies with an overflowing measure. Take, for instance, the case of "The Bottomless Well," which every one will remember as the story of the teacups. When one comes to the simple explanation of the revolving bookcase whose top, used as a temporary stand for the two teacups, supplied the would-be murderer with his own dose of poison, one can see as in a glass darkly Mr. Chesterton in some club or private library watching a friend take the wrong cup in the fashion described, and then one can hear dimly in the spirit G. K. C.'s fertile brain concocting the story of the poisoned cup. The story of "The Bottomless Well," which is incidentally one of the "grippingest" in the Horne Fisher suite, is also one of the most obvious. Some of the others are not so transparent in the making. Horne Fisher is incidentally a new type of detective. Born in a lower strata than the high one in which he finds himself hopelessly imbedded, he would have made his fortune as an ace of the Scotland Yard force. As it is, the criminals he tracks are all his friends or his friends' friends. And aside from the gentlemanly code of noblesse oblige there are always good political reasons why Horne Fisher should not divulge his secrets. He is an amateur detective de luxe.

Bound with "The Man Who Knew Too Much" is another Chesterton mystery yarn which has not the glamour of the Horne Fisher collection. Max Beerbohm has said something to the effect that there is no interest, neither in politics nor art, that quite equals the fascination of the police court; and it is that dismal blessing that hovers over "The Man Who Knew Too Much." The second story, "The Trees of Pride," is more in Mr. Chesterton's allegorical essay style. But lest any lover of the detective genre pass up "The Man Who Knew Too Much," we add that it comprises quite the most intriguing assortment of crimes and methods of crime detection that we have ever encountered.

THE MAN WHO KNEW TOO MUCH. By Gilbert K. Chesterton. New York: Harper & Brothers; $2.

Horace and His Influence.

That the second of the series, "Our Debt to Greece and Rome, namely, 'Horace and His Influence,'" has been committed to Professor Grant Showerman is assurance enough that the book will be well written. Professor Showerman, in many delightful essays of his own, has shown himself a modern Horace. There is little that one can discover that he does not know about his master, or that he knows but omits in a volume of less than two hundred crowded pages. Horace the man, the lyricist, the essayist (rather than the satirist), the literary critic, the philosopher and the teacher is plain before us. His influence, too, on ancient and mediaeval times is nicely and concisely stated. When the author reaches modern times he perforce grows more hasty. Several volumes would be required for that, two of which, for England, he mentions in his notes and bibliography: Caroline Goad's "Horace in the English Literature of the Eighteenth Century" and Mary R. Thayer's "The Influence of Horace on the Chief English Poets of the Nineteenth Century." These supplement Mr. Showerman's book very acceptably.

HORACE AND HIS INFLUENCE. By Grant Showerman. Boston: Marshall Jones Company; $1.50.

Contemporary One-Act Plays.

Another of the valuable collections of plays which help to give the student of drama so general a survey of his subject has been published, these "Contemporary One-Act Plays of 1921" forming a sequel to "Fifty Contemporary One-Act Plays," both of them having been edited by Frank Shay.

The first realization that comes to the reader of this collection is a fresh recognition of the brevity with which the American as compared to the Continental surveys the life from which he selects material for drama; for the plays in this volume are all written by Americans and have been produced in American "little theatres."

Some of them, taking "Goat Alley" as an instance, are wholly serious; but the inevitable American sense of humor, which gives them their national flavor, preponderates. And yet some of these plays, to take "Matinata" for an instance, show the instinctive resemblance in artists' conceptions by more than a touch of the Continental flavor in theme and treatment.

There are twenty plays in the collection, Mr. Shay's ability as a selector of the best having been previously demonstrated. So that these plays are probably an authentic representation of the best one-act plays which saw the light in American theatres in 1921. There are new names in the collection, for the youth of the twentieth century is ready and eager in its productiveness. Among the best-known names are those of Eugene O'Neill, Christopher Morley, Harry Kemp, Floyd Dell, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Stuart Walker, George M. P. Baird, Ben Hecht, Susan Glaspell and George Cram Cook.

CONTEMPORARY ONE-ACT PLAYS OF 1921. Edited by Frank Shay. Cincinnati: Stewart & Kidd Company; $3.75.

Notes of Books and Authors

The Poetry Society of America has awarded to Edwin Arlington Robinson their prize for the best book of poems of 1922. This is his "Collected Poems," published by Macmillan.

John Burroughs and Jay Gould, so we read in Clifton Johnson's "Burroughs Talks" (Houghton Mifflin), were schoolmates in a little Catskill district school. "He sat right behind me, and we were quite chums. He was a small, wiry fellow, aristocratic in his feelings, and not inclined to mix much with the rest of the farmboys. I remember very well his superior, scornful laugh. He was clever and quick and a good student, and he easily stood at the head of his classes." John Burroughs was one of the few boys Gould condescended to wrestle with. "Johnny," as he then was called, had the muscle and the science, Jay the wind and endurance, and "he wasn't very particular about rules. The one point with Jay was to get on top," a position which in after life he always seemed to maintain.

Ernest Rhys, in "An Interview with Joseph Conrad" in the December Bookman, dispels "a curious legend about Conrad's original choice of English for his writing medium": "It was Sir Hugh Clifford, author of 'The Further Side of Silence' and other Malay books, who first set going in an article written for the North American Review the notion that Conrad had actually hesitated for a time between French and English. But there was no hesitation on his part. He did not even adopt English. 'It was I,' as he said, 'who was adopted by the genius of the tongue.' The capture was swift and inevitable. The very idioms of English, he declares, affected his temperament and fashioned his 'still plastic character.'"

The visit of ex-Premier Clemenceau to this country gives renewed interest to his volume of speeches and articles, "France Facing Germany," which the Duttons published in the United States, in a translation by Ernest Hunter Wright, some two or three years ago. The work contains a great number of articles and addresses covering a space of eight years and a long introduction written especially for the volume, the whole setting forth and discussing with "the Tiger's" well-known eloquence the principles involved, not only in the world war, but in the fundamentals of the long-continued situation between France and Germany.

Bonds for Investment

MUNICIPALS IRRIGATION DISTRICTS CORPORATIONS

Specialists in Safety

Anglo London Paris Company
One Sansome Street San Francisco
Phone Kearny 5600

The French American Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO

108 SUTTER STREET

Commercial—Checking—Savings

Resources Over $16,000,000

A General Banking Business Transacted

Commercial and Personal Checking
Accounts Solicited

Savings Accounts receive interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum

SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES $3.50

OFFICERS

Leon Bocqueraz ..... President
J. M. Dupas ..... Vice-President
J. A. Bergerot ..... Vice-President
W. F. Duffy ..... Vice-Pres. and Cashier
A. Bousquet ..... Secretary
J. T. Irilary ..... Asst. Cashier
Chas. L. Ebner, Jr. .... Asst. Cashier

Member Federal Reserve System and
Associated Savings Banks of San Francisco
The San Francisco Savings and Loan Society
(THE SAN FRANCISCO BANK)

SAVINGS COMMERCIAL

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

MISSION BRANCH ..... Mission and 21st Streets

PARK-PRESIDIO DISTRICT BRANCH ..... Clement and 7th Ave.

HAIGHT STREET BRANCH ..... Haight and Belvedere Streets

June 30th, 1922

Assets ..... $76,170,177.18
Deposits ..... 72,441,177.18
Capital Actually Paid Up ..... 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds ..... 2,700,000.00
Employee Pension Fund ..... 385,984.61

A dividend to depositors of FOUR AND ONE-QUARTER (4 1/4) per cent. per annum was declared for the six months ending June 30th, 1922.

HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA THE AMERICAN PERIOD

By Robert G. Cleland

Is ready and completes our history of the state.

The first volume is

HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA THE SPANISH PERIOD

By Charles E. Chapman

Price $4.00 Each

The Macmillan Company
Publishers San Francisco

UNIFORMITY

Every gallon like every other gallon. Every drop capable of vaporizing rapidly and uniformly in the carburetor, and being consumed completely in the cylinder at the jump of the spark.

That's "Red Crown."

That's quality in gasoline.

Use "Red Crown" and nothing else, and your car will develop the maximum power that its makers designed it to give.

Fill at the Red Crown sign—at Service Stations, garages, or other dealers.

The Gasoline of Quality

STANDARD OIL COMPANY (California)

100% power

RED CROWN GASOLINE

© 1922

BRIEFER REVIEWS.

The Treasure of Golden Cap.

Bennet Copplestone is evidently a serious student of Devon and its early seafaring annals, for he has imbued his story of treasure trove, a yarn tall enough in its adventurous interest to satisfy the most picaresque preference, with the glamour that archæology and a reconstruction of a past age always casts. The story is labeled "a romance of West Dorset" and the author has evidently had access to a veritable ship's log of the early seventeenth century, for the tale is circumstantial in the extreme. Aside from the light thrown on the early marine life of West Dorset, "The Treasure of Golden Cap" (E. P. Dutton & Co.; $2.50) is a bona fide adventure story packed with thrills imported from the seventeenth century and done in the best modern vein of mystery detection.

The Marne.

An attractive book on "The Marne, Historic and Picturesque," by Joseph Mills Hanson, is published by A. C. McClurg & Co. "The Marne," which is illustrated by many delightful plates that look as if they were from etchings, and which are by J. André Smith, treats the subject of the Marne country historically, topographically, and with special reference to its rôle in the late war. Mr. Hanson, who is the author of "The Conquest of the Missouri," writes with the clear exposition proper to travel books.

The Ant quity of Proverbs.

A book for the folklorist, but for also any reader with a taste for "useless information," is "The Antiquity of Proverbs," by Dwight Edwards Marvin, author and compiler of "Curiosities in Proverbs" (G. P. Putnam's Sons; $2.50). Mr. Marvin has taken fifty familiar saws—almost all that are universally familiar—and has studied each one exhaustively and comparatively. It will surprise the average representative of philological ignorance to learn how widespread our homely old sayings are that have always seemed the backbone of our own traditional wisdom. We remember another saw that human nature is much the same everywhere.

Maya the Bee.

"The Adventures of Maya the Bee" (Thomas Seltzer), by Waldemar Bonsels, is a book written for children that has, on the Continent at least, become a best seller among their elders. It is compared with "Alice in Wonderland," though we think its proportion of greatness considerably less. Still, figures speak, and the publishers vouch for the fact that half a million copies have been sold in Europe and that the book has been translated into seventeen languages, including our native tongue. The story is that of an eccentric bee, personified, after the manner of animal fables popular in Europe.

Western Birds.

The songbirds of the Western states are the subject of a book by Harriet William Myers, "Western Birds" (Macmillan; $4), written rather for the serious student of ornithology than as "popular" science. Mrs. Myers, who is vice-president of the Audubon Society of California, and chairman of birds and flowers in the general federation of women's clubs of the entire country, has been a persistent observer of bird life for many years and has published many magazine articles on Western ornithology. The book, which is the result of her field work, is supplemented by quotations from the work of many American authorities on bird lore. "Western Birds" is adequately illustrated with photographs.

Hamlet.

"Hamlet" de luxe is the offering of the Duttons in their truly beautiful ten-dollar edition of the familiar tragedy. In fact so handsome are the volume, and its decorations by John Austen, that the sacrilegious thought occurs that Shakespeare himself has been made to play a secondary rôle. But the book is none the less a fine example of the modern publishing phenomenon, a gift book. Mr. Austen's illustrations are exquisite, practically perfect as far as draughtsmanship and decorative qualities go, though we think their very facile gracefulness perhaps a little out of key with the sombre harshness of "Hamlet," which is an essentially masculine piece of art. Still, it is unfair to quibble with an edition de luxe for being luxurious. And that it is luxurious there is no gainsaying. It is lovely. The text, incidentally, is adopted from that of the Globe edition.

Delaware and the Eastern Shore.

"Some aspects of a peninsula pleasant and well beloved" is the designation given by Edward Noble Vallandigham to his book, "Delaware and the Eastern Shore" (Lippincott; $5). Our writing men are in the habit of going abroad and doing such books as this about some corner of France or Scandinavia, works that are largely interpretative and atmospheric, but as yet the custom has not become a common American one. And judging from "Delaware and the Eastern Shore" it is a commendable practice. After all, except for the main beats of travel, most Americans are ignorant of their own country, whose size implies a great differentiation in everything, from topography to local traditions. There is room for many such books interpretative of America, granted of course that they are as well done as this one by Mr. Vallandigham, who knows, not only the history of his state, but the particular nuance of geographic atmosphere that makes Delaware different from any other state in the Union. The book is handsomely illustrated with photographs and contains a folding map.

New Books Received.

AMERICANS. By Stuart P. Sherman. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons; $2. Character studies.

I BELIEVE IN GOD AND EVOLUTION. By William W. Keen. M. D. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company; $1.

A rationalization of evolution and religion.

MAN AND THE TWO WORLDS. By William Frederick Dix and Randall Salisbury. New York: Harper & Brothers; $1.50.

"A layman's idea of God."

AN OLD CASTLE AND OTHER ESSAYS. By Caleb T. Winchester. New York: The Macmillan Company; $3.

Literary essays.

ANNE SEVERN AND THE FIELDINGS. By May Sinclair. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.

A novel.

SPANISH COLONIAL LITERATURE IN SOUTH AMER-

IT'S THE WATER.

Prepared with Glacier Water from Shasta Springs

AT ALL DEALERS

SHASTA WATER COMPANY

ICA. By Bernard Moses. New York: The Hispanic Society of America.

Hispanic American Series, No. 1.

THE BEAUTIFUL NECESSITY. By Claude Bragdon. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.

The mathematical basis of the arts of design.

ROBIN HOOD'S BARN. By Margaret Emerson Bailey. New York: George H. Doran Company; $2.

The confessions of a garden adventurer.

PERFECT BEHAVIOR. By Donald Ogden Stewart. New York: George H. Doran Company; $2.

A parody outline of etiquette.

All Books that are reviewed in the Argonaut can be obtained at
Robertson's
222 STOCKTON ST.
Union Square San Francisco

THE HOLMES BOOK CO.
707 Market St. 152 Kearny St. 22 Third St.
Largest variety of new and second-hand books in the city. A visit to our stores will convince you of the truth of this assertion. We buy libraries or single books for cash. See us before selling. Phone—Douglas 3283.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

IF YOU ARE A REAL BOOK-LOVER
Spend a pleasant hour in the real "Old Book Shop" at 2 TILLMAN PLACE, OFF GRANT AVENUE—below Sutter.
Rare Old Books Bought, Sold and Hunted For by GEORGE HARGENS (formerly of the White House)

BOOKS AT PAUL ELDER'S
239 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

NEWBEGIN'S BOOKSTORE
358 POST STREET SAN FRANCISCO
Opposite Union Square
A Shop known for its courteous service, and a pleasant place to browse.
Information on books, authors and editions gladly given. Books bought and sold. Buyer will call. Telephone Douglas 2810

JOHN HOWELL
IMPORTER BOOKS PUBLISHER
RARE BOOKS AND FIRST EDITIONS
Libraries Bought and Sold
328 Post Street Union Square
Sutter 3268
SAN FRANCISCO

Geo. E. Billings Roy C. Ward Geo. B. Dinsmore
J. C. Muessdorffer Jas. W. Dean
GEO. E. BILLINGS CO.
ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE EFFECTED
112 California St., San Francisco, Cal.
Phone—Douglas 6400

BALFOUR, GUTHRIE & CO.

SAN FRANCISCO AND LOS ANGELES,
PORTLAND, SEATTLE, TACOMA,
AND VANCOUVER.

MERCHANTS

EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS
MARINE AND FIRE INSURANCE
AVERAGE ADJUSTERS

Agents of
HARRISON DIRECT LINE OF STEAMERS
TO AND FROM EUROPEAN PORTS

UNION LUMBER CO.

CROCKER BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE

REDWOOD LUMBER
RAILROAD TIES
TELEGRAPH POLES
SHINGLES

SPLIT REDWOOD PRODUCTS

BONESTELL & CO. PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna,
San Francisco

The Wright Magazine

("Not for self, but for others")
Only $1.00 a Year.

Besides a serial and short stories it contains departments for literary and music, women and children, farm and garden, a people's forum, manuscript markets, radio notes and other interesting features.

THE WRIGHT MAGAZINE
P. O. Box 894 Little Rock, Ark.

The White House
The Blood Ship

By NORMAN SPRINGER

It has the elements that make it a bully story—snap and go, lots of action, the tang of the sea, and it certainly reads like the work of a man who knows ships and shanghaied crews. It is romance! Mystery! $1.90

Book Department, Main Floor
Phone Kearny 5000

Raphael Wall & Co. Inc.

John Breunel & Co.
of San Francisco

281 Geary St., nr. Powell

Occasional Tables

Here is one of the choice patterns among our stock of occasional tables. We have a complete assembly of these beautiful tables which we are offering as low as $18.50 and up to $90.00.

A Christmas Present
Not Soon Forgotten

The Argonaut

Makes a gift that greets a friend all through the year, every week bringing a reawakening of esteem for the giver

Readers of The Argonaut can appreciate its value as a gift

Argonaut Publishing Company,
381 Bush Street, San Francisco, Cal.:

Enclosed please find $5.00 for yearly subscription to be sent to.....

.....

.....

"THE GOLD DIGGERS."

We have met the "gold diggers"—or their like—before in the pages of "The Salamander," a novel which had its vogue some ten years ago. The "salamander" is a girl who, like the gold diggers, exposes herself to the fiercest fires of temptation for the sake of free dinners, orchids, and jewels; all to be tendered by expectant admirers, who eventually fall off the sled into the snow, while the salamanders and gold diggers come serenely through the fiery flame with the delicate tissue wings of their morality a little crumpled, but intact; the metaphor being mixed, but so are the manners.

Avery Hopwood has portrayed the chorus girl at home; in, by the way, very comfortable quarters for such an intrinsically wholesome and respectable girl as Jerry is; and the whole tribe of chorus girls come to see her, and chatter, incidentally revealing the nature of the animal; for, as depicted, the chorus girl is a good-natured, good-hearted, fun-loving, food-loving, excitement-loving, dress-loving animal of frank appetites.

Passions she has none; which is perhaps approximately true to life, as the flapper has learned to reduce her passions to appetites. That is, by the way, a defect in the intrinsic interestingness of these girls, that all their emotions, even that shown in their ready generosity toward the former stage favorite who was earning a precarious living by peddling soap, are so superficial and fugitive. It is true that the fierce furnace in which so many young girls pass their lives in America, land of opulence and luxury and temptation, has partly dehumanized them, if we accept as faithful to life the types shown in the magazine fiction of the day. For passions are natural, and human, and interesting, even if it is only the passion of the miser for his gold.

However, although "The Gold Diggers" is billed as comedy it is really farce-comedy; and as such is ecstatically enjoyed, more particularly by the men, whose laughter, or much of it, had a personal note; the note of the victimized which says gleefully and revealingly, "Yes, I've been done just like that." For a common human characteristic—among men, at least—is, when one has been neatly trimmed, to take a good-natured but lawless delight in seeing the other fellow get similar treatment.

A characteristic of Avery Hopwood, as shown in bedroom farces—now happily extinct—is to play lightly over the surface of forbidden things, the surface being of perfect respectability. Even all the men but one in the play have the most decorous sentiments; and when the exception makes his questionable proposal to the charming Jerry, he does it in a casual way, much as if he were inviting her to go to a football game.

So superficially are the feelings expressed in "The Gold Diggers" that only the "My Gawd" type of girl is needed, except that Lorraine Lally, in the rôle of "Mable" Munroe, whom she depicts as a cynical blowsabella whose customary attitude is "grab," caught the enraptured favor of the house with her full-blown comedy; Avery Hopwood having committed the artistic error—that is, according to set standards—of writing a secondary part so that it almost pushes the first one from the stage centre.

Gertrude Vanderbilt, however, also established herself as a prime favorite in the part of Jerry; in which she does a wild dance with professional finish, and shows Jerry trying by her assumed toughness and vulgarity to make a millionaire uncle accept a little "violet by a mossy stone" chorus girl for his niece-in-law.

Of course sentiment is eventually invoked, together with a mother with gray hair, a gray dress, and an atmosphere of soft gray domesticity. Avery Hopwood knows his public. They like intimations of the improper, with a final wind-up which places all the characters they take to safe in the folds of respectability.

No doubt these girls are copied from life; allowing, of course, for the inevitable exaggerations of farcical comedy. The New York playwrights, poor dears, would naturally study such subjects when they are on their native heath. I wondered, the other night, how they would figure in a real comedy; I mean one in which their inner natures spoke. Perhaps, however, the real nature is in retirement during the daily demands of such a life. As depicted in this play they are vulgarized.

How could it be otherwise? For Avery Hopwood has been devoting his talents to bedroom farces, and one can not keep up that sort of thing for long with impunity. So Jerry, even though acting is her trade, if chorus girls can be said to act, does violence to all the instincts of the nice girl she is really meant to be by making herself out to be coarse, rapacious, and rather disgusting; which is where the author, to my idea, violated the canons of good taste and departed from the probabilities.

However, although billed as a comedy, the piece is farcical, and meant more particularly to amuse; in which it is deliciously successful, the audience nearly rolling off its seat over the revelations of chorus-girl nature.

The play is certainly in for a successful run. The girls are pretty and very smart, the scene depicted amusing, the dialogue full of lively rattle, and the company well up to the requirements, the leading man, Charles Hammond, well backed up by David Glassford, winning the favor of the audience, while Daisy Rudd and Katherine Walsh also amused by their depiction of the bastard-elegant and assertively tough type of chorus girl.

THE PLAYERS THEATRE.

The Players are up and doing for their winter season, having brought out a tasteful production of "The School for Scandal." The performance does credit for stage directorship to Reginald Travers, who has trained the young players to make effective exits and entrances, to represent the ceremonious courtesies of the day, and to group themselves in eager and active competition for the floor, in order that each may retail the latest and juiciest scandal.

It is an excellent idea to represent these famous classics occasionally, for the pushing generations always wish to gratify their curiosity about famous old plays. As for the players, they profit by the experience they gain in representing a line of drama that, in its elegant artificiality, so widely departs from modern realism.

The Players, who were notably handsome costumes, were a comely group in their powder, patches, and brocades, and made pictures of themselves worth seeing as the gorgeously costumed personages entered with the deep curtsies and inclinations of the era, and the groups formed, dissolved, and formed again.

Almost twenty players are necessary to represent the play, of whom Marie Tebeau, Miriam Elkus, Benjamin A. Purrington and Frederick McNulty stood out for the merit of their impersonations, Miss Tebeau representing a Lady Teazle of considerable dash, while Mr. Purrington gave to Charles Surface the charm of youth, bonhomie, and the joy of living.

Naturally the players did not bite very deep into the seasoned old satire, but in all externals the effort was highly creditable, and the stage pictures something well worth seeing.

METROPOLITAN ATTRACTIONS.

If we should scan the press of the decade first preceding the world war in order to find what used to be offered us in the line of musical and theatrical entertainment, and the more serious appeal to the judgment and intellect, we would make the discovery that gradually our San Francisco, which has often been reproached with its remoteness from world-centres, has been moving toward its completed dignity as a full-blown metropolis, able to instruct and entertain by the variety of attractions offered to the public.

San Franciscans have always been lovers of music and the drama, and that love has been assiduously ministered to by shrewd men in the theatrical business. But nowadays we have occasional lecture trips by famous writers; so that we are struck, when we begin to think them over, by the number of renowned authors who have come our way and made public addresses: Ibañez, for instance, Maeterlinck, W. B. Yeats, the Irish poet, John Masfield, the English poet, Hugh Walpole and W. L. George, the English novelists, Vachel Lindsay, the American poet, not to mention such prominent magazine writers as Isaac Marcossion and Irvin Cobb. And added to these are men whose fame has streamed on banners all over the round world, for Joffe and Foch and other great men have, since the war, visited these far-off shores that front the lonely Pacific.

And to come down to lesser things, women remember the thrill of excitement that ran through their numbers when the General Federation of Women's Clubs met here, just as the men had a magnificent kick in their ranks when it was finally decreed that the Democratic convention should meet in San Francisco.

At one time the university extension classes were confined to the other side of the bay. Now there are regularly instituted university extension classes taking up an immense variety of subjects. Psychology and Psychoanalysis became the fad. At once we had lecturers and classes to study up those subjects were organized; so that now the flapper in her teens can converse familiarly about complexes, and drag to the light all the darkest secrets of our guilty internal economy.

Before the war it was not, as it is now, the custom to have banquets—or alleged banquets—and public speakers to address the guests; often men of wide renown. Then it was the exception; now it is frequent. And the women have acquired a comfort club, which they had not possessed before, the average woman's club being given over to play, conversation, and tea; except for a few study clubs, and one or two forum clubs.

Besides the members of the university extension classes there are other devotees to learning that assemble in great numbers; Miss A. B. Greenwood, with her intelligently planned, informing talks on world events, taking the cake for drawing the largest and most fashionably garmented throng to her lectures. For Miss Young America, not having the time to read, is willing to pay for the privilege of getting an illuminating survey of the affairs of the world from a lecturer whose periodical flights in the East and Europe cause her to feel in touch.

And we have our share in that remarkable "little theatre" movement, which is participated in so brilliantly by young men and women players and writers that they have forced an appreciation of their wares upon a public that might otherwise never have heard their names.

And among our little theatres is a French theatre, a rare distinction for us, which few American cities share. It is kept going by the artistic enthusiasm of its founders, M. and Mme. Ferrier, and the press of the city, fully aware that these artists make their living off their classes, have tacitly agreed, for art's sake and the city's credit, to advertise gratuitously an enterprise that makes an artistic but not a commercial success.

Devotees of the French language may also hear many of the modern Parisian plays, as well as the well-seasoned classics, read once a week during the winter by Mlle. Godchaux, who, by the vivacity and charm of her readings, and by the un-Americanized flavor of her French, has made her winter series of reading a valued institution; the local Salon Français also making a point of having monthly lectures delivered in purest French by speakers well known in the departments of scholarship, literature, or art.

The Tivoli was snuffed out after the earthquake. But we have the Rivoli, which gratifies the desires of young and old to hear old, enshrined favorites in the line of bouffe opera well sung by competent and pleasing singers.

As for our regular theatres, they have made a good showing while New York attractions have been falling by the wayside; for not only have they kept open with profitable attractions drawing, in the majority of cases, better than only fairly well, but their ranks have been augmented by new houses, and we are going to have still another new theatre to be devoted to the spoken drama.

So, on the whole, we must be forgiven if, with naive elation, we swell out our chests and declare that, in spite of our distance from world centres, we are becoming quite metropolitan. JOSEPHINE HART PHELPS.

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE.

At the Curran.

This year Kolb and Dill are presenting the latest comedy of Aaron Hoffman, entitled "Now and Then," being the story of rapid-fire events which happened immediately following the date the Volstead law became operative.

With the Saturday matinee and evening performance Harry Fox in the musical comedy "Oh Look" will terminate his engagement at the Curran.

"The Emperor Jones" Coming.

An important attraction is announced for the Columbia Theatre commencing with Sunday night, December 31st, when Adolph Klaber will present Eugene O'Neill's unusual play, "The Emperor Jones," with Charles S. Gilpin, the colored star, in the title-rôle. The play is in eight scenes, laid in the West Indies, and depicts the adventures of an ex-Pullman porter fleeing through a dark forest to escape the vengeance of the ignorant black natives he has plundered. The "Emperor" passes through an astounding range of emotions, from slight alarm to bewilderment, and finally despair. And Mr. Gilpin is an artist in the part.

David Belasco's production of Avery Hopwood's farce-comedy, "The Gold Diggers," will have a second and last week at the Columbia, commencing with Sunday night, December 24th.

The Orpheum Next Week.

Walter Kelly, "The Virginia Judge," might be termed a humorist historian. His narratives are actual happenings.

John B. Hymer is another favorite who has been away from the West for some time, but there is not a vaudeville goer extant who doesn't remember his "Come on Red!"

Bobby Folsom, Jack Denny, and their orchestra will appear.

Middleton and Spellmyer present "Lonesome Land," a Western comedy.

Scanlon, Denno Brothers, and Scanlon are a quartet of "hoofers" whose original waltz quadrille is reminiscent of the days of real dancing.

Guy and Pearl Magley are two recruits from the musical-comedy field. They offer an original revue production entitled "Dance Stories."

The Gorham Follies, which have been such a hit at the Palace Hotel, begin an Orpheum Circuit tour here next week. There are twenty girls and Miss Doris Eaton, "America's daintiest dancing star."

The People's Symphony.

The activities of the People's Symphony Orchestra, which have ceased for the holiday period, will be resumed early in the new year, Conductor Alexander Saslavsky having arranged for the third educational concert to take place at the Scottish Rite Auditorium, Friday night, January 5th.

For this occasion Mr. Saslavsky has selected Concertmaster William Larai and Miss Modesta Mortensen, of his first violin selection, as his soloists. They will give, with orchestral accompaniment, the Bach Concerto for two violins. The other numbers on the programme will be the Dvorak Symphony, "From the New World," the waltz, "Southern Roses," of Johann Strauss, and the overture to "Iphigenie en Aulide."

The box-office for sale of tickets for this concert will open Tuesday, January 2d, at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

CURRAN THEATRE

Geary Street Near Mason Phone Mission 9300

Beginning Sunday Eve., Dec. 24th

Mats. Christmas Day and Wed. and Sat.

KOLB & DILL

In Aaron Hoffman's Latest Comedy Success

"NOW AND THEN"

Nights, Saturday and Holiday Mats., 50c to $2

Wednesday Matinees, 50c to $1.50

COLUMBIA THEATRE

Geary at Mason Phone Franklin 150

Final Week Begins Sunday, Dec. 24

Matinees Wednesday and Saturday

David Belasco Presents

Avery Hopwood's Famous Comedy

The Gold Diggers

Sun., Dec. 31—CHARLES GILPIN in

"THE EMPEROR JONES"

THE BEST IN VAUDEVILLE

Orpheum Circuit

MATINEES 25 and 50c

DAILY

EVENINGS 25c to $1.25

Except Sat., Sun. and Holidays

ALWAYS A GREAT SHOW

SMOKING PERMITTED IN DRESS

CIRCLE AND LOGES

SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

ALFRED HERTZ—CONDUCTOR

Second Popular Concert

Exposition Auditorium

Thursday Evening, Jan. 4, 8:30

A Wonderful Program

ARTHUR

MIDDLETON

America's Foremost Baritone,

Guest Artist

Reserved seats, $1, 75c, 50c and 25c (no war tax). Now on sale at Sherman, Clay &

Co.'s.

Direction Auditorium Committee,

Board of Supervisors

ESMOND'S

"THE CAKE SHOP"

253 Grant Ave.

Mince Pies made from our own home-made mince-meat. Genuine English Plum Puddings and Fruit Cakes.

"ECCLES CAKES" Our Specialty

To South America

A new direct service from Pacific Ports via The Panama Canal

Sailings

S. S. Pres. Hayes
January 25th
S. S. Pres. Harrison
March 5th
S. S. Susquehanna
April 15th

ON January 25th, with the sailing of the S. S. President Hayes, the U. S. Government inaugurates a new epoch making service—from ports on the Pacific direct to Porto Rico and the East Coast of South America!

If you have longed to join the thousands of business men and pleasure seekers at the great World's Fair in Rio de Janeiro, or to revel in the sunshine of Porto Rico, send the information blank below and find out about this new direct service! Find out how you may travel in sumptuous luxury on new U. S. Government ships directly to Porto Rico and South America—land of exquisite scenery and modern luxury, a gold mine of opportunities. Send the information blank now! Never before has there been such a travel opportunity!

The ships are of the "cabin ship type," now famous on the trans-Atlantic run. They are operated for the Government by Swayne and Hoyt, experienced steamship operators of wide repute. The ships leave from Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles. They go to Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires, via the Panama Canal, stopping at Porto Rico, and calling as well at Montevideo and Santos on the return trip. They ensure a voyage of delightful days on luxurious vessels whose standards of luxury, cuisine and service rank them among the finest afloat.

Send for descriptive literature today! You incur no obligation; you will receive full descriptions of the ships and valuable and authentic descriptions of interesting things to see and do in the countries you visit. Write today.

Write for Booklet

If you are planning an ocean trip, send the information blank below. Your Government has prepared a new booklet telling about your ships. Send for it today; it contains a host of exquisite views of the ships. Every American will be proud of them as he turns the pages. American ships contain many features uncommon to ocean travel. In many respects they surpass all competition. It costs you nothing to learn of these great vessels—investigate them today.

| INFORMATION BLANK   |               |
|---|---------------|
| To U. S. Shipping Board   |               |
| Information Department P. A. B. R 2599  | San Francisco |
| Please send without obligation the U. S. Government Booklet giving travel facts. I am considering a trip to South America <input type="checkbox"/> , to Porto Rico <input type="checkbox"/> . I would travel 1st class <input type="checkbox"/> , 3d <input type="checkbox"/> . |               |
| If I go date will be about _____  |               |
| My Name _____   |               |
| My Street No. or R.F.D. _____   |               |
| Town _____  | State _____   |

Managing Operators

Pacific-Argentine-Brazil Line

Swayne & Hoyt, 430 Sansome St. San Francisco, California

For information regarding accommodations and sailings address

U. S. SHIPPING BOARD

Information Department R2599

369 Pine Street

San Francisco, California

VANITY FAIR.

Couéism is being pursued in New York by a determined little band which hopes to overtake it before the winter is over. Drugless healing had a good run among the élite last season, and the season before that, and there were some interesting off-shoots downtown as far as the McAlpine, but this Coué business is to be taken very much as the real thing for the moment, quite supplanting even radio as a mental exercise. You know the game—"Every day in every way"; and then you wish. Some remarkable cures have been attributed to it—in fact remarkable cures have been attributed to everything under the sun, from hiding half a bean under the doorstep for warts to having all your teeth out for arthritis. Dr. Dowie had some remarkable cures to his credit, and his successor, Wilbur Glenn Voliva, appears to have discovered some peculiar therapeutic efficacy in propagating the belief in a flat world. These things, however, are for the vulgar. The pursuit of Couéism at the Plaza is not like that. Some of the best people are following the health hounds there, and the business is altogether a social activity. They do it instead of dancing, which is, perhaps, some gain. Another class of society person at the Plaza is practicing auto-suggestion. The members sit around every Sunday evening and suggest things to themselves. You can suggest whatever you like, provided you pay the teacher. That certainly seems a harmless amusement, and one under good control. There is quite a large class, as might have been expected. With such innocent employment absorbing it, New York society, it is felt, will be comparatively safe from the inroads of pink bolshevism during the winter, and perhaps a little into the spring. Bolshevism is not being done much just now anyway, and by the time society gets through with proprietary music, Couéism, auto-suggestion and a few other cultural devices of that nature, it is likely not to return to the cult of recent Russian economics. It is true such stuff hasn't much kick in it, but then it is restful, and that is what New York society wants: rest; rest from Stillmanism.

Consternation among the goats has been caused by a recent medical announcement that it is just as efficacious to eat glands as to have them transplanted by some painful and expensive surgical operation, and that they are just as good when taken from a goat as from a human being. This ought to bring relief to those tender-hearted persons who have been outraged by the Chicago stories of men kidnapped and robbed of their glands under anesthetic for the benefit of exhausted millionaires; a cycle of pleasant little folk tales that have largely taken the place of the needle-sticker stories of the white slavery days just before the war. But it is rough on the goats. A number of drug stores and fancy groceries are advertising prepared glands for oral administration, and printing comparisons of this commercialized and cheapened method with that of the fee paid by one of our foremost millionaires for an operation that took but a few minutes of the surgeon's time, but a great deal of the patient's money. It should soon be possible to obtain glands in the form of breakfast food, so that persons to whom even the medical aspect of rejuvenation is distasteful could restore lost vigor as the old ads used to say, in a pleasant manner, with sugar and cream. We can imagine the ministrations of the younger members of the household of some senile Cræsus who was still ambitious to flit from flower to flower sipping the sweets from each one as he flew—we can imagine his granddaughter, or his great-granddaughter, saying to him at breakfast: "Stop talking so much now, grandpa, and sit up off your spine and eat your glands, and don't get them on your bib, or we'll take them right away from you and give them to auntie. Won't we, auntie?" Truly nature is wonderful, but the limitations of science are not yet. If this gland business opens up as it should, a lot of people that have been buying oil stocks of late are going to be sorry that they didn't invest their money in goats. And Heaven only knows what the vicinity of the stage door is going to look like. The young fellows are going to be crowded out by Johnnies on crutches, and in wheel chairs, with white beards, and woolen mufflers about their necks. But spurious youth will have the money, and real youth will have to wait.

Persons that charge their intellects and memories with the doings of the "smart" say that international marriages are becoming almost a rage. As far as American interests in it are concerned, the movement, as a distinctive and cognizable thing, appears to have begun during reconstruction days after the civil war; and certain it is that it has developed with great rapidity in the fertile field of industrial expansion which during the past two generations has affected Europe as well as the United States. The familiar and nationally humorous figure of the suddenly rich father buying his daughter an English duke has been repeated so often that it no longer excites comment; but the process has gone right on. English, French, and American families are now matrimonially mingled, not to say mixed, until it will soon become difficult to find in that stratum of human beings known distinctively as "society" a clean-strain American, Englishman, or Frenchman. German blood has been mixed in, and Russian is being introduced in growing proportion. And there is even Greek. And Armenian may follow. The Atlantic Ocean has grown very small, the English Channel is no barrier, socially speaking. One American handicap has been our uni-lingual isolation, but our newly-rich are painfully learning to speak French, and Cook interpreters can always be hired to conduct any little negotiations that may be necessary between a bride that speaks only English and a groom that never thought it worth his while to learn it. After all, there is a certain measure of universality about the language of love. As the American negro soldier in Manila told his colonel, "I don't have to learn no Spanish; dem Filimpeeno ladies seems to know jes what I mean." So we learn that at the marriage in London recently of Mr. James Haldane Adair Campbell, grandson of the late Henry Havemeyer, and the Princess Catherine Galitzine, a marriage celebrated at the Russian Church of St. Philip in Buckingham Palace Road, there was present a very mixed company ethnologically speaking, with promise of still greater mixture. There was, for example, the Princess Nina of Russia, who is the wife of W. B. Leeds, son of the tin-plate king of America, and of the lady who after the tin-plate king's death became the Princess Anastasia of Greece. There was a mixture of American, Greek, and Russian, with the attendance of some top-class English. So connubial internationalism is extending itself and appears in the dramatis personæ of social functions among those having any pretensions to being anybody. It might almost be designated the Fourth Internationale.

Fine engineering in the New Peerless does not stop with major accomplishments. It extends itself to details which are sometimes neglected, as evidenced by the extra large diameter of the spring shackle bolts. This larger size reduces wear, of course; and when finally adjustments are necessary they are readily made without removing any of the parts.

1900 Van Ness Ave.

Phone Prospect 8800

The New
P E E R L E S S

"The Missionary" direct service

to

New Orleans

through
Northern Arizona
New Mexico
and Texas

Standard Sleepers
and Chair Cars
Fred Harvey Meals

Grand Canyon
Line

Tickets to and from Europe via all Trans-Atlantic Lines

Ask any Santa Fe Agent

R. D. Johnson, Div. Pass. Agt.
601 Market Street
Phone Sutter 7600
or
Market Street Ferry
Phone Sutter 7600

OAKLAND
434 13th St.
40th St. & San Pablo Ave.
BERKELEY
University Ave. & West St.
SAN JOSE
43 Ryland Block
SACRAMENTO
201 Calif. Fruit Bldg.

This Christmas Give Bonds

Our Gift Bond Service for the Christmas of 1922 has several unique features. They will add pleasure and surprise to the presentation of your gift. Descriptive folder will be sent for the asking [no representative unless requested]

Bradford, Kimball & Co.

Insurance Exchange Building
433 California Street - San Francisco
Telephone Sutter 5260

THE CHARLES NELSON CO.
MANUFACTURER AND WHOLESALE
of
REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR,
SPRUCE, HEMLOCK,
SUGAR & WHITE PINE,
CEDAR SHINGLES & POLES.
230 California St. San Francisco

E. C. EVANS & SONS, Inc.
(Established 1881)

STEAMSHIP AGENTS
SHIP AND INSURANCE BROKERS
260 California Street, San Francisco
Phone Douglas 8040 Cable Address "DEWGRIP"

GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION

Offices at
SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES
Alaska Commercial Bldg. Higgins Bldg.

HAMMOND
LUMBER COMPANY
260 CALIFORNIA ST.
REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR
AND PILING

Redwood Export Company

California Redwood
Lumber and Ties

Cargoes and Parcels
"To off shore markets only"

260 CALIFORNIA STREET
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

Phone Sutter 2163

JOHN McCALLAN

Notary Public and U. S. Customs Notary
34 MONTGOMERY STREET
Near Sutter—Phone Sutter 6195
Residence, Sutter Hotel, corner Kearny and Sutter Streets
Phone—Sutter 3060

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

A schoolteacher from an inland town was trying to instruct budding youth in a seaport by an illustrated reader. "Johnny, you may read the next sentence," Johnny read, "This is a ship," followed promptly with, "Yer lie. It's a brig."

The widowed charlady was a little abstracted. Her mistress suspected a second romance, and made such kindly inquiries that the truth emerged. "Yes, mum, I suppose I am courtin'. An' yet I don't know for sure, 'cos 'e's been fishin' up in Bedford for the last six months."

"What's de name of dis infant?" demanded the colored parson who was officiating at the christening of Mandy's latest offspring. "Her name am Opium Bryant," was the firm reply. The parson protested. "Opium aint no fit name for a gal!" "Well, it fits dis gal," said Mandy, "for dey say opium comes from wild poppy and dis chile's poppy suah am wild."

The teacher was taking the names of the pupils and those of their fathers, as well as the latter's business. Little Jean gave the names readily, but was silent on the third question. The teacher insisted. Finally, suffused with color, Jean stammered: "Please, miss, he is Aunt Jane that does the woman's page and the beauty column of the Daily News."

Sarah brought her three children for her former mistress to see. "And what are their names, Sarah?" asked the mistress. "They's all got flower names, missy," replied the negress. "I'm rahthe' proud o' their names. The oldest one's Heliotrope, and the second one there is Dahlia." "Yes?" said the mistress kindly, "very pretty. And what's the baby's name?" "Flower name again, missy. We call her Ahtifushal."

Sam Johnson, colored, of Galveston, Texas, had just lost his better half. A friend who inquired why he was leaving town was told, "I doan' know just what I will do, Rastus, but I reckons I'll become a Mormon." "A Mormon!" his friend expostulated with true Methodist horror. "What for you want to be a Mormon?" "Well," said Sam sadly, "I reckon it keeps one woman hustling too hard to feed a heavy eater like myself."

A business man of Oakland who has many relatives well enough off, but anxious to inherit his even greater fortune, recently called in his lawyer to draw up his will. When the document was completed the client asked, "Well, Thompson, have you fixed this thing as I want it?" "I have done my best," said the lawyer anxiously. "Then there is another thing I want to ask you," continued the wealthy Oaklander, "as man to man, who do you think stands the best chance of getting my property when I cash in?"

When Paderewski made his first appearance in Boston many years ago, one of the 'cellists in the orchestra became very much excited and springing to his feet made a little speech. Shouts of "order" and "sit down" had no effect on the perpetrator of this breach of orchestral etiquette. The orating 'cellist was a Pole, and he ended his ex tempore speech, glowing with patriotic pride, thus: "You see there Paderewski, my countryman, a Pole (crescendo). He is like Caesar (fortissimo). He came, he saw, he inquired!"

A young Scotchman came to this country to teach shortly after his graduation from the University of Edinburgh. Thirty years later he revisited his native country, but his report of it upon returning to America was not favorable. His chief grudge against his native countrymen was their closeness. "Fancy," he told an American confrère, "the tobacco shops charge for matches." The American was amused. "Yes," said the ex-Scot, "I once had to walk back eight blocks to my hotel in order to get my matches. The tobaccoist wanted hapence a box for them!"

An American returning from Canada had five quarts of whisky in his bag, and being an experienced traveler he covered four of them in the bottom of the Gladstone and placed the fifth on top with a ten-dollar bill wrapped around it. Then he confidently retired to the smoking-room with a cigar. An officer soon appeared at the door and inquired, "Is the gentleman occupying lower six here?" The owner of the five quarts identified himself as such. "Well," said the official, "the lady in upper six had two quarts in her bag. You'll find them with yours now."

Wickham Steed, the London editor, condemned the dullness of a London newspaper in an interview during his American visit. "That sheet," he said, "reminds me of Stoke-sur-Sea, where a friend of mine once spent his midsummer holiday. 'Well, Smythe, old man,' I said to my friend on his return,

'did you have a pleasant holiday at Stoke-sur-Sea?' 'Oh, very pleasant, thanks,' said Smythe. 'There was a lot of rain, and that, of course, kept people away, so that there was very little to do, but, I tell you what, I learned to knit jolly well, by Jove!'"

Members of the faculty of one of our universities tell a story of the days when a certain distinguished educator was a tutor in charge of student discipline at a New England college—a sort of proctor, apparently. On one occasion he was called out of his room by some midnight escapade. He was obliged as a matter of duty to pursue the disturbers, and with his long legs he soon found himself gaining rapidly upon them. Then his solemn voice rang out suddenly into the night: "Gentlemen, gentlemen, if you don't run a little faster, I shall be obliged to overtake you!"

One of Sir Randon Ronald's reminiscences concerns a production of Gluck's "Orfeo," in which real nanny-goats were introduced in the scene depicting the Elysian fields. "Our expectations were surpassed! In the middle of Sofia Ravogli's solo the nanny-goats began to bleat all over the stage, the audience tittered and laughed, and the dramatic effect was ruined. Harris told me to rush around to Arthur Collins and get the nanny-goats off the stage as quickly as ever he could. After much signing and pantomime to the fat Italian choristers, these wretched animals were eventually pulled off, amidst a roar of laughter from the audience. I went back to my seat to find Harris furious. However, things settled down again, but to our horror we heard the bleat in the distance about a quarter of an hour after we had believed the episode to be closed. Harris got up and went on the stage himself, using unparliamentary language to Arthur Collins, and asking why the nanny-goats had not been taken entirely out of the building. Collins assured him that they were out of the building, when another bleat was heard. Harris shouted furiously, 'Why, I can hear one of those wretched beasts now!' 'Oh, no,' said Arthur Collins; 'that's Signor Mancinelli laughing at some story which Calvé has just told him.' It was so."

When Miller received an autograph copy of his friend Lewis' latest book on the "Genetic Theory of Knowledge" he immediately sat him down and acknowledged the gift, saying that he "anticipated great pleasure in its perusal." "Why didn't you read it first?" asked Mrs. Miller. "Then you could have said something much nicer than that." "Margaret," said the husband, as he gave Lewis' book a conspicuous place on the library table, "I have a feeling that this is one of the times when my forethought would be better than my hindsight."

THE MERRY MUSE.

Love Is Blind.

He met her in the meadow,
As the sun was sinking low;
And as they walked together
In the limelight afterglow,
She waited—while gallantly
He soon let down the bars.

Her soft eyes bent upon him,
As radiant the stars;
But she neither smiled, nor thanked him,
And her manner was very cool;
For he was just a soldier
And she—an Army Mule.

—Dan Ready in Judge.

The Wishbone.

Once I wished a wish upon a wishbone.
The wish I wished was granted;
I got the wife I wanted
On that wishbone, fatal wishbone!
And though I've often wished since then
I've never wished that wish again
Nor can I get myself to face a wishbone
Without I wish it were a fish
Upon whose breast I made that wish
And I had choked to death upon a fish bone.
—G. M. in Judge.

ORNAMENTALS, FRUIT TREES,
VINES AND FIELD GROWN ROSES

Open Daily and Sunday to visitors and purchasers

GEO. C. ROEDING, Pres.

California Nursery Company

(Founded in 1865 by John Rock)

NILES, CALIFORNIA

How We Overcame
the cause of motor oils
breaking down rapidly under engine heat

DESTRUCTIVE "Sulpho" compounds are the cause of motor oils breaking down rapidly under engine heat. An enormous amount of money is annually lost through the presence of these unnecessary properties in oils.

Cycol will save engine owners this tremendous amount of money lost through wasted oil, wasted fuel, preventable repairs, because it is free from destructive "sulpho" compounds. These have been removed by the new Hexeon Process used exclusively by us.

When your oil contains destructive "sulpho" compounds it breaks down rapidly under engine heat. Its lubricating value becomes quickly impaired. The oil film is broken and serious damage may result.

Have your crank case thoroughly flushed—not with kerosene. Use the correct grade of Cycol as shown on the Cycol Recommendation Chart. Use Associated Gasoline. Then notice the improved performance of your motor.

ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY

[SAN FRANCISCO]

CYCOL

MOTOR OIL

FREE FROM DESTRUCTIVE "SULPHO" COMPOUNDS

PERSONAL.

Social Notes.

Mrs. Edgar Preston will give a ball some time in January for her debutante granddaughters, Miss Josephine Drown and Miss Frances Ames.

Mr. James K. Armsby entertained his brother, Mr. George N. Armsby, at a week-end party at the Bohemian Grove on Russian River.

Mrs. Harry Weihe and Mrs. Franklin Kales of Alameda were recent hostesses at a large luncheon at the Franciscan Club.

The University of Fine Arts gave a luncheon last week at the Fairmont Hotel in honor of the Countess d'Audiffret de France, delegate from the French Pro Patria Pro Infanta Society.

Mr. and Mrs. George Pope will give a Christmas dance at their home in Burlingame on Christmas night.

Mrs. Francis H. Davis was hostess at a luncheon given at the Town and Country Club in honor of Mrs. Frank P. Deering, who has recently returned from Europe.

Among those who entertained in honor of Mrs. George Ali before her departure for Europe were Mrs. Ira Pierce, Mrs. J. Leroy Nickel, Mrs. Van Bergen and Mrs. Wright.

Miss Lydia Hopkins was the honored guest at a luncheon last week given by Mrs. Eugene Murphy. She was also entertained by Mrs. Augustus Taylor at the Franciscan Club and by Mrs. Stewart Lowery.

A number of dinners preceded the ball given by Mr. and Mrs. James Flood. Among the hosts were Mr. and Mrs. Fentress Hill, who entertained at the residence of Mr. William Mayo Newhall; Mr. and Mrs. James A. Donohoe, who had Miss Marie Louise Baldwin as their guest of honor;

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Horsley Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bowles, and Mrs. Leroy Nickel.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick McNear gave a large dinner at Tait's-at-the-Beach in honor of Mr. George de Long of New York.

Mrs. Gerald Rathbone was a recent hostess at a luncheon in Burlingame, given in honor of Miss Lydia Hopkins, lately returned from abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. James Flood gave a large ball last Friday at their residence on Broadway. The guests wore Italian costumes, and the setting was Italian in design.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris Meyerfeld were hosts at a dinner-dance at the Fairmont Hotel on Saturday.

The first of the Subscription Dances at the Burlingame Country Club was given last Saturday night. Mr. and Mrs. John Drum gave a dinner preceding the dance at their home. Among others who entertained at dinner were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Templeton Crocker, Mr. and Mrs. George Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. George N. Armsby, Mr. and Mrs. Cyril Tobin, Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels and Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Scott.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gilman Norris will give a dinner-dance at the Bohemian Club on January 20th, introducing to society their niece, Miss Jeannette Norris, daughter of the late Frank Norris.

A Venetian carnival and ball was given at the California School of Fine Arts on December 16th. The second dance of the Club Royal took place at the Fairmont Hotel last Saturday night.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Wood were recent hosts at a dinner given at their home in St. Francis Wood in honor of Mr. and Mrs. George Armsby. Mrs. Francis Davis gave a tea last week at the Fairmont Hotel in honor of her daughter-in-law, Mrs. D. Farragut Ashe.

The wedding of Miss Mary Boardman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey Boardman, to Mr. Oze Van Wyck of South Carolina will take place in January at the residence of the bride's parents on Vallejo Street.

Miss Hélène de Latour gave a luncheon on Monday to a number of her friends, debutantes of this season and last year.

The wedding of Miss Marie Louise Baldwin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Sproule, to Mr. Eugene Kelly of Huntington, Long Island, will take place at St. Mary's Cathedral on January 6th.

Mrs. Frank W. Fuller was hostess at a farewell luncheon given at the Town and Country Club in honor of Mrs. Charles D. Farquharson and Mrs. Murray Innes, who are shortly going abroad.

Mrs. William Ellery was hostess at a luncheon given in honor of Mrs. Robert Shingle of Honolulu. Among the guests from the Islands were Mrs. Walter MacFarlane and Princess Kapiolani.

The engagement of Miss Marjorie Lovegrove to Mr. Dohrmann Pischel, son of Dr. and Mrs. Kaspar Pischel, has been announced.

The wedding of Miss Helen Foster to Mr. Eugene Tracy of East Orange will take place early in the new year.

Miss Sarah Cunningham, daughter of Mrs. James Cunningham and the late Mr. Cunningham, was married to Mr. Cornelius Van Hermert Engert of Washington last Saturday, December 16th.

Mr. Tallant Tubbs gave a luncheon at the Burlingame Country Club on Sunday in honor of the debutantes of the winter.

Miss Marion Zeile gave a luncheon on Monday last.

The Bohemian Club held its Christmas dinner on Thursday of this week.

There will be a Christmas celebration, with dancing and an entertainment, at the Training Station on Yerba Buena Island. Captain George W. Landenberger has invited guests from San Francisco and elsewhere to be present.

The Family Club had its Christmas dinner on Wednesday of this week.

"Travel Without Trouble"

COOK'S TRAVEL SERVICE

World wide Complete—Efficient

Inclusive Tours for Individual Travel

arranged, to start any day by any route.

Explanatory circular on request

THOS. COOK & SON

(Est. 1841)

Agents for the best lines for travel by Land, Water or Air

128 SUTTER STREET

(COOK'S BUILDING) Phone Kearny 3512

THE HILLCREST

American and European Plan
CALIFORNIA AND JONES STS.
Phone Franklin 3240

DEL MONTE

The Largest Resort Hotel Plant in the World
Where "Thinking People" can find Recreation
in Hotel del Monte's Comfort, Service and Outdoor Life. "Here every sportsman can find his chosen recreation."

TWO CHAMPIONSHIP GOLF COURSES
CARL S. STANLEY, Manager
DEL MONTE CALIFORNIA

San Ysidro Ranch

Furnished bungalows of various sizes;
situated on the foothills among the orange groves, overlooking the sea. Central dining-room, electric lights, hot and cold water. Good tennis court. Six miles from
Santa Barbara, two miles from ocean.
Booklet. Address MANAGER

San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara

SERVICE

To Sacramento

Observation Cars.

Dining Car Service on Meteor
leaving 4:40 P.M. through to Chico.

We Carry Baggage

SACRAMENTO SHORT LINE

Follow the Sun—Follow Summer

Down below the equator in NEW ZEALAND and AUSTRALIA it is Summer Time now. Here is something new and different—a series of

Canadian Pacific

Round Pacific Tours

Some of the high spots are:—Honolulu—Suva (in the Fijis)—Auckland, N. Z.—Sydney, Australia, then up through Torres Straits to Manila and Hongkong—Shanghai—3,000-mile Overland Tour through North China to Tien Tsin and Peking—Korea, the Hermit Kingdom, and Japan, returning to Vancouver on the big EMPRESS Steamship—the largest and finest on the PACIFIC.

These Tours are strictly independent and unescorted—stop or travel at your own pleasure. Our courteous and experienced agents in principal cities assist you in making hotel reservations, planning side trips and engaging local guides.

Rate, San Francisco and Return, $1,018.04

For further information communicate with

F. L. NASON, General Agent Passenger Department
675 Market Street, San Francisco Phone Sutter 1585

Would you enjoy the Summer climate and the rare Oriental life and atmosphere of

BLIDAH and LA CHIFFA
in the heart of old ALGERIA?

Only one of the many scenic thrills offered by the American Express Luxury Cruise on the

Mauretania to the Mediterranean

From New York February 7th—66 Days of Enchantment

The MAURETANIA your home all the way

Visiting Azores, Madeira, Cadiz, Seville, Gibraltar, Tangier, Algiers, Monte Carlo, Nice, Naples, Pompeii, Rome, Athens, Constantinople, Palestine, Egypt, Corsica, Lisbon, Southampton, London (5 days), Cherbourg.

Send for illustrated announcement

AMERICAN EXPRESS
Travel Department

Market St. at 2d, Kearny 3100, or at the
Emporium, Market St. near 4th, Douglas 1

Flowers telegraphed to distant cities.

American Beauty Roses
exclusively at

FLORISTS JOSEPH'S
233 Grant Ave.
Phone Sutter 423

Round Trip HOLIDAY FARES

Between all stations where the one-way fare is $30.00 or less—

25% Reduction

(Minimum fare 50c for round trip)

Tickets on Sale—

Dec. 22, 23, 24, 25, 29, 30, 31, Jan. 1

Return Limit—Jan. 3, 1923

Take advantage of these low excursion fares and spend the mid-winter holidays with your family or friends, or plan to have them with you.

Our Agents will gladly give you further information.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC

50 Post St.

Ferry Station
Phone Sutter 4000

Third St. Station

STRINGER STORAGE COMPANY

Sutter near Fillmore
and
Steiner near Sutter

Conducting a Storage
Business Founded
in 1880

Storage---Shipping

Expert Packing, Protection
and Dispatch

A fully informed representative, anxious
to give you any desired information,
will respond to your phone call.

Phone West 999

PERSONAL.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph D. Grant with their daughters, Miss Josephine and Miss Edith Grant, have opened their house on Broadway for the winter.

Miss Jennie Blair left for New York last week with her cousin, Mrs. Alexander McCallum. After spending the holidays in New York they will sail for Europe in January.

Miss Lydia Hopkins has recently returned from a long stay in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. George Pope have returned from the East.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Irving Bentley and their daughter, Miss Katherine Bentley, have returned from the East and are at the Clift Hotel for the winter.

Mrs. Samuel Knight is making a satisfactory recovery from her recent illness.

Mr. and Mrs. Clinton La Montagne are passing the winter at their country home in Menlo Park. Miss Alice Hanchett and Miss Lucy Hanchett are visiting in Los Angeles.

Major and Mrs. George D. Holland, U. S. A., have returned from Honolulu and are staying at the Fairmont.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis H. Davis have returned to town for the winter and are staying at the Fairmont.

Mr. and Mrs. George Ali have returned to their home in New York.

Mrs. William Crocker and Miss Helen Crocker returned on December 2d from the East. After the holidays they are going to New York, and in February will sail for Europe, where they will spend several months.

Miss Evelyn Poett, who has been at school at Farmington, Miss Christenson, and Miss Helen Marye, who has been attending Miss Spence's school, are returning to California for the holidays under the care of Mrs. William H. Crocker. Mr. Charles Crocker and Mr. George Newhall of Yale and the two sons of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hooker are also in the party.

Miss Helen Marye, who is spending the Christmas holidays in Burlingame, is the house guest of Miss Gertrude Murphy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Murphy.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick McKearney will go to Europe in January, and will spend some time with Mrs. McKearney's son, Mr. John Breeden, who is at school in Paris.

Mrs. Andrew Welch and her daughters have taken an apartment in Paris for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Oxnard sailed last week on the Tyrrhenia, and after making short stops at several Mediterranean ports will go on to Paris.

Colonel Lincoln Karmany, U. S. M. C., will be retired in February, after forty years' active service. Colonel and Mrs. Karmany will continue to make their home in California.

Mr. George B. de Long, after a visit in San Francisco, has returned to New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Burke Holliday, who have been staying at the Fairmont, left last week for their home in Pasadena.

Mr. A. King Macomber has arrived from Europe for a brief visit in California. Mr. Macomber, after a short stay at the Fairmont, has gone to his ranch at Hollister. Mrs. Macomber is in Paris.

Miss Alice Lamar, accompanied by several friends of Miss Marie Louise Baldwin, all of whom are to be bridesmaids at her wedding, will arrive shortly after Christmas in Miss Lamar's private car.

Colonel and Mrs. Lewis H. Rand have returned to San Francisco from Europe and are occupying their home on Vallejo Street. Colonel Rand was stationed at Coblenz until his retirement from the service, after which he and Mrs. Rand spent several months traveling in Europe.

Major George D. Holland, U. S. A., and Mrs. Holland, who have just returned from Honolulu, are staying at the Fairmont.

Major and Mrs. Laurence Redington, who have been visiting in Santa Barbara, have arrived in San Mateo, where they will pass the holidays at the home of Mrs. Redington, the former Miss Josephine Parrott.

Miss Jeannette Norris, who has been with her mother, Mrs. Frank Preston, in Medford, Oregon, will arrive shortly to visit her uncle, Mr. Charles G. Norris, and Mrs. Norris at the Stanford Court Apartments.

Miss Frances Jolliffe, who has been in Wiesbaden, will spend the Christmas holidays with friends at Monte Carlo. She will go to London in the spring, and will be with Mrs. Reginald Brooke.

Miss Harriet and Miss Mary Jolliffe will shortly occupy one of the new studio apartments on Broadway.

Lieutenant and Mrs. Roy Moore have recently arrived in San Francisco from Honolulu, and are established in an apartment for the winter. Mrs. Moore is a granddaughter of the late Hon. Paul Neumann of Honolulu.

Mrs. William S. Porter will leave for the East and Europe soon after the wedding of her son, Mr. Hugh Porter, to Miss Frances Lent, which will take place on January 10th.

Mrs. Edgar Peixotto and her daughter, Miss Nina Peixotto, will leave in January for Europe.

Colonel Bertrand L. Cadwallader, U. S. A., who is on his way to his station at Camp Lewis, Washington, will make a short stay in San Francisco. Colonel Cadwallader is a brother of Mrs. Lorenzo Avenalia.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Farquharson will go to Los Angeles to spend Christmas with Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lombard at Beverly Hills before starting on their journey eastward. They will be joined in Los Angeles by Mrs. Murray Innes, who will accompany them abroad and remain with them for several months.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Chesebrough of Newhall and their two small sons are visiting Mrs. Chesebrough's father, Mr. William Mayo Newhall, at his home on Scott Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Walker with their son, Mr. Leon Brooks Walker, returned last week from New York and Minneapolis, where they have been for the last few months.

Mrs. James Cunningham has closed her Woodside house and with her daughters, Mrs. Murray Sargent of New York and Miss Elizabeth Cunningham, left California for the East on Monday last.

Miss Cornelia Clappett, formerly of San Francisco, has recently arrived in New York from Paris, and will be married this week to Mr. William Sherman. They will make California their future home.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels have opened their Pacific Avenue house for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Angus Gordon Nicolson (Miss Minerva Lovell) have returned from their wedding trip and are at their home on Russell Street, Berkeley.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Clay and Miss Marielena Clay of Piedmont are leaving for the south this week. They will join Mr. Philip Clay, Jr., and spend the Xmas holidays in New Mexico.

Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Lincoln Brown have returned to their apartment at the St. Francis, after an Eastern visit of six months.

Miss Elizabeth Livingstone Murison has closed her apartment at 2050 Lyon Street and is spending the Christmas holidays with her niece, Mrs. Harry Francis-Davis, in Union Terrace.

Mr. Harvey Wilder Bentley, a senior at Yale, will spend the holidays with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Bentley. He spent last summer in volunteer service with the American Committee for Relief in Devastated France, organizing Boy Scouts.

A Collection of European Art.

An exhibition of remarkable period pieces will be on view at Vickery, Atkins & Torrey's until January 7th. The collection includes furniture in old needlework, tapestry, porcelains, and other art works out of several old English houses, some with famous names, where they have rested for generations.

Among them are part of the treasures of Hamilton Palace, of Earl Lovelace's house in Ross, and the heirlooms of Up Park in Hampshire. They are of a class that if found today in Spain, Italy, or France would be restricted by government barriers from exportation. The families who collected them in their periods on the continent of Europe brought them to their old English and Scottish country houses, which as a result were often storehouses of things of rare quality. There are pieces by Riesener Carlin, maitre Ebeniste of the time of Louis XVI, old Sevres vases in blue and turquoise, sixteenth-century figurines in bronze, tapestries and paintings—a section, taken in all, of the art of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries.

At the St. Francis.

The Garden and Fable Room of the Hotel St. Francis were crowded to capacity Monday with informal parties of smartly-gowned women. At one of the tables in the Fable Room Miss Marion Zeile was hostess to a group of the season's debutantes, including Misses Leonora Armsby, Josephine Drown, Alice Moffitt, Josephine Grant, Edna Taylor, Jean Howard, Adrienne Sharp, Frances Ames, Hélène de Latour, Eleanor Spreckels, and Edith Grant. Mrs. Corbet Moody and Mrs. Harry Hill were in the party.

Mrs. Robert Hays Smith had at her table Mrs. William Devereaux, Mrs. Frederick B. Hussey, and Miss Ysabel Chase. Mrs. Walter Martin entertained Mrs. D. C. Jackling, Mr. and Mrs. George Cameron, and Miss Helen Garrett.

Mrs. Charles Josselyn was hostess to a group including Mrs. Frederick McKearney, Mrs. Walter Filer, Mrs. Gerald Rathbone and Miss Marjorie Josselyn.

Walter H. Ratcliff, Jr., has been appointed supervising architect of Mills College. For the progressive development of the campus Mr. Ratcliff will use the general architectural plan drawn by Bernard Maybeck in 1918. Planting also will follow the extensive designs of Mr. Maybeck.

Eleventh-Hour Greetings To Distant Friends and Relatives

Flowers and Plants can be delivered to any part of the United States, Canada and some parts of Europe on a few hours' notice.

Podesta & Baldocchi
FLORISTS
224-26 Grant Avenue
SAN FRANCISCO
Telephone Kearny 4975

THE SANTA BARBARA GIRLS' SCHOOL

Resident and Day Pupils. Eleven acres. Country Life and Sports. Sleeping-porches. Open-air school rooms. Riding. Swimming all the year round. Basis of work, clear thinking.

MARIAN L. CHAMBERLAIN, A. M., Principal
P.O. Box 548, SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

just 40 minutes
from San Francisco

HOTEL OAKLAND, conveniently located near both shopping and resident districts of Oakland. Comfort, homelikeness and cheer, plus an atmosphere of refinement. Truly, "one of America's most satisfying hotels."

HOTEL OAKLAND
OAKLAND-CALIFORNIA

Management
W. C. JURGENS

Open All Day Sunday.

The enviable reputation of

KRATZ CHOCOLATES

is world wide, thus making them appropriate and more than well received as CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

Kratz

on our Chocolates stamps the Hall Mark of Perfection.

Each individual Chocolate created personally by Frederic Kratz, Master Confiseur.

Our dainty show place is maintained for extending courtesy and displaying our Chocolate Creations to visitors.

We have personal letters from America's most distinguished families among our patrons who commend our Art. You are invited to read them. You may know them.

$1.50, $2.00, $3.00
the pound.

Like a secluded nook, it charms with simple smartness and elegance.

Interior view of the
Kratz Chocolate Shoppe

Two Seven Six Post Street
(Near Union Square)
Telephone Sutter 1964

The seal of wax

In Kratz packages, bearing our copyrighted Seal, One to Twenty Dollars

SAN FRANCISCO CALIFORNIA

WHERE SERVICE AND COMFORTS ARE PLANNED FOR GUESTS WHO APPRECIATE THE BEST

Thos. J. Coleman
Manager

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

"Hear about Skidmore?" "Nope." "Didn't look behind him and towed his tin garage down town."—Judge.

"Lost my notebook." "Lost all you know, huh?" "No, lost all my professors know."—Washington Sun Dodger.

Louise—Did Clare do as you told her to, and not give you any Christmas present?
Julia—Yes, the stingy pig.—Life.

Jinks—We used to hear about the drinks on the house. Blinks—Yes, but now the drinks are under the house.—British Whig.

She—My fiancé's birthday is next Saturday, and I want to give him a surprise. He—Why not tell him your right age?—Columbia Jester.

"What cured that parlor socialist?" "He inherited money." "Well?" "And had to divide with his lawyer."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Mrs. Newlywed—Dearest, this is the first dinner I ever cooked. Mr. Newlywed—Wonderful! One could easily mistake it for the third or fourth.—Life.

"Why did they select the stork to couple with the doctor? Why not the eagle or the owl?" "The stork is the bird with the biggest bill."—Kansas City Journal.

"Is this the marriage license bureau?" "No, this is the criminal court. Maybe you'd better come in here. We seldom give them more than twenty years."—Judge.

She—And when you told him I was married, did he seem sorry? He—Yes. He said that he was very sorry, even though he didn't learn the fellow personally.—Pennsylvania Punch Bowl.

Workman—Somefink's wrong inside me stummick, sir. It seems to come up, then go dahn, then up and then dahn again! Doctor—My good man, you must have swallowed a lift.—London Humorist.

Old Gotrox—What's that! You really mean to tell me you love my daughter for herself alone? Suitor—Y—yes, sir, but I think I could learn to l—love you, t—too, in time, sir.—Boston Evening Transcript.

Lady—And what sort of person is Mrs. Robinson, colonel? Colonel—Oh, the sort of person who calls a table napkin a serviette. Lady—But I always call it a serviette.

Colonel (undefeated)—Then you know exactly what sort of person she is.—Punch.

Newbride—Did you get seats for the theatre, dearie? Him—Yes, love; I got the forty-third row. Newbride—Oh, I'm so glad. The show won't bother us a bit back there.—Washington Dirge.

"The farmer is a power in politics today." "Yep," replied Farmer Cornstossel. "The question, 'When do we eat?' is always more significant than the inquiry, 'How do we vote?'"—Washington Star.

"Wull ye hae a drink?" inquired the Scot. "Thanks," replied his English acquaintance. "I sure will." The Scot turned a disgusted eye on him. "Aye," he said, "I thoct ye looked that sort."—Los Angeles Times.

Student (hastily accosting a mate of his)—Calvin, there are a couple of creditors close to my heels. Fellow-Student—Quick, run in to the savings bank. Nobody will think of looking for you there.—Minnesota Foolsap.

Visitor—Is the boss in? Office Boy—I am very sorry to say that he is not in. Visitor—Why are you so sorry to say he is not in? Office Boy—Because it's against my conscience to tell lies.—Pearson's Weekly (London).

Lawyer—You want to ask $5000 a year alimony. How much is your husband making? Lady—Five thousand, but I'm sure he could make more if he had to and I'm willing he should keep the difference.—Boston Evening Transcript.

"What is this, professor?" asked the low-browed visitor. "A dinosaur. I articulated it myself." "You did what?" "I put it together." "Well! well! Imagine being able to make a thing like that just out of odds and ends!"—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Mrs. Portly-Riche—It must be dreadful to be as hard up as the Bronsons. They never give anything to charity. Mr. Portly-Riche—Well, for the matter of that, no more do we, m'dear. Mrs. Portly-Riche—No, but they can't say we haven't got it to give, though.—London Mail.

Father-in-Law—So you are beginning to find that married life has its troubles? Daughter-in-Law—Well, yes. Jack sometimes simply won't listen to reason. Father-in-Law—Young rascal. He ought to be ashamed of himself. It isn't every married man has the chance.—Pearson's Weekly (London).

"Before I married," said the middle-aged man, "I was terribly extravagant. I went to theatres and dances all the time, smoked cigars, drank champagne. But now—well, I live a quiet life at home, smoke shag, and drink water." "What a strong will it must need to change like that," said the young bachelor. "Yes, she has a very strong will," replied the married man.—Pearson's Weekly (London).

KING COAL

High in Heat Units
Low in Ash

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS
IN CALIFORNIA

KING COAL CO.

Main Office
EXCHANGE BLOCK
San Francisco

Wholesale Only

FOR A
CLEAR COMPLEXION
and a HEALTHY COLOR
eat
FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST

Three Cakes a Day

Residence of Mrs. C. H. McCormick, Lake Forest, Ill.
Perkins, Fellows & Hamilton, Architects

ENGLISH
CASEMENTS
and Windows
for banks, offices, schools
hospitals, etc

for artistic residences and other substantial buildings

CRITTALL

Steel Casements

Made in varied designs
to meet all conditions

Coast Representatives

J. E. DWAN, Los Angeles

F. T. CROWE & CO., Tacoma and Seattle

WATERHOUSE-WILCOX CO., San Francisco

J. McCRAKEN, Portland

Crittall Casement Window Co., Detroit, Manufacturers

The Catacombs of Cypress Lawn

Comparable with the luxurious tombs of ancient Egyptian kings, yet within the means of people of moderate circumstances.

A stone edifice, highly artistic in appearance, containing a magnificent chapel. Eleven Tomb Rooms, 425 Crypts.

Cypress Lawn Cemetery Association

Phone Douglas 4772

995 Market St.

AGENTS WANTED.

DEFLEXOGRAPH. fits any phonograph. Stops scratch and surface noises. Softens tone. immense profits. VANTONE CO., Dept. 102, 1Box 1244, City Hall Station, New York.

you have any favor to extend your loved ones none would be more appreciated than placing your valuable papers, etc., in a Safe Deposit Box, where after your death your heirs may get same without any trouble.

Boxes $4.00 a Year

Crocker Safe Deposit Vaults

Crocker Building

Post and Market Sts.

The Bagdad Railway.

In his "Under Four Administrations" Oscar S. Straus tells us how near the famous Bagdad Railway came to being built by Americans instead of Germans. It seems that in the year 1888 considerable pressure was brought by the Germans on the Turkish government for a railway concession to the Persian Gulf. The Grand Vizier called upon the American ambassador, asking him to interest some Americans in this railroad project. The most favorable terms would be given to a group of Americans because then the project would be free from the political complications which would (and did) ensue if a road through the heart of the empire was controlled by Germany. William K. Vanderbilt arrived at this opportune moment in his yacht. At the Sultan's request Mr. Straus tried to interest Vanderbilt in the railroad and introduced him to the Grand Vizier. But he was on pleasure bent and not inclined to take up more cares and burdens. Carl Schurz and Henry Villard were the next two Americans to whom Mr.

Straus appealed, but soon afterwards the Porte gave the matter over to a group of German and French bankers.

HOTEL RAFAEL

Special Winter Rates

$1.50 and up per day, without bath,
$10.00 weekly rate. $3.00 and up
per day, with bath, $15.00 weekly rate. All rooms steam-heated and modern in every respect.

Sunday Dinner $1.50

HOTEL RAFAEL is but 50 minutes
from San Francisco via ferry and train or auto. Delightful, invigorating trip.

W. C. JURGENS SAN RAFAEL, CAL.

Here's Where You Put Long Life in Your Motor

You put long life in your motor if you keep the crankcase full of "Aristo" Motor Oil.

A motor, like the human system, requires the right sort of food if it is to endure time, and this food—OIL—must be selected to meet the varying conditions of age, type and usage of the motor and seasons of the year.

"Aristo" Motor Oil is refined in different grades to meet these variations and the service department, maintained by the Union Oil Company is ready to advise you in the selection of the proper grade for your needs. This service is fully at your call in every part of the Pacific Coast.

Union Oil Co.

of California

The Argonaut.

VOL. LXXXXI. No. 2388.

SAN FRANCISCO, DECEMBER 30, 1922.

Price Ten Cents

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE: The Argonaut (title trade-marked) is published every week by the Argonaut Publishing Company. Subscriptions, $5.00 per year; six months, $2.55; three months, $1.50, payable in advance—postage prepaid. Subscriptions to all foreign countries within the Postal Union, $6.00 per year. Sample copies free. Single copies, 10 cents. News Dealers and Agents in the interior supplied by the San Francisco News Company, 747 Howard Street, San Francisco. Subscribers wishing their addresses changed should give their old as well as new addresses. The American News Company, New York, are agents for the Eastern trade. The Argonaut may be ordered from any News Dealer or Postmaster in the United States or Europe. Special advertising rates to publishers. Address all communications to The Argonaut, Alto Building, 381 Bush Street, San Francisco. Make all checks, drafts, postal orders, etc., payable to "The Argonaut Publishing Company."

Entered at the San Francisco Postoffice as second-class matter. The Argonaut can be obtained in London at the International News Co., Breams Building, Chancery Lane; American Newspaper and Advertising Agency, Trafalgar Square, Northumberland Avenue; and at Daws Steamship Agency, 17 Green Street, Leicester Square, and can be ordered from any of the news-stands of W. H. Smith & Son. In Paris, at 37 Avenue de l'Opéra. In New York, at Brentano's, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-Fourth Street. In Chicago, Western News Company. In Washington, at Adams' News Agency, Ninth and G Streets.

The Argonaut is on sale at the Ferry Station, San Francisco, by Foster & Orear; on the ferryboats of the Key Route system by the news agents, and by the Van Noy-Interstate Company on Southern Pacific boats and trains.

Telephone, Sutter 6737. Publication office, 381 Bush Street. WM. J. MILLIKEN, Business Manager.

FORTY-SIXTH YEAR

ALFRED HOLMAN - - - - - EDITOR

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| EDITORIAL: Pertinent Queries—Editorial Correspondence—Accordion Money—The Whitewashing of Fatty Arbuckle . . . . .  | 433-435 |
| LETTERS TO THE EDITOR . . . . .   | 435     |
| VOICES FROM THE PRESS . . . . .   | 435-436 |
| OLD FAVORITES . . . . .   | 436     |
| INDIVIDUALITIES: Notes About Prominent People All Over the World . . . . .  | 436     |
| BEHIND THE GERMAN ARMIES: Ludendorff's Reply to His Critics Shows the Difficulties He Had with the Nation . . . . . | 437     |
| BANKING AND INVESTMENT NEWS . . . . .   | 438-439 |
| BOOKS ON THE TABLE: Notes of Books and Authors . . . . .  | 440     |
| BRIEFER REVIEWS: New Books Received . . . . .   | 441     |
| DRAMA: A Week of Levity; Deceased. By Josephine Hart Phelps . . . . .   | 442     |
| FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE . . . . .  | 443     |
| VANITY FAIR: The War Millionaires—New Money and Marriage—Dull Times . . . . .                                       | 444     |
| STORYETTES: Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise . . . . .   | 445     |
| THE MERRY MUSE . . . . .  | 445     |
| PERSONAL: Social Notes—Movements and Whereabouts . . . . .  | 446-447 |
| CURRENT VERSE . . . . .   | 447     |
| THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS: Paragraphs Ground Out by the Dismal Wits of the Day . . . . .                                | 448     |

Pertinent Queries.

"Is our stock degenerate? Does our blood run thin?" These questions are asked by one whose letter to the editor appears in another column. They are pertinent and timely. They are grounded upon events and conditions that tend to discouragement, if not to positive alarm. Take, for example, recent incidents in our local history. A hundred or more motor-cars, so our daily papers report, were stopped on the San Francisco-San Mateo highway in a single day last week by prohibition enforcement officials and subjected to search for contraband liquors. In the greater number of cases no liquor was found and the innocents were graciously permitted to proceed on their way. All who were thus subjected to annoyance and humiliation were indignant, but we hear of no case in which there was effective protest. Yet the procedure was both impertinent and illegal, since in not a single instance did the officials present a warrant of search. There was submission, not with consent or good grace, but because it was easier to submit than to resist. One does not need to be in sympathy with lawlessness—as assuredly the Argonaut is not—to find his gorge heaving in resentment at the indignity involved in this infringement of private and individual rights. But, despite all, the procedure goes on. There was a time when this sort of thing would have been an impossibility. The spirit that spilled the tea in Boston harbor, that fired the hearts of lads forbidden to sport their sleds in Boston Common, that fought for liberty in bleeding Kansas, that brought into being the San Francisco Vigilantes—the spirit that was once universal in America—would not have endured this breach of individual rights for a single hour. "Is our stock degenerate? Does our blood run thin?" Sadly we fear these questions may not be answered as they would have been answered in other days in this once land of the free and home of the brave.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18th.—If it had been left to rock-ribbed conservatism to devise ways and means to limit the potentialities of the radical group in the Senate, a more satisfactory result could hardly have been attained. Thanks are due to Mr. La Follette. In the senatorial radical group he holds preëminence for general unloveliness. Even among those whose names and courses are associated in the public mind with his own, La Follette holds scant respect and no liking. In the Senate he is arrogance incarnate. It was characteristic that upon the reassembling of Congress he should push to the front and grasp unasked at leadership of the radical group. A better service for conservatism could hardly have been conceived, since association of senatorial radicalism with the name of La Follette puts it immediately into general discredit. While it is true that there are radicals enough in the Senate to constitute a balance of power, it is also true that as a working force the group is weak. The reason is not far to seek. It is in the spirit of radicalism to be obstreperous. Coördination, submission to leadership, are names not written in the lexicon of such men as La Follette, Borah, Brookhart, et al. Then, every mother's son of them—with the possible exception of Borah—is an aspirant for the presidency. In the group all would be generals, none will consent to be privates. Already, in respect of the proposal of Senator Borah for an economic conference looking to participation in the affairs of Europe, there is open protest from the radical side of the chamber. In brief, the radicals in the Senate, while sufficient in number to be tremendously mischievous, are so puffed up with personal conceit, so individually and conflictingly aspiring, so temperamentally indisposed to coöperative action, that their authority in relation to legislation is definitely restricted.

There are indications that a change has come o'er the spirit of our own Hiram. He did not arrive at Washington in time to participate in the La Follette conference, and it is suspected that there was calculation in his protracted stay in California. There are those who intimate that he was caught in the self-same "blizzard" that prevented him last year from being present when the roll was called in the Newberry case. He has signalized his belated arrival on Capitol Hill by an outburst against Senator Borah's project for an economic conference. It is further understood that he has given assurances that his vote will be favorable to President Harding's ship subsidy proposal. All this wears the look of a changing heart. Is it possible that now being safely fixed in another senatorial term, now finding his California machine in process of breaking up, under the necessity of finding definite standing room somewhere, he is seeking to discard his extravagances and to get himself regularly into the party he has so grossly misused? It looks that way. Nobody will deny to Senator Johnson prescience in the political game; and it is plain that he has nothing to gain from further standing with the obstreperous element in the Senate. With six secure years ahead of him he may easily reëstablish himself as a Republican and thereby acquire a standing impossible of attainment by continuance of his past policies. The vital difficulty in his path is his affiliation with Hearst. Not even so agile a politician as Hiram can maintain a definite, dependable, and respectable character as a Republican and at the same time answer every beck and call of his eccentric patron. He must choose either to break with Hearst or to continue a traitor to the party in whose name he appealed to the California electorate and by whose favor he holds his senatorial commission. If Johnson should assume character as a dependable Republican he might easily become a force in the Senate in the party councils. True he is not a man of moral conviction. True he lacks industry—for he is not a worker—but he has other qualities that command attention and that win coöperation. Despite his deficiencies there are potentialities in the man if he can shake loose from his vagaries and his sinister relationships. There are those here who believe that he will do both.

As I write there is in progress in the Senate a hot contest between the supporters of the President and of his ship subsidy proposal and those opposed. The farm blocers are endeavoring to thrust aside the subsidy bill and to substitute for it on the calendar a farm credits bill. The purpose is not so much that of immediately advancing the farm credits measure as of side-tracking the subsidy bill. At the moment the prospect is that the forces opposed to the President and his plans will be beaten and that the subsidy bill will hold its preferential place on the calendar [this prophecy proved well founded]. That, however, prior to the adjournment of the present Congress the subsidy bill can be brought to a vote is doubtful. There are, so I am assured, a sufficient number of pledged affirmative votes to put it through in a form substantially agreeable to the President's wishes, but the working rules of the Senate afford many opportunities for obstruction and they are not likely to be overlooked by those who oppose the bill, not so much through definite objection to its provisions as a wish to thwart and harass the President. I am glad to be able to say that California is not represented in this group of obstructionists. Mr. Shortridge is openly upholding the President's hands; and, as I have already said, the understanding here is that if the measure shall be brought to a vote Mr. Johnson will stand, not with his erstwhile associates the chronic haters of the Administration, but with the President's friends and supporters.

In the course of an informal interview with a group of press correspondents two days ago, the President gave assurances that the Administration was not "indifferent" or "inattentive" to the situation in Europe. He very distinctly refrained from any definite commitment further than to say that whenever there should appear a way within the legitimate scope of its activities to be helpful it would be found both interested and active. Out of this simple statement and of several other disconnected facts and circumstances an amazing sensational story has been spread, not only throughout our own country, but in Europe, with the effect of influencing values of the currency both of France and England. How all this comes about forms an interesting though far from edifying illustration of the processes of a certain kind of journalism of which we have far too much. Upon the day that President Harding delivered himself of the general statement above defined Hon. Elihu Root was in Washington and incidentally paid a brief visit of courtesy to the President. On the previous day Mr. Pierpont Morgan was in Washington and similarly paid his respects at the White House. A day or two prior the President, while refreshing himself in a brief walk, looked in casually upon Secretary Hughes at the State Department. These several incidents, I am assured, bore no relationship to one another, but just happened in the course of ordinary events. But certain enterprising correspondents, eager in the cheap business of sensational exploitation, pieced together the President's statement above quoted, Mr. Morgan's and Mr. Root's calls at the White House and Mr. Harding's call upon Secretary Hughes, weaving from them a fabric of surmise, speculation, and prophecy wholly unsupported by facts and calculated to misrepresent and embarrass the Administration and to disturb the exchanges of Europe. I would be the last to curb the freedom of the press, but I should distinctly enjoy membership in a group that would apply a coat of tar and a decoration of feathers to any sensationalist who misuses the privileges of an unrestricted press to confuse the public mind and to embarrass those who carry the burden of administrative policy.

The impeachment procedure against Attorney-General Daugherty has collapsed. The chief complainant got a chill in his feet and at the critical moment declined to appear in support of his own charges. Nobody else came forward to take his place and the whole matter at once took on the character of a sordid farce. I say sordid because the motive back of the movement was nothing better than that. Daugherty had instituted inquiries calculated to smoke out a coterie of rank profiteers. Those placed in jeopardy by his activities sought to stop him by procedures calculated to put him on the defensive. The obvious hope was that he would seek to save himself by back-tracking. But Daugherty did not take the bait—he defied his accusers and persisted in his inquiries. The end is collapse of the impeachment procedure. It could not go on because there was and is nothing in Daugherty's official career upon which impeachment procedures could be rung. The only serious count in the case was that of alleged fraud in the matter of the release of the notorious C. M. Morse from a Federal prison in the last weeks of the Taft administration. The incident was not a creditable one and its justification is not clearly established in many minds by Daugherty's plea that he acted in Morse's behalf in his character of attorney. He would better have been in better business; but however his course in the Morse case may be appraised, it was of the long-ago and bore no relation to his present position as Attorney-General. It was dragged in for the purpose of intimidation—to frighten the Attorney-General into nullification of his profiteering inquiry. Its purpose being patent, its moral force speedily became nil. Thus ends an incident that reflects credit on nobody associated with it.

Mexico and her affairs continue to interest the gossips of the capital as well as of the country at large. In every hotel lobby and even in the corridors of the Capitol one may hear constant references to our chronically unhappy neighbor. There are those who roundly declaim against the Administration for its failure to give the Obregon government the support of American recognition. Likewise, there are those equally assertive who hold diametrically opposite ideas. The truth of the situation appears to be that while Obregon contrives to hold his place as head of the Mexican government, and in some degree to have established social order, his tenure is weak and uncertain. The backbone of his authority—or more precisely, his nominal presidency—is a large income from taxation of the various oil companies operating in Mexico. Somewhere between three and five hundred "generals"—all potential revolutionists—are held in leash by payments from the national treasury. Theoretically, such payments are upon salary account; but in cold fact they are subsidies bestowed to the end of individual pacification. I am told that the administration of justice in Mexico is a shameless farce. Bribery is the one means of approach to the courts, and whoever has the longest purse may have any kind of a verdict he wants. A further factor in the situation is Obregon's physical condition. He has, if an apparently reliable report may be believed, a malignant disease of the throat which practically nullifies his energies and must sooner or later carry him off. I have in the last few days talked with several persons recently from Mexico and all I have learned goes to confirm judgments many times declared in the columns of the Argonaut that there is nowhere within Mexico any power sufficient to effect permanent pacification of that distressed country. I am convinced that sooner or later the United States will have to establish in relation to Mexico an authority measurably patterned after our relationship to Cuba. In other words, Mexico like Cuba will have to be guarded perhaps for a very long period by American authority and oversight. This in the interest of civilization and in respect of responsibilities attaching to us as Mexico's nearest neighbor and as proponent of the Monroe Doctrine. Mexico is not meeting her obligations as an independent nation; in the judgment of those who have right to judgment, she can not do so until the moral and intellectual level of her people shall be raised. The country must have direction and leadership from without—in other words from the United States.

I find that the deterioration of Congress is as frequently and freely discussed here in Washington as it is throughout the country. Nobody denies it; there is no doubt about it. Congress is not what it was in the days of Blaine, Conkling, Spooner, Root, Tom Reed, et al. It has all but abandoned its broader functions and put upon the President much of the responsibility that once attached to itself. The decline is not more clearly marked—perhaps not so clearly marked—in the intellectual quality of the men who make up Congress as in the attitude of individual congressmen toward the broader responsibilities of government. The Senate today contains several notably strong men. There is Wadsworth of New York, Smoot of Utah, Pepper and Reed of Pennsylvania, Brandegee of Connecticut, Underwood of Alabama, Williams of Mississippi, and perhaps I should include Borah of Idaho and our own Hiram, each of whom has strength of an individual kind. But there is deficiency in team work, little in the way of honorable submission to leadership. Each man goes it alone, so to speak, or measurably so. In the House of Representatives personal deterioration is more marked, for if you leave out of account Burton of Ohio and our own Julius Kahn there is hardly left a figure notable for hardihood of mind and character, for independence of thought or for courage imbued with the spirit of responsibility. Explanation lies mainly in the changed methods of selection. There was, to be sure, under the old convention system much properly subject to criticism. But with all its faults the system did bring into Congress many strong and vital men who, once established in responsible public life, recognized their responsibilities both in national and international relationships. The effect of the popular election of senators and of the direct primary has been to remove the average congressman's centre of mental gravity, so to speak, from his foreground to his background. When to hold his place a man must bend to every temporary breeze that blows in some particular state or congressional district, he inevitably loses some measure of his sense of broader obligation. Men like Spooner, Root, Reed and a hundred others of an elder day were not shaken from their larger views and duties by passing waves of sentiment or by transient considerations of interest in special localities. But today no man may hold his place who does not play to the home gallery.

A. H.

Accordion Money.

Dealing with the gravest of subjects, one that affects the welfare of every family and every individual in the United States, Professor Irving Fisher of Yale yet presents himself to the nation as one of the humors of the holiday season—very like an ingenuous youth who might amuse his neighbors by performing antics with a jack-o'-lantern in a powder mill. His latest caper is the invention of a dollar of stable purchasing power, or what he thinks would be stable purchasing power. He recognizes that no fixed ratio is possible between two commodities, even if one is money, and that if the power of the dollar is to remain the same, the weight of gold in it, or that it represents, must vary. That is sound hypothesis; but it calls for academic innocence to suppose that as a working device a dollar that was changed in weight to meet the myriad changing conditions of living and of trade, and of a thousand commodities fluctuating among themselves, would reconcile the "class conflict" that has been smoldering in the world since long before the days of Hesiod, and that Professor Fisher seems to think is caused by fluctuating money. Nevertheless, a bill has been introduced in Congress to create such dollars.

It is true that the poor suffer from money fluctuation, and yet it is the poor on whose behalf systems of money that would jiggle up and down more violently than any we have seen are repeatedly brought forward. And this is one of them. A poor man that had to sell something to relieve his necessities would have to sell it no matter what the weight of an Irving Fisher dollar was on the day of his need. And if dollars were light that day, some speculator would buy the poor man's goods with light dollars. He would thereby relieve the poor man's distress, and deserve well of him, and for his service he would retain the goods until dollars were heavy, and sell those goods at a handsome profit in gold, to hold until dollars were again light, so he could change it into more of them, and the poor man would learn of it and curse him for a robber. Nothing reported of Professor Fisher's plan indicates any method of preventing this simple transaction, with its natural, ancient hang-over of hate. And it is as old as Thales of Miletus, that sage of Greece who bought olives when they were cheap and sold them when they were dear.

Buying cheap and selling dear is a delightful exercise, open to the rich or the well-capitalized, provided they can accomplish it, but not possible to any great extent to the poor or the under-capitalized. It tends to widen the breach between the rich and the poor, but it can not be prohibited or we should all be poor together. It is essential to the mechanism of exchange, which is essential to production, which is essential to that distribution about which the socialists are so deeply agitated. And it will never be abolished by any clap-net device of cheap, elastic money, whether devised by Coin Harvey or Edison or Henry Ford or a Yale professor.

Worse confusion of our present commerce would follow the adoption of such money than the Europeans are suffering as a result of the German war; provided men tried to deal by means of it, which they would soon cease to do. We might expect to see the Chicago Board of Trade hang out a sign at brief intervals reading: "No trading today; dollars are light." And sinful bankers would be tempted to tell their clients: "No lending today; dollars are heavy." Speculators that could get themselves into debt when dollars were heavy, and discharge the debt when they were light, would have a profit until their competition for loans upset the market and threw the financial system into a chaos which no monetary commission of appointed politicians would have the skill to straighten out—nor any board of practical bankers, either. To offset gambling of that sort it is likely that loans would have to be so curtailed that farmers would have more trouble than they now have getting the funds to work their farms, and the middlemen, one of the most useful orders of society, by the way, would have similar difficulty in getting enough to move the crops. Or else when the seasonal demand for cash to move crops had sent up the purchasing power of money, and some commission under the Fisher plan had decreed that such power should be reduced by lightening the Fisher dollars, the prices of every commodity in the country would be suddenly marked up and the cost of living correspondingly raised and creditors would be defrauded by payments in shrunken currency and the financial world and all domestic arrangements would revert to chaos and barter—for very soon the device would be adopted of designating prices and debts in troy weight instead of dollars. People would get tired of looking in the newspaper every morning to see whether a dollar was to be a twentieth of an ounce of gold that day, or a twenty-fifth or thirtieth.

The dollar we have fluctuates badly enough. Professor Fisher is right about that. But its fluctuations are nothing to the gambols and flip-flaps and gyrations and pranks we might expect from the acrobatic Fisher dollar. It would be a joke, and it could relieve nobody's distresses for long, because, for one thing, it could not be used. The professor might as well make it of rubber and be done with it.

The inability to buy cheap and sell dear is at once one of the causes and one of the penalties of poverty. Of course, a poor man can sometimes do it to some degree, and perhaps increase such transactions. But by the process he soon ceases to be poor. And one of the grandeurs of this country is that he who by thrift and management and industry and some luck is able to enter this competition of ability and keep afloat does not have to remain poor very long. The man that lacks thrift or ability or industry or luck is going to be poor in spite of all Professor Fisher can do. And it is a pity; but fundamentally that is all there is to it, and the condition is incurable. No matter what sort of dollar the professor invents, no matter how its nature may be disguised by holding bullion in the vaults of the mint and issuing demand notes against it, as the Goldsborough bill embodying the sliding-scale dollar seeks to provide, there will always be an advantage in having cash on hand to buy things when they are cheap, and a disadvantage in needing cash and being compelled to sell what you own when it is not bringing a good price. And that difference may make all the great gulf that is fixed between wealth and poverty; a gulf no sort of dollar will ever bridge. Forced liquidation is ruinous, but no jumping dollar will insure against it.

Poverty is not so easily cured as all that. If it were we should be criminal in not having cured it long ago. It may not be true, as once said by the Man of Argos, that "money maketh a man"; but it is in most instances true that a man maketh money. Ambitious men are not going to rest content in the impotence of poverty, and men that are ambitious and able and fortunate do not have to. Those of less ability and value and luck will have to endure various degrees of poverty—for, after all, it is comparative—and no fancy dollar, not even a stable dollar if one were possible, or a dollar that would stretch like a pair of suspenders, is going to prevent it. After all, the dollar is not the purpose of the trading. The social function of commerce is the production and movement of goods, and its private object is to acquire, not the dollar, fundamentally, but the gold a dollar represents or can be converted to directly or indirectly: about a twentieth of an ounce, roughly speaking, to each dollar. And the gold is the thing, whether you call it a dollar or four shillings. And herein is the mystery of money. And the rest is the mystery of man. And thus endeth the chapter.

The Whitewashing of Fatty Arbuckle.

The National Catholic Welfare Council will call on its affiliated organizations "to prevent the showing of Arbuckle films." The general secretary of the international committee of the Young Men's Christian Association deplors the act of "reinstatement," pointing to the hundreds of thousands of growing boys in the membership of the organization to whom this act is a public evil example. Women's clubs all over the country are protesting. Even the mayor of Los Angeles declares that public sentiment is opposed to the showing of Arbuckle pictures.

The truth is that the Hays decision was based, not on any broad and substantial foundation of public interest and morality, but on a mental flabbiness that seizes many at this time of year, a flabbiness that is mistaken for Christian charity, and that results in weak-minded governors turning a certain number of convicts loose as a Christmas present. Mr. Hays' announcement was more in accord with the emotional surcharge of the tent-meeting revival than the experience and judgment of a man recently in contact with the realities of serious affairs. Like all sentimentality, it is at once the negation of reason and of justice, and where the issue is an obvious one the public is able to see it in that light. It does not always see things so. It is treated to an unconscionable quantity of slop by "idealists" and meddlers of all sorts who mistake feeling for reason and rely on the public to do likewise, and are too often met half way. But this time the flub-dub fails. And its author, justly enough, loses a large measure of public consideration.

Likewise, the insidious practice of Prussianizing our arts and industries by the extension of central dictation, as in the field of baseball and the stage, a practice which if it accomplished anything would soon destroy individuality and initiative, has received, we hope, a salutary setback. We are suffering from excessive government. We are trying dictatorship in every department of life. Liberty appears to have been forgotten. That is an evil thing. But there is some hope in the situation when dictatorship falls so far below infallibility that its deficiencies are patent. It is too bad that old lesson seems never permanently acquired, but it is much that when forgotten it can be learned again.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Pertinent Queries.

CHICAGO, December 20, 1922.

TO THE EDITOR—Sir: While a part-time resident of California I was first attracted to the Argonaut by propinquity, then by curiosity, then and almost immediately by overflowing sympathy. I have used none other since, and now the Argonaut faithfully follows me into these Eastern fastnesses. I lend my copy frequently to kindred spirits and the effect is almost always the same. I know no periodical like it for rightness, trenchant force, and sound English.

As I look around me in these bad days I am moved to reflect on the tragedy of the present submergence of the old American stock, the stock which first made our land vital and free, but which at an incredible moment of fate fell under the obsession of material numbers, the glamour of the idea of asylum for the oppressed, and the superstition of the melting-pot. Was this one of the ineluctable results of the cataclysm of our civil war?

Now we are no longer free, or we are fast on the way to that. Now the unlovely strain of harsh and domineering Purianism, long ago hot in our blood, reappears as by a sort of throwback and chokes its vital currents. Now we feebly bend and call at every turn for the coddling of the state. Mollycoddles! Is our stock degenerate? Does our blood run thin? Or has the perilous foreign stuff stifled and choked us? And the worst of our shames is that recreants of American lineage, parlor intellectuals, irresponsible lightweights, are helping on the process.

A grave peril of the times is that there are so few journals like the Argonaut. It is doubtless a matter of pride to Californians that it is local to them. It should be national and under the eyes of all of the breed.

When one looks around where does one see another outstanding journal which expresses vividly the old national ideals? The World's Work, perhaps, but with less certainty. Occasionally an editorial in the Saturday Evening Post. And here and there local newspapers. The case goes by default.

F. I. CARPENTER.

Australian Political Experience

KAMUELA, HAWAII, H. T., December 12, 1922.
TO THE EDITOR—Sir: The leading article, "Toward Higher Ground," in your issue of 2d instant will undoubtedly cause a good deal of discussion. I read both it and your extracts from Dr. Butler's speech with interest. You both seem to have missed one point. Having obtained your new cleavage of parties, with the radicals on the one side and the conservatives on the other, there will be considerable danger of handing the government over to the radical class.

The position in the United States now is strikingly similar to that in Australia twenty years ago. There were the two traditional parties, Free-trade and Protectionist, with Labor, the third party, holding the balance of power between them. This Labor party was composed of unionist workers and their sympathizers, was the child of one of the big strikes, and was profoundly class-conscious and radical. Thinking men in Australia at that time, chafing under the minority rule of the Labor party and deciding that the fiscal issue was dead, decided to force the Labor party into direct opposition, and accordingly formed the Anti-Socialist party under George Reid out of the conservative element in both the old parties. Reid was perhaps the cleverest practical politician in Australia. However, he was unable to prevent the force of numbers telling. The workers are the majority in any civilized community, and if they can be persuaded to vote as a body they must control any country where adult suffrage obtains. The very fact of forming the Anti-Socialist party stiffened the ranks of the labor element and before long they were in power. They used their first term of office to force through preference to unionists, compulsory arbitration, and other class measures, thus solidifying and enlarging their party. Matters came to such a pass that all workers, even civil servants and professional men, had to join the Labor party or be smashed. The result is that for some years they have had control of federal, state, and municipal government—in fact, they have had the whole country hog-tied.

In my opinion a similar result is certain in the United States when once the highly-organized labor unions see the tremendous gains that they can make in politics through perfectly constitutional means. There is only one way to beat them and that is to keep them divided. Let them bore from within; they will do less damage than if, having formed their own party, they gain control of the country.

HAROLD BLOMFIELD.

A National Problem.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 19, 1922.
TO THE EDITOR—Sir: I was very happy to see your article in the December 9th number of the Argonaut, entitled "Reducing Feeble-Mindedness."

It moved me to write the state commission in lunacy for data, and I find food for thought, and, I hope, action.

In 1900 the number of patients in our five hospitals for the insane numbered 5286 and the cost was $767,123.51 for their care. This does not include the home at Sonoma for the feeble-minded, nor the schools for delinquents at Ventura and Whittier. In 1910 there were 7476 patients and it cost nearly a million and a half dollars for maintenance. In 1920 the number of patients had grown to 10,355 and the cost to $2,996,480. In the Sonoma Hospital for the Feeble-Minded there are now 1394 inmates and nearly 1000 applicants are awaiting admittance, kept out by lack of room. In five counties—Los Angeles, San Francisco, San Bernardino, Alameda and Napa—there are 2303 mental defectives. This does not include a large number of cases treated in their homes.

Mental defectiveness is not a disease that can be treated medically—it is due to heredity. Feeble-minded parents give us feeble-minded children. Twenty-five per cent. of the inmates of the penal institutions are feeble-minded—at least 40 per cent. of prostitutes are mentally defective.

Unless we take action and prevent at least the known mental defectives from propagating we are criminally negligent. During the past two years at the Sonoma Hospital for the Feeble-Minded 220 sterilizations were done. A step forward—but not enough.

It would be pertinent to tell the story of the Jukes family.

Very cordially, H. S. MOORE, M. D.

Discriminating Approval.

SAN FRANCISCO, December 26, 1922.
EDITOR ARGONAUT: I want to congratulate you upon your editorials this week, particularly upon the "Subsidies for All" and "Schools and Economy." While I do not agree in toto with all you say about subsidies, because there are good subsidies and bad subsidies, the trouble with our form of government is that it has no flexibility in common sense, and while one good subsidy finds its way on the statute books there are a dozen which are simply the result of the political swapping that has become so scandalous a part of our legislation.

In regard to schools and economy, I am in full sympathy with the text of your article, and it should be read by every voter in the state. No one can ask a university graduate in these days to read, write, or spell without discovering that not one can be found that can read intelligently, write legibly, or spell correctly; and the simple forms of mathematics are a lost art.

Why the amount of a girl's exposure of her limbs and bosom should be a matter of taxation, and why the president of a great university should be harassed to decide just what it should be, is beyond the ken of the man who was brought up in an atmosphere which taught that only the serious things of life were worth while and had a place in the curriculum of a university. The strictly ornamental things should be left to private initiative, and no poor man's property should be taxed for anything but the necessities of existence and the promotion of an education that would make for the permanent betterment of human life. The Argonaut is to be congratulated upon its wise and sensible attitude on these questions.

I. H. MORSE.

European railroad experts say German railroads are now better equipped than they were before the war, both as to quantity and quality of rolling stock.

VOICES FROM THE PRESS.

LLOYD GEORGE'S MEMOIRS.

(New York Times.)

It was announced in yesterday's Times that the contract for the publication of Mr. Lloyd George's memoirs in the New York Times, the Chicago Tribune, and a large number of the leading journals of this country and Canada associated with them, had been canceled on the initiative of those two papers. The contract was made several months ago, while Mr. Lloyd George was still premier, but on the understanding that the work had been begun and that delivery might be expected early in 1923.

Shortly after leaving office, two months ago, he made a contract with an American syndicate to write articles upon political questions, which may run two years. Mr. Lloyd George feels that this will not interfere with the memoirs. He says that he must "take ample time" in writing them, though without "unnecessary delay." These are not quite the expectations that were encouraged when the memoirs were offered for sale. The New York Times and the Chicago Tribune felt, however, that the articles to be written under the other contract must interfere largely with the subject matter of the memoirs, as well as postponing completion quite beyond the limit of their original understanding. The New York Times had an opportunity, through friendly intervention at the last moment, to purchase these other articles. Had it done so, and attempted to sell them to other newspapers in this country, it would have felt somewhat as if it were selling the same merchandise twice. The memoirs, already bought and partly paid for, were to be delivered not immediately, now that the author was free from the cares of office, but at some time approaching the limit that had been granted to cover the contingency of his remaining long engrossed in the arduous occupations of a British prime minister. Something represented as different from the memoirs, but apparently to be drawn largely from the same knowledge and materials, was to be delivered at once, and paid for again.

Mr. Lloyd George explained in a letter to the managing editor of the Times, dated December 1st, that "after seventeen years in office I have retired a poor man, and it is absolutely imperative that I should turn to writing as a means of livelihood. The proceeds of the book for which you hold the serial rights are, as you know, to be given to charity."

This gift to charity, however, was made by Mr. Lloyd George on his own initiative, following severe criticism in the British press of his action in selling his memoirs while still in office. When the New York Times and the Chicago Tribune first committed themselves to the purchase nothing had been said about charity. It was understood that Mr. Lloyd George was, as he says, a poor man; but the price offered him for his memoirs by all the buyers together was more than $400,000, and this was supposed to be a sufficient incentive to lead to their prompt production. That incentive seems to have disappeared when Mr. Lloyd George announced his purpose to give this money away. The two newspapers which had made the engagement, without being able to foresee that the incentive to which they had so largely contributed might thus disappear, felt that his contract with them should not be adversely affected by his self-imposed burden of charity. Mr. Lloyd George's impulse to charity, of course, does him credit, but it loses some of its charm when it is perceived that it was to become fruitful only at heavy damage to others.

In the circumstances we have felt that justice to our readers and to those papers which had bought or would have bought rights of publication of the memoirs in other parts of the United States and Canada called for cancellation of a contract for goods whose delivery was to be subordinated to the fulfillment of later engagements.

A LESSON FROM HISTORY.

(Wall Street Journal.)

It is highly to the credit of the New York World's news conscience that it gave front-page publicity to the Malone report on the Lusitania. It was made three weeks after the sinking of that vessel by the Germans and was submitted to President Wilson and his Cabinet through Secretary McAdoo, the immediate superior of the collector of the port of New York, Dudley Field Malone. It is also to the credit of the World that it refrains from editorial comment, if only for reasons of policy. Almost any fool can write an editorial—and many do—but it requires an editor of parts to know when to say nothing.

It is not difficult to see, with the perspective of history cleared by time, why the report was not published when it was submitted. It is clear that the Lusitania carried no contraband, no "masked" guns, or disguised "Canadian soldiers," no explosive, that it mounted no gun platforms. A German affidavit published in this country at that time swore to all this without contradiction from Mr. McAdoo or Mr. Wilson, who knew the facts because they had them direct from Malone after a most exhaustive search of the ship. Why did not Wilson release that report, especially when Bernstorff was publishing affidavits and inventing ex post facto evidence?

It was because Mr. Wilson was pledged to an impossible neutrality. He had assumed the line of "wrong on both sides" before and continued to hold it afterwards—that there was no moral difference between the delay of an American vessel in an English port, under suspicion of indirect contraband, with an accepted liability for damages, and sinking of passenger vessels by the Germans without pretense of visit or search. Mr. Wilson would permit no man working for him to be right when he was wrong. This was the unforgivable offense General Leonard Wood committed in the matter of preparedness, unforgivably endorsed by Lindley Garrison, Secretary of War.

Pacifism, sycophancy, incompetence, the suppression of facts and evidence to which the public was entitled, waste and worse than waste, the deception of Congress and the taxpayer—all these were tolerable to a phrase-making pedagogue with delusions of infallibility brought from the schoolroom to the White House. But the truth, when it endangered the fabric of false moralities Mr. Wilson had built up, was intolerable and must be forthwith suppressed. "Open covenants openly arrived at" was at that time a self-deluding phrase of the future. Even Mr. Wilson could not have used it then.

It is not difficult to realize what the temper of the American people would have been in May, 1915, if the facts about the Lusitania had been promptly published. It would have meant war—and it would have shortened the world war by at least two years.

BAD CONSTITUTION MAKING.

(Atascadero News.)

Illinois voters have rejected, by an overwhelming majority of some 600,000 votes, a new constitution, which was two years in framing and whose preparation cost a vast sum of money. This tremendous defeat was not because of any special inherent viciousness or weakness or any inferiority to the present fundamental law of the state, other than its great length. It grew out of the very length of time taken to frame it and the multitude of petty details incorporated into it. Those details all affected some citizens unfavorably, one affecting one voter and one another voter. It was the combination of these mul-hostilities which swamped the document, which was a good thing for the State of Illinois.

The result of those two years of constitution framing was a glaring example of what a constitution should not be. It was a mass of legislation, most all of it having no legitimate place in a fundamental law. It is safe to say that had the document been short and simple, merely determining the character and powers of the government, leaving legislation for the exercise of those powers to the legislative body, the vote would have been almost overwhelmingly favorable. Missouri is now framing a similar document, which is apparently destined to a like fate.

It is full time that our people understood that a statute book is not a constitution, that such a document should merely define the powers of the legislature and not do the detailed work of legislation. We have gone far in our constitutions from the original model of the constitution of the United States, which has existed now for 135 years and has been amended but nineteen times. Not a single state which has framed a constitution during the past thirty years has been content to follow that model, with the result that the simplicity and effectiveness of our Federal Constitution are lost in a mass of legislation in the state documents.

The amendments voted upon at the last election in California exceeded the total length of the Federal Constitution several times, to be added to a constitution already voluminous in legislative details now needing changes to make them effective or suitable to new conditions. It is to be hoped that the next constitutional convention in any state will return to the true model by simply outlining a frame of government, define the powers and duties of the executive, legislative, and judicial branches and the rights of the people, and leave to succeeding legislation the details of performing those duties, exercising those powers and protecting those rights.

It is also to be hoped that any future amendments to the Constitution of California presented to the people for adoption, whether by legislature or by the initiative, will be short, concise, plain, and merely confer upon the state the specific powers, to be exercised as may be defined in subsequent legislation. The people should consistently vote against any amendment which is not of that character, regardless of whether or not they approve the principle involved. They should especially be on their guard against the possibility of private interests becoming entrenched in the constitution, and, as well, any scheme devised for the assumed protection of the people from such interests which may not prove to be a wise and practicable one.

RELIGIONISTS IN POLITICS.

(Boston Transcript.)

"You can not mix politics and religion. Try as you will, they won't blend. And if you think you can do it, you attack, as a result, real Americanism in the bargain."

Governor Parker of Louisiana gave to his fellow-governors, in annual session assembled, food for serious thought when he addressed to them these warning words in the course of his exposure of the curse that the Ku Klux Klan has fastened upon his own state. That organization, whose poisonous roots are rapidly spreading to every section of the country, is a reductio ad absurdum of religionists in politics. Its avowed purpose is the promotion of Protestantism by the entrance of Protestants as Protestants for Protestantism into the arena of American politics. The excuse offered by the Klansmen is that only by the methods of the Klan and behind the masks of the Klansmen can the control of our government by religionists who are not Protestants be prevented. To gain adherents for their wing of Christendom the Klansmen proclaim themselves the only Simon-pure agency for the promotion of the political power of Americans of native birth and Anglo-Saxon ancestry. They whisper from behind their masks that, unless they are permitted to terrorize the duly-elected officers of government in this country into obedience to the dictates of the Klan, the particular race and the coalition of religionists to which the Klansmen belong will be deprived of political power by citizens of other races who worship another God or worship the same God in another way.

Governor Parker has put his finger upon the source and scourge of this anti-American organization. It is the inevitable result—religionists in politics. All true believers in Straight Americanism believe whole-heartedly in the absolute separation of church and state. This separation is one of the foundation stones of the republic. Europe's ways are not America's ways in this vital matter. The fact that church and state in Europe are not separate is no reason why they should not be wholly divorced one from the other in free and tolerant America. Any rabbi, pastor, or priest, any member of any organization, fraternal, political, religious, civic or educational, any agent of any society of men or women, masked or unmasked, secret or otherwise, who attempts to break down the constitutional and truly American barrier that separates church and state in America is an enemy of the nation and will be so regarded and dealt with by every defender of Straight Americanism. It is not necessary to abdicate as an American in order to destroy an enemy of America. It is not necessary to overthrow the government of the Constitution and set up in its place the racial and religious despotism of the Klan in order to preserve constitutional government.

What the Klansmen are trying to do is to precipitate in the great American family a religious and racial war. They are not the first religionists in politics, they are only the latest. Their awful example, their violence and cowardice, should be a warning to their predecessors. At the time when the nation most needs union, religionists in politics are disseminating the seeds of disunion. At the time when religion in America needs true and unadulterated leadership, religionists in politics are offering a spurious leadership.

If the plain people of the land, representing as they do many walks of life, many religions and many races, could speak with one voice, we believe they would endorse every word of the warning of Governor Parker to the governors of the several states. The best way to drive religionists out of politics is to begin by unmasking the Ku Klux Klan. The time to do that is now and the place to begin is here and everywhere throughout the Union. In this cleansing crusade the forces of Straight Americanism—Americans by choice and Americans from birth—hold the right of the line.

THE EARNED WAGE.

(New York Times.)

In a letter in the Times Mr. Victor Morawetz suggests the substitution of an earned wage for the "living wage," the "saving wage," the standard wage and the rest. His argument is that wages must be proportioned to production. More can not be divided than is actually produced, yet millions seem to think the contrary. If wages are paid out of capital, the capital remaining must be less by as much as the wages exceed production. If profits were completely distributed to labor, they would not increase wages appreciably, so much larger is the total of wages than of profits. When capital is most abundant it competes for work and profit. The struggle of capital for its living wage can be maintained only by paying wages in working the investment so as to heighten production. Capital hates idleness worse than does labor. An idle dollar is an abhorrent economic thought.

Mr. Morawetz is at his best in demonstrating that production limits the amount which it is possible to distribute, and that inequality of distribution is juster than a minimum wage, an average wage, a living wage, and so on. Wages proportioned to production must be unequal because of unequal productive capacity. Any minimum wage which could conceivably be enforced would be less than an average wage. Nobody benefits by waste, in the manner of the many theoretical wages. It is not possible to make the theoretical family wage universal, because it would exceed the total production. Mr. Morawetz remarks that the efforts of unions to increase their wages above the average are natural, but that it is clear that the wages increased in that manner are at the cost of reducing the wages of others with equal claims.

OLD FAVORITES.

Ode to the North-East Wind.

Welcome, wild North-easter!
Shame it is to see
Odes to every zephyr;
Ne'er a verse to thee.
Welcome, black North-easter!
O'er the German foam;
O'er the Danish moorlands,
From thy frozen home.
Tired we are of summer,
Tired of gaudy glare,
Showers soft and steaming,
Hot and breathless air,
Tired of listless dreaming,
Through the lazy day:
Jovial wind of winter,
Turn us out to play!
Sweep the golden reed-beds;
Crisp the lazy dyke;
Hunger into madness
Every plunging pike.
Fill the lake with wild-fowl;
Fill the marsh with snipe;
While on dreary moorlands
Lonely curlew pipe.
Through the black fir-forest
Thunder harsh and dry,
Shattering down the snow-flakes
Off the curdled sky.
Hark! The brave North-easter!
Breast-high lies the scent,
On byholt and headland,
Over heath and bent.
Chime, ye dappled darlings,
Through the sleet and snow,
Who can over-ride you?
Let the horses go!
Chime, ye dappled darlings,
Down the roaring blast;
You shall see a fox die
Ere an hour be past.
Go! and rest tomorrow,
Hunting in your dreams,
While our skates are ringing
O'er the frozen streams.
Let the luscious South-wind
Breathe in lovers' sighs,
While the ladies gallants
Bask in ladies' eyes.
What does he do but soften
Heart alike and pen?
'Tis the hard grey weather
Breeds hard English men.
What's the soft South-wester?
'Tis the ladies' breeze,
Bringing home their true-loves
Out of all the seas:
But the black North-easter,
Through the snow-storm hurled,
Drives our English hearts of oak
Seaward round the world.
Come, as came our fathers,
Heralded by thee,
Conquering from the eastward,
Lords by land and sea.
Come; and strong within us
Stir the Vikings' blood;
Bracing brain and sinew;
Blow, thou wind of God!

—Charles Kingsley.

Song.

When I am dead, my dearest,
Sing no sad songs for me;
Plant thou no roses at my head,
Nor shady cypress tree:
Be the green grass above me
With showers and dewdrops wet;
And if thou wilt, remember,
And if thou wilt, forget.

I shall not see the shadows,
I shall not feel the rain;
I shall not hear the nightingale
Sing on, as if in pain;
And dreaming through the twilight
That doth not rise nor set,
Haply I may remember,
And haply may forget.

—Christina Georgina Rossetti.

The Holy Tide.

The days are sad, it is holy tide:
The Winter morn is short, the Night is long;
So let the lifeless Hours be glorified
With deathless thoughts and echo'd in sweet song:
And through the sunset of this purple cup
They will resume the roses of their prime,
And the old Dead will hear us and wake up,
Pass with dim smiles and make our hearts sublime.

The days are sad, it is the Holy tide:
Be dusky mistletoes and hollies strown,
Sharp as the spear that pierced His sacred side,
Red as the drops upon His thorny crown;
No haggard Passion and no lawless Mirth
Fright off the solemn Muse,—tell sweet old tales,
Sing songs as we sit brooding o'er the hearth,
Till the lamp flickers, and the memory fades.

—Frederick Tennyson.

A correspondent informs the Argonaut that the oft-quoted doggerel of local fame, "The Days of 'Forty-Nine," was written by a certain Dr. Putt, a pamphleteer versifier of pioneer days and author of "Joe Bowers," "Sweet Betsy from Pike," and other touching ditties.

Brazil has been a republic since November 15, 1889.

INDIVIDUALITIES.

General Ismet Pasha, the Kemalist foreign minister, is very deaf, can not speak English, and speaks French but haltingly—scarcely an ideal set of specifications for a diplomat.

Commander Adolphus Andrews, U. S. N., Annapolis, 1921, recently chief of staff to Admiral Jones of the Atlantic fleet, has been appointed to captain the President's yacht, Mayflower.

Miss Marie Raith, Cornell graduate, is said to be the only woman civil engineer in the country. Miss Raith is a strenuous field hockey-player and captain of the New York Edison Company's team.

Edgar Howard, new Democratic congressman from Nebraska, was formerly a tramp printer, later editor of the Columbus Telegram and lieutenant-governor of his state. He is always an able writer and orator.

Miss Clemence Dane, author of "The Bill of Divorcement" and "Will Shakespeare," and the most successful of contemporary woman dramatists, has had a varied career. She has been a schoolteacher, actress, designer of posters after the manner of Aubrey Beardsley, an enthusiastic political feminist and a novelist as well as a playwright. Her real name is Winifred Ashton, her pen name evidently having been inspired by that of the famous church in the Strand. She is described as tall and slim, with attractive, well-marked features.

Dr. Melanie Lipinska, who is visiting this country to investigate methods used in the schools for the blind, is a famous Polish woman physician who has herself been blind for the past ten years. She was not threatened with blindness till she was nineteen years old; but she did not then let the possibility effect her intention to study medicine. Since her own affliction developed her interest has been largely in the reeducation of the blind—a field in which she has done notable work in France, Belgium, Poland, Finland and England. Dr. Lipinska, who comes to the United States as an official delegate, representing the Oculist Society of Warsaw, will in addition to examining conditions in our schools for the sightless, lecture on her methods of reeducating the scholars.

Coming into the new Congress next March, Representative Frederick H. Gillett of Massachusetts, Speaker of the House, will have new honor and dignity as the veteran member—not veteran by seniority of age, which distinction goes to General Isaac R. Sherwood, who returns in his eighty-eighth year—but veteran by length of service. Speaker Gillett on March 3, 1923, will have completed thirty years of continuous service in the House, and by that very token is believed to hold the all-time record for continuous service. "Uncle Joe" Cannon will be going out with the record of forty-six years, which will probably never be equaled in the future, as it never was in the past—but Cannon's service was not consecutive, as Speaker Gillett's has been. Senator Lodge began his continuous service in the Senate on the same date as Gillett in the House—March 4, 1893.

One of the best versed of Western diplomats in Oriental affairs is Giacomo de Martino, recently the representative of the Italian government in London. De Martino has been transferred as ambassador to Japan, probably on the principle that his Oriental training was wasted at St. James. In going to Tokio he is returning to the scenes of his youth, as his father was minister plenipotentiary in that capital and had previously been chargé d'affaires at Peking. De Martino spent several years in Egypt as secretary of legation and later as minister during Kitchener's control, when he became a special friend of the British field marshal. During the war of Italy with Turkey and the two Balkan campaigns, which immediately preceded the great international conflagration, De Martino was principal under secretary of state and chief lieutenant of the then minister of foreign affairs, the Marquis of San Giuliano. He was one of the delegates to the peace conference of Versailles and spent eighteen months as ambassador at Berlin before being transferred to London.

Geoffrey Shakespeare, formerly Lloyd George's private secretary, is one of a half-dozen promising youngsters who have been elected to the new Parliament, all of whom are staunch followers of the little Welshman. The name of Shakespeare, though fairly celebrated in England, has not hitherto figured in politics; and it is noteworthy that the young M. P. of that name, his brother William, and their sister, Mary Arden, are all recognized minor poets. They are the children of the Rev. John Howard Shakespeare, the leading Baptist divine of England, who is European secretary of the Baptist World Alliance. However, Geoffrey Shakespeare's literary ability is not limited to verse, minor or otherwise. It is an open secret about Downing Street that as the prime minister's secretary he wrote many of the former's speeches. He is particularly well informed in the field of English political history. He is a Cambridge man and was president of the famous Union of that university. Mr. Shakespeare is twenty-six years old, unmarried, tall, slim and red-haired. While none of the Shakespeares of the present day deny relationship with the bard of Avon, it should be remembered that the poet died in 1616, without male issue, and that none of his grandchildren had issue.

BEHIND THE GERMAN ARMIES.

Ludendorff's Reply to His Critics Shows the Difficulties He Had With the Nation.

When General Eric von Ludendorff was dismissed from his command as first quartermaster-general of the German armies at the time, late in October, 1918, that everything German was going to smash, he went to the town from which he started in 1914. There, as he says, his muscles stiffened and he returned home. The revolution seemed in a way to make it hot for him at that place, so he retired to Sweden and there wrote a book, recently reviewed in these columns, entitled in America "Ludendorff's Own Story" and in England "My War Memories." The book was written in the bitterness of defeat, and at a time when the nation had turned against him as the author of its troubles, as nations often do.

In this book General Ludendorff told some unwelcome truths and presented the entire matter in an apparently truthful way. There was more rasping at him in guttural accents, and so, to prove his case, the general has written another book. This presents documents, memoranda, and notes of meetings, together with state papers and other information, going to prove the statements made in the first publication. The two should be taken together, for the second work is needed to round out the first. It is entitled "The General Staff and Its Problems." It might have had the word "German" in the title, but it has not. The omission may be explained on the theory that Ludendorff considers there was only one general staff worthy the name in the war, however much the results proved otherwise.

While the story is not a connected one, the reader will get therefrom a fairly clear notion of what was going on in Germany during the war, and the troubles with which the army and the nation had to contend. The relations with America and the comment on the Americans is of interest. The documents included were written by various men, and in presenting excerpts it is unnecessary to name the writer in every case, the purpose being to set forth conditions rather than the controversy among the Germans that forms the reason for the publication.

Ludendorff starts in the pre-war period, and, of course, dwells on the contention that sufficient preparation was not made. The old method of spurring up a lagging government to devote money to military preparation by citing the work of possible enemies was worked to the limit. The following, by Von Moltke, is a sample:

Against the view, the existence of which has occasionally come to my knowledge, that the aircraft organization in France really exists only on paper or will remain there, I must protest that this is a dangerous piece of self-deception. Even if there are still lacuna in the 1912 scheme of organization they still have so great a start in comparison with our measures that the French have a perfect right to look upon their extraordinary superiority in this department with proud satisfaction. It needs no argument to show that in a war that superiority will be associated with all kinds of disadvantages for us. It is therefore in the highest degree regrettable that with us the same attention is not being devoted (and if I am to accept the memo. in question, will not be devoted) to the air service.

There was no deception as to the attitude that Italy would assume, as this first excerpt will show, but the white innocence of Germany is set forth in the second:

While Germany and Austria will be fighting for their existence, Italy will hardly be threatened; she will not be attacked directly, for in a war with Germany neither England nor France will be in a position to send an expeditionary force to Italy. If she makes any sort of an attempt to protect her coasts, nothing serious can happen to her. If, therefore, she takes part in the war, it will not be because she has to fight for her existence like Germany and Austria, but by virtue of her alliances, and we can calculate with fair certainty that we can not count on a whole-hearted and wholesale employment of her military forces. She will adopt an attitude of cautious reserve and wait to see how events develop on the other side of the Alps in order to be able to retire without material loss if the two other allies suffer defeat. . . .

As in the case of the Triple Alliance, the Triple Entente holds itself out as a defensive compact. But while the idea of defense expressly forms the basis of the agreement between the Triple Alliance, marked offensive tendencies are to be observed in the Triple Entente, i. e., positive objectives, the attainment of which must seem worth fighting for to the members of that association. Russia has a not unnatural ambition to appear as the protagonist of Slavdom in Europe as the result of the overthrow of Austria; she also wishes to secure an outlet to the Adriatic with the help of Serbia. Austria has the defensive interest of preventing that.

France wants to recover her lost provinces and take her revenge for the defeats of 1870. Germany, on the other hand, only desires to retain her possessions.

England wants the help of her allies to rid her of the nightmare of German sea-power. Germany is not thinking of destroying the English fleet; here again she only wishes to defend herself. Thus at all points there are offensive plans on one side, defensive on the other.

With true German inability to see things as others do, there is revealed the intention of the government to make the nation believe as the government desired about the causes of the war, and also to violate Belgium in accordance with the war plan laid down many years before by General Count von Schlieffen:

Yet even if we succeed in framing the casus belli in such a way that the nation takes up arms with one mind and real enthusiasm, as things are now we shall not be able to face our heavy task with confidence. As the military resources of the country have long since ceased to bear any relation to the number of men fit to bear arms, the numerical strength of the army, as I shall show later, will not suffice to cope with our future task.

If there is no change in the political situation in Europe, Germany's central position will compel her to form a front on several sides. We shall therefore have to hold one front defensively with comparatively weak forces in order to be able to take the offensive on the other. That front can only be the French. A speedy decision may be hoped for on that side, while an offensive against Russia would be an interminable affair. But if we are to take the offensive against France, it would be necessary to violate the neutrality of Belgium.

All the above was written in 1912, a year and a half before the war started.

The labor situation occupied the attention of the staff, and the general says, with much truth:

But above all I must insist that a War Work Act is primarily an act of common justice. Especially in view of the universal suffrage it is a crying injustice that some men (and these on the average the best and most useful to the state) should have to sacrifice their lives and health in fighting and be most seriously prejudiced in their callings in civil life, while others remain at home in safety, and in many cases, unfortunately, do nothing but work for their own profit. Even though a large part of the nation shows the highest sense of self-sacrifice there is another section of which the reverse is the truth.

The use of Belgian labor gets its share of attention from the staff:

If all these measures are taken we shall succeed in obtaining voluntarily large numbers of workmen from Belgium and Russian Poland for war work in Germany. If, after the possibilities of this method have been exhausted, there is still a large number of useful men who have not been secured, there will be nothing left for it but calling-up by way of compulsion. Objections founded on international law must not hold us back; they must give way before the inexorable necessity of finding the most productive employment in war industries for all labor under German control.

The compulsory enrollment of Belgian labor can not be dispensed with, particularly in view of the work required by directors of military railways in the occupied districts of France. Recruitment of Belgian labor for this purpose must be carried on in every possible way, because otherwise it will be impossible to fetch a large number of prisoners of war, held up there at the moment, for urgent work at home, for which their labor is absolutely vital. . . .

Nor is it unknown to your excellency that the imperial government has addressed an urgent request to me that, in administering the region entrusted to me, I shall create a situation which will survive the war. In endeavoring to administer this country in a manner which German prestige in the world requires, and in striving to bring about a state of affairs which will enable Belgium to be used as an instrument for the reestablishment of Germany's world position, I am only pursuing the aim of turning the war to good account in the interests of our Fatherland.

The submarine campaign forms and will continue to be the subject of acrimonious discussion in Germany for many a day. There is a consensus that it failed to meet expectations, that the assumptions of the naval men were not realized, and that, by bringing in America, it turned the scales against Germany and caused her defeat. While this is conceded, no one wants to be responsible for authorizing the policy that brought disaster. Concerning this the letters show a divergence of opinion, as was to be expected. Hollweg, the chancellor, writes:

Your majesty's navy promises itself a rapid success with the now largely increased number of U-boats and, in view of the economic situation of England, a success which would compel our principal foe, England, to make peace in a few months after the inauguration of an unrestricted submarine campaign.

Count Bernstorff will discuss the matter with Colonel House—the medium through whom your majesty's ambassador deals with the President—and ascertain the intentions of Mr. Wilson. Any intervention by the President for the sake of peace, which had better seem spontaneous, could rely on a good reception among us, and that alone would mean victory for Wilson in his election campaign.

Hindenburg writes to the chancellor:

From the telegram referred to I believe I need no longer assume that your excellency had any other view of the question of responsibility than that which I credited you. I understand that point of view thoroughly. But I should be glad of an answer to this letter in order to know for certain how far the responsibility for the intensified submarine campaign rests on the shoulders of main headquarters.

To which Hollweg replies:

I have the honor to reply that at the conferences held in Pless on the 30 and 31 August I reserved my final opinion on the inauguration of the unrestricted submarine campaign—as I then expressly emphasized—until your excellency had defined your attitude on the matter. Your excellency there gave it as your standpoint that however anxious you were for the employment of this most ruthless weapon the uncertain military situation, especially with regard to the friendly or unfriendly attitude of Holland and Denmark, did not enable you to give a decision one way or the other. . . . But as that unrestricted U-boat campaign is directed, not only against enemy, but also neutral ships, it directly affects our relations with neutral states and thus represents an act of foreign policy. Moreover, the ruthless submarine campaign can not be begun until we have withdrawn the concessions made to the United States of America with regard to the conduct of submarine operations, and also until we have modified the agreements made with Denmark and Sweden.

Ludendorff wrote Zimmerman at the end of 1916:

After Lloyd George has refused our peace offer by his declaration in the House of Commons, I am convinced, in view of the impressions I have gained on the western front, that the U-boat campaign must now be inaugurated in full force.

They wrangled about the matter for a long time, Hindenburg and Ludendorff insisting on starting, and Hollweg trying to impress them with some adequate notion of the difficulties with neutrals, especially America. Bernstorff warned them of the possibility of war with the United States and of our resources, but in the end the powerful military chiefs overcame the civil authorities with results that are known. They were all responsible, and the world is not much concerned with apportioning the guilt.

The various peace movements take up a considerable part of the book. At the end of 1906, when the battle of the Somme died down, Germany very much wished for peace. She still held much territory, the Roumanians had been defeated, and it was a good time to trade on the status then existing. President Wilson took a hand in the game and tried to get some talk of peace. His note of December 16, 1916, is printed in full and in it is the much-discussed phrase that caused consternation in England and in America:

He (the President) takes the liberty of calling attention to the fact that the objects which the statesmen of the belligerents on both sides have in mind in this war are virtually the same, as stated in general terms to their own people and to the world. Each side desires to make the rights and privileges of weak peoples and small states as secure against aggression or denial in the future as the rights and privileges of the great and powerful states now at war. Each wishes itself to be made secure in the future, along with all other nations and peoples, against the recurrence of wars like this, and against aggression or selfish interference of any kind.

The reply of the Allied powers to this suggestion was prompt:

The Allied governments believe that they must protest in the most friendly, but in the most specific manner against the assimilation established by the American note between the two groups of belligerents; this assimilation, based upon public declarations by the Central Powers, is in direct opposition to the evidence, both as regards responsibility for the past and as concerns guarantees for the future; President Wilson in mentioning it certainly had no intention of associating himself with it.

Much ink will be spent on this subject in the future. The letters of Walter Page and of Franklin Lane show how these men felt when, after two and one-half years of war, the President of the United States could see no difference between the aims of the belligerents. Later, he came to see clearly the difference, and to express it in language so forcible as to make his statements one of the most effective assaults on the German position.

Shortly after the peace moves of Germany, and of the President, in 1916, Count Czernin, in April, 1917, reviewed the situation for the Emperor Karl. The Austro-Hungarian Empire was rapidly disintegrating and the dynasty was in danger. Czernin concealed nothing from his imperial master. He said:

Here I can not leave on one side, however painful it may be, the theme on which the whole structure of my argument is based. It is the danger of revolution which is appearing on the horizon of all Europe, and which is supported by England and represents her latest method of warfare. Five monarchs have been dethroned in this war, and the ridiculous ease with which the strongest monarchy in the world has been overthrown may prove some inducement to reflect and remember the words, Exempla trahunt. It is no good to answer me that Germany and Austria-Hungary are in a different position or to object that the monarchical idea is firmly rooted in Berlin and Vienna and excludes such a possibility. This war has ushered in a new era of world history; it has no precedent and no prologue. The world is no longer what it was three years ago, and it is useless to search history for analogies for the events which are of everyday occurrence in these times. Any statesman who is not blind or deaf must see that the dumb desperation of the public is increasing daily. He is bound to hear the sullen murmurs which can be heard among the broad masses, and must reckon with that factor if he still retains a sense of responsibility.

The declaration of war by America has certainly made the situation materially worse. It may be that months will pass before America can bring considerable forces into the theatres of war, but the moral impetus, the fact that the Entente is hoping for fresh and powerful aid, transforms the situation to our disadvantage because our enemies have obviously more time than we have and can wait longer, unfortunately, than we can.

It devolved upon Ludendorff to make a showing of the military situation, which he did, and the war went on. The brother-in-law of Emperor Karl made trips to Paris and tried to bring about peace, but failed. Ludendorff says that during the war and at the time he wrote his "War Memories," he believed Czernin loyal. Disillusionment has come since then, and now he suspects his own government:

I look at the matter in a different light now. I suspect, and do not hesitate to say so, that the German government was really informed about the peace efforts of Austria-Hungary. There was, therefore, no reason to demand any "expiation" from the Dual Monarchy.

Much more is to be found in the book. Ludendorff appears in it as growing more and more powerful and directing the affairs of the entire nation. The chancellor went down to defeat, and for a time the general was the virtual dictator. All forms of activity were under his control and there was no function of German life that did not receive his attention. He carried the burden well and was able to continue the struggle until the nation was exhausted. Even then he called for greater and greater effort, which was not forthcoming. He saw things from the military point of view and could not conceive of any course but to go on until about all the Germans were killed. But his clear vision at last saw defeat both of his army and of the nation, and he warned the authorities to make peace.

There is no use in the Germans reviling Ludendorff. He represented Germany as the nation was. He was the most able of them all and led the nation on the course it wanted to follow. Then when defeat and disaster overtook him they used their real king as a scapegoat upon which to load the odium of defeat. In reading his books one can not but have respect for this able man, however bad his aims, for he stands so far above them all, when the sorry Kaiser and his sorry son form the background. There is much useful data in the book for those who desire to preserve the annals of the war that is now fading into the past.

THE GENERAL STAFF AND ITS PROBLEMS. By General Ludendorff. Translated by F. A. Holt. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; two volumes, $15.

BANKING AND INVESTMENT NEWS.

San Francisco bank clearings for the week ending December 23, 1922, were $150,400,000; for the corresponding week of last year, $123,500,000; an increase of $26,900,000.

Henley & Scott, general insurance agents, announce the appointment of Edwin Murray as office manager of their organization, to take place January 1, 1923. Mr. Murray was formerly general manager of a large fire office of London, England, and has had a wide experience in the fire insurance business.

Once more Seattle is all torn up over a distinued during the past week and a number of individual issues have scored new high prices for the year. What is very significant is that the present rally has exceeded in extent any previous rally since the beginning of the decline in mid-October. Technically this is a strong indication that the market trend is again upward. However, the strength has been confined largely to the industrial section of the list. The rails have rallied only moderately, but there are signs even here that the worst has been seen. Taking everything into consideration, the chances decidedly favor the conclusion that the primary upward movement is not over, and that last month's decline, severe as it was, was only in the nature of technical correction of a very much overbought position.

The developments of the past week have been of a distinctly constructive character. President Harding, in his message to Congress, made it very plain that the Administration will oppose with all its power legislation of a radical or confiscatory sort. His recommendations regarding the encouragement of railway combinations and the pooling of freight cars are quite in accord with sound financial and business judgment. The Secretary of the Treasury's report shows that steady improvement is being maintained in the government's finances and that there is no likelihood of a necessity for increased taxation, something which is truly enheartening to Wall Street. His reference to business conditions here and to economic progress abroad is also most reassuring.

The continued rise of Sterling exchange until it is only about 30 cents below parity, the advance of Italian lire to over 5 cents, and the steadiness of the German mark during the past month, in spite of the enormous further increase of around 300,000,000,000 in the outstanding paper issue, are all hopeful signs that real progress is being made toward a settlement of the German reparations question, which is the real crux of the economic recovery of Europe. The actual news coming from the various conferences on the matter is so conflicting that the course of the exchanges is probably the most trustworthy source of information.

According to the report just issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the net operating incomes for October of the Class I railroads show a return of only 4.05 per cent. on their tentative valuation. This is disappointing, being even poorer than a year ago, but is explainable because of increased equipment maintenance expense due to the strikes and to less revenue as a result of the horizontal reduction in freight rates put into effect late in the summer. However, the effect of the strikes should be overcome soon and heavier traffic should compensate to a considerable degree for the lower freight rates.

Steel trade activity continues without let-up, and while the December 9th unfilled tonnage statement of the United States Steel Corporation shows a slight decrease, this is not significant and is not likely to be repeated for some time. In fact, almost all lines of industry throughout the country are reported to be in a flourishing condition. It seems, therefore, that in the security markets the opportunities still lie on the buying side.—The Trader.

Steel ingot production from April 1st to October 1st averaged a rate of about 34,500,000 tons a year. Rate in October was about 40,000,000 tons and in November probably a trifle greater. There is no evidence of curbing production on account of lack of orders.

Financial and markets in general continue quiet, as they have been for about six weeks. Mill operations are based chiefly on old orders and interest centres both on their extent and on the way buyers will be disposed in individual cases to instruct mills to curtail or postpone shipment.

With the advance of autumn and the advent of winter there has come a further change for the better in the aspects of general business, and it is highly gratifying to note that practically all financial discussions recently have been marked by a note of increasing cheerfulness and of conservative optimism regarding the future. It is not to be inferred from the foregoing that such improvement as has taken place has been uniform in all lines and departments of trade or that all localities of the country have been affected alike, for that is not the case, says John Grant Dater in Harper's Magazine. In the South, where the cotton crop has been moving rapidly on a basis of advancing prices, there has been a notable betterment and activity has expanded, also, in the industrial East, in the upper Mississippi Valley and on the Pacific Coast.

There has been a marked decrease in the production of automobiles, however—the total for September amounting to 186,562 passenger cars, and 18,843 motor trucks, contrasted with 263,027 passenger cars and 25,984 motor trucks in June (the crest of the wave)—and this pronounced contraction has reacted to some extent upon the automobile accessories business. The central territory, or certain sections thereof, has been more seriously affected, also, than some other localities by the loss of wages resulting from the coal and railroad strikes, the continued high cost of fuel, the shortage of labor and the congestion of railway transportation. Taking the country as a whole, however, and business—both wholesale and retail—is unquestionably better than it was a year ago. This is essentially true of the textile industry, which, according to the trade authorities, is more active than it has been on any other occasion in more than two years.

Tangible evidences of improvement are found in such indices of trade as bank clearings, railway car loadings, commercial failures, building operations, the production of iron and steel, and the like. For the week ending October 21st, for example, the total bank clearings of 118 cities throughout the country, as compiled by the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, amounted to $9,240,309,790, compared with $7,038,014,196 in the corresponding week last year, a gain of 31.3 per cent. The aggregate clearings for the same week in 1920 and 1919 were $8,794,124,886 and $9,119,680,147, respectively. There is nothing conclusive, of course, in a comparison of bank clearances of a single week, but the tendency of expansion disclosed at the end of October have continued over many months, the aggregate clearings (in round figures) for the nine months to and including September this year amounting to $277,484,000,000, as compared with $254,840,000,000 during the same nine months in 1921.

According to the statistics compiled by the American Railway Association, 935,079 carloads of revenue-producing freight, which is very close to the record, were moved by the carriers during September, and the demand for equipment has been so heavy that it has taxed the railways severely. This is clearly indicated by the fact that whereas there were 407,406 idle freight cars in the country last January there were but 11,785 unemployed cars, in good order, in September, and an actual shortage developed in October. While a considerable part of the increased car loadings is due to the movement of coal, a direct result of the strike, the loadings of merchandise and miscellaneous freight are in excess of last year. Bank clearings and car loadings are both measures or indices of business volumes; the most accurate measures or indices we have, and the figures show conclusively that the amount of business passing in the country today is much larger than a year ago.

In the way of statistics bearing upon the industrial depression, nothing for two full years past or since October, 1920, has been more unpleasant than the records of commercial bankruptcies. According to the figures collected through the mercantile agency of R. G. Dun & Co. the total number of purely business defaults in 1920 was 8881, involving total liabilities of $295,118,000. Of these failures 3498 with liabilities of $128,489,000 occurred during the last quarter of the year, and thereafter the disasters multiplied rapidly. There were, for example, no less than 19,652 bankruptcies in 1921, involving liabilities of

Reclamation District

No. 2060

Due July, 1942

To Yield

5.50%

$627,399,000, while up to and including September of the present year the number was augmented by 18,411 defaults with liabilities of $490,506,000. There is nothing cheerful in this record, of course, and the exhibit would be far more unpleasant if the failures of banks, bankers and the large number of brokerage firms that collapsed early this year were included in the totals. But they are not, for the figures deal only with commercial defaults.

It is hardly necessary to say that the evidences of improving business are not found

BONDS

$800,000
Fifth and Broadway Building
Company
First (Closed) Mortgage 6 1/2% Gold Bonds
(Secured upon a Leasehold Estate)

George H. Burr & Co.

KOHL BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO

|              |             |           |
|--------------|-------------|-----------|
| NEW YORK     | LOS ANGELES | CLEVELAND |
| BOSTON       | ATLANTA     | DETROIT   |
| PHILADELPHIA | CHICAGO     | PITTSBURG |
| SCRANTON     | ST. LOUIS   | SEATTLE   |

"A National Yet Personal Service"

in the sum total of bankruptcies, but in the progressive decline in the number of failures and of the liabilities involved. From an aggregate of 2723 defaults in January, 2331 in February, and 2463 in March, with liabilities of $73,796,000, $72,608,000, and $71,608,000, respectively, the record of casualties has diminished steadily until September, when failures, numbering 1566, were the smallest in any month since September a year ago, while the amount involved in the way of liabilities, $36,500,000, was the smallest since June, 1921. In other words, the mortality tables indicate, clearly and unmistakably, an ebb in the tide of disasters that has been running strong in the channels of business for more than two full years.

Building operations as indicated by the value of contracts awarded for new construc-

Private Wires
Coast to Coast

E. F. Hutton & Co.

MEMBERS
NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE
HUTTON BUILDING
Montgomery and Bush Sts.
HOTEL ST. FRANCIS
DEL MONTE HOTEL

CARSTENS & EARLES, INCORPORATED

GOVERNMENT, MUNICIPAL
AND CORPORATION BONDS

ESTABLISHED 1891

Ground Floor
California Commercial Union Building
San Francisco

Telephone Douglas 6050

SEATTLE LOS ANGELES SPOKANE SAN FRANCISCO

McDONNELL & Co.

And Other Leading Exchanges

633 Market St., at New Montgomery
SAN FRANCISCO
TELEPHONE SUTTER 7676
N. Y. Office, 120 Broadway
Los Angeles, 634 So. Spring St.

PRIVATE WIRES

cussion of whether a 5-cent street fare should be brought back.

The town owns its street-car system and the mayor now holding office won his election at that the city is hardly breaking even. The on the slogan of 5-cent fares. After he had a chance to examine the proposition at close quarters he has decided that he was wrong in advocating 5-cent fares, but his constituents, or at least a goodly number of them, are demanding that he keep his pre-election promises, says the Manufacturer.

At present Seattle charges 10 cents a ride; in wholesale lots the fare is 8-1-3 cents, and city council has been setting aside $20,000 a

H. M. Hinchman W. B. Wentz W. L. W. Miller
Hinchman, Wentz & Miller
General Agents
Fire Automobile
INSURANCE
Liability
Plate Glass
Compensation
30 Leidesdorf St. SAN FRANCISCO
Telephone Sutter 437

month for depreciation, while the state bureau of accountants requires a monthly depreciation charge of $57,000 a month. If the state bureau is right, the municipally-owned system is running behind about $37,000 a month, and yet the citizens are clamoring for 5-cent fares.

The deficit can not be made up by taxation, so says the Washington supreme court, and under the terms by which the city acquired the property the system must pay its own way.

The sponsors for the reduced fare claim there would be increased travel sufficient to produce as much money as the present rate, but unless Seattle were about twice its size that seems preposterous.

Portland, which has about the same population as Seattle, has cheaper fare. The traction company is owned by a private concern.

The advance in the stock market has con-tion, repairs, and for engineering undertakings were of record-breaking proportions from April to August this year, and so it is only natural that they should show some falling off, as they usually do—under normal conditions—with the approaching winter and the curtailment of out-of-door work. But the total amount involved in the contracts awarded during September in twenty-seven states of the country was $271,493,000, which assuredly indicates no slump in building and construction. To the contrary, with the exception of the months already mentioned (April to August)—when building contracts ranged between $293,636,000 and $362,500,000—the September figures represent the largest outlay contemplated for building since April, 1920, when contracts amounted to $304,974,000.

Such activity, past, present, and prospective, as you see disclosed in the statistics bearing upon building and construction, transportation and the like, suggests, naturally, an expanding volume of production of basic articles and in particular of iron and steel.

Sixty-five Sutter Street

BONDS

Ask to be placed on our mailing list for monthly circular and for data regarding various bond issues.

STEPHENS & COMPANY

SAN FRANCISCO OAKLAND
Los Angeles San Diego

Why under present-day conditions iron and steel has come to be regarded as the barometer of trade has never been more accurately and concisely stated than it was by Judge Elbert H. Gary of the United States Steel Corporation in an address before the American Iron and Steel Institute in the closing days of October. "Steel," he said, "is needed immediately for buildings and other structures, for railroads, for farms, for pipe lines, for canning, for equipment of every kind, for guns, tools and other implements of thousands of varieties, for wire ranging from the finest watch springs and piano strings to the largest cables, for cars, automobiles, aeroplanes and other vehicles for transportation of property and persons and for many other purposes."

Turning to the records of iron and steel production, you find that the output of pig iron during the year 1920 averaged 100,400 tons a day. During the depressing twelve months that made up the year 1921 the average production fell to 45,307 tons a day. The low point was attained in July, 1921, when the average daily production of pig iron was but 27,889 tons. The recovery that set in at that time has been slow, but it was progressive up to June last, when the daily average output was 78,701 tons. Then came a setback, the direct consequence of the coal and railway strikes, which forced the production down to a daily average of 58,586 tons in August. It was back in September to a daily average of 67,791 tons, as a result of the temporary arrangement between the striking coal miners and operators, under which the mining of coal was resumed, and it has increased still more in recent weeks. But the effects of the strikes have not passed away entirely, and the present output is not as large as it would have been if organized labor had not interfered with the industrial revival.

What is true of the basic material pig iron is true also of the semi-finished article, steel ingots and the fully finished products of steel such as rails and plates and shapes and forms, the production of all alike showing increases which have been progressive throughout the year, except when impeded by the strikes or by the shortage of fuel and difficulties of transportation. The unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation, for example, registered an unbroken decline from July, 1920, when they stood at 11,118,000 tons, to February of the present year, when they established the low record of 4,141,000 tons, which reflected the smallest volume of business on the books of the corporation since December, 1914, when unfilled orders amounted to the meagre total of 3,836,000 tons. Since February last the unfilled orders have expanded month by month until September, when they amounted to 6,692,000 tons.

There is very much of encouragement in the tendencies disclosed at this time by the generally accepted indices of trade. They go to show that despite a certain amount of irregularity and hesitation the industrial reaction ran its full course several months ago; that general business has enjoyed a moderate, though variable and somewhat unequal measure of recovery, and that the conditions appear favorable for a still further improvement. This view of the future is supported by the highly favorable outcome of the harvests and the generally better prices that the farmers are receiving for most of their crops now than in the recent past, and also by the inherent strength of the banking position. There has been no marked expansion in loans and discounts this year and the total bills on hand in the Federal Reserve banks on October 25th last were but $727,090,000, as compared with $1,371,065,000 last year.

In the meanwhile total gold reserves have increased from $2,786,239,000 on October 26, 1921, to $3,085,000,000 on October 25, 1922, and the ratio of gold reserve to deposit and note liability combined has expanded from 67.2 per cent. to 74.5 per cent. Whether the loans and discounts of the member banks, which have practically doubled in volume under the inflation made possible by the Federal Reserve Act and its amendments and which stood on June 30th last at $11,248,214,000, are as fluid as they should be is a matter which no one aside, possibly from the Comptroller of the Currency himself can determine. But usually a very large and unprecedented rapid expansion of loans, such as took place with the member banks during the period of the war and immediately thereafter implies a lock-up of credit, and the question suggests itself as to whether the frozen loans are even yet completely thawed out. But in the monetary situation, as disclosed by the Federal Reserve banks, there is nothing assuredly that should stand in the way of a further forward movement in business.

But the conditions surrounding money and credit are not the only things that have to be taken into the reckoning in considering an industrial revival, or "a business boom." Confidence is another and a primary essential in any sustained forward movement, for example, and though a more hopeful feeling pervades many of the markets, confidence is still a long way from being completely reestablished. And, in fact, it is difficult to see how it can be as long as conditions remain as they are in Europe. The French Chamber of Deputies, for instance, has only recently approved a budget which, it is estimated, will show a deficit for 1923 of 3,711,000,000 francs, and this at a time when Chancellor Wirth of Germany was submitting for discussion at a cabinet council the question whether in view of the utter collapse of the mark Germany ought not to declare a general reparations bankruptcy and default on further payments in kind as well as in cash.

It is wholly unnecessary, of course, to comment at length upon the grave possibilities involved in an open declaration of insolvency by Germany, not only for France and Italy with their unbalanced budgets, but also for Belgium, which—despite the experiences—relied upon the good faith and the promises of Germany to the extent of accepting a partial payment on account of the indemnity due her in German treasury notes or bonds—obligations which Germany, presumably, would repudiate, if the tentative proposal of bankruptcy should be made definite. But an open confession of insolvency on the part of Germany would not end simply, solely and alone in a further embarrassment of France, Italy, and Belgium. Other nations would be drawn in, and it is difficult to see how such a development could result otherwise than in disturbing the peace and prosperity of the whole world.

The outlook for 1923 is for fairly stable business. Improvement during the year has been primarily the result of domestic demand. Stocks both of raw materials and of finished goods, in process of reduction throughout 1921, disappeared so rapidly that during 1922 demand had to be met from current production, says the National Bank of Commerce in New York. Despite labor troubles of the worst sort the country passed rapidly from a condition of curtailed output and widespread unemployment to downright labor shortage. A tremendous construction programme has been carried out with consequent activity in industries producing building materials and accessories. Crops have been good, they have moved fairly rapid despite car shortage and prices for some agricultural products have improved materially. Wholesale and retail trade are satisfactory.

The situation as to money and credit is not far different from that as to goods. Much foreign gold has come into the Federal Reserve system, swelling reserves already too large, and slow liquidation of credit has continued. So efficiently has the United States banking system functioned, however, that the credit needs of expanding business have been fully cared for without the development of the tendency to inflation which has been so much feared. The American money market has probably been more stable during the last twelve months than in any year of the last decade.

The course of business in 1923 depends on two factors: domestic demand and the situation in other countries. Maintenance of domestic demand is conditional upon preventing the increase of labor costs to the point which will force prices out of reach of large classes of the buying public. If conditions abroad improve during 1923 business in this country should show substantial gains. At the worst it ought not to fall materially below the levels of the latter part of the year just closed.

During the last twelve months the bond market has passed through three distinct phases: a rapid advance, a period of relative stability, with a moderate upward tendency, and a period of moderate decline.

The two major causes which explain the movement of the bond market during 1922 are of great significance in relation to its probable course in 1923. As a result of general business unsettlement in 1920 and the earlier months of 1921 many excellent bonds had declined below what they were worth for permanent investment. This situation was certain to be corrected as soon as business stability was regained.

The second factor was the diversion into the bond market of funds ordinarily employed in commercial and industrial enterprise. During the long period of liquidation many businesses accumulated funds which were not immediately required for their current operations. In the interim it was necessary to employ this money, and many turned to the bond market, at first because the yields on many issues were very attractive and later because of the expectation of profits on a rising market.

Bonds bought for temporary investment were certain to come back on the market sooner or later, and under these conditions the market was also peculiarly sensitive to money rates. Declines in prices during the autumn months have been due in considerable measure to this situation, but they have been moderate and it seems probable that the further elimination of this speculative element from the market will be so gradual as to have in itself little further effect.

Thus in 1923 the general business situation will exert only its ordinary influence on the bond market. Stable business ought to be reflected in a corresponding stability in good securities. Political conditions will continue to be the dominant factor for some foreign bonds and money rates will exert their customary effect upon the course of security prices. It seems probable that for the first time since 1914 the American bond market will again become primarily an investors' market. It will be increasingly discriminating and will be affected to a lessening degree by temporary and speculative influences.

The outlook for New York as a market for foreign securities is of importance. Of late not only the total but the proportion of foreign issues to aggregate offerings has declined greatly and there have been evidences of the recovery by London of its old dominance of the markets for foreign bonds. So great are the opportunities for investment in North America that partly as a result of competition of other forms of investment and partly as a result of growing dissatisfaction with political uncertainty and reckless public finance, investors of the United States are becoming more and more critical of foreign offerings. The conclusion is not to be drawn, however, that New York will be eliminated as a market for foreign securities. New York will continue to be a good market for first-class foreign bonds, but issues not so desirable will meet with lessened interest from American investors.

The world's crude oil production for 1921 was 765,065,000 barrels, of which the United States produced 472,183,000 barrels, or 61.7 per cent. United States and Mexico combined yielded 665,580,587 barrels in 1921, or 87 per cent. of world production.

World production of crude oil from 1857 to 1921, inclusive, was 9,511,997,000 barrels, according to the same authority. This was an average of 147,000,000 barrels annually, so that world's production in 1921 was five times greater than annual average for sixty-five years. Production of this country for 1921 was 61.7 per cent. of year's total and for sixty-five-year period average was 62.1 per cent. Aggregate production of United States' fields from 1857-1921 was 5,902,051,000 barrels. At the rate of production in United States in 1921, 472,183,000 barrels, domestic fields would produce in twelve years an amount approximating that of their production from 1857-1921.

German foreign trade for October shows unfavorable balance of 242,000,000 gold marks

INVESTMENT SECURITIES

Government, Municipal and Corporation Bonds for the investment of Banks, Trust Companies and Individuals

Inquiries invited

HUNTER, DOLIN & Co.

256 MONTGOMERY ST.
Telephone Douglas 1066
SAN FRANCISCO

Los Angeles Pasadena Oakland Office 505 Syndicate Bldg. Santa Barbara San Diego

compared with 131,000,000 in September, 303,000,000 in August, and 5,800,000 in January, bringing import surplus for ten months to 1,850,000,000 gold marks.

October imports totaled 531,700,000 gold marks or 5,550,000 tons compared with 421,800,000 or 4,830,000 in September, while exports were 289,900,000 gold marks or 1,540,000 tons compared with 291,000,000 gold marks or 1,590,000 tons in September.

Imports of pit coal increased 330,000 tons and imports of cotton, cotton tissues, rye, coffee and mineral oils also were greater. Exports of dyes, chemicals, toys and machines increased, while timber and potash decreased.

A committee of well-known musical enthusiasts is organizing a scheme to popularize the music of William Byrd, the great Tudor composer. A festival of Byrd's music is to be held next year. The Carnegie Trust Fund recently completed an edition of the whole of Byrd's compositions.

INVESTMENT SECURITIES

COMMERCIAL PAPER AND ACCEPTANCES

GOVERNMENT MUNICIPAL AND CORPORATION BONDS

BOND & GOODWIN & TUCKER

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK BUILDING
SAN FRANCISCO
LOS ANGELES SEATTLE PORTLAND

Let Us Help You Invest

INDIVIDUAL circumstances affect the policy that any investor should follow. For some, long term securities are advisable; for others, short term; for some, the interest rate is more important than ready marketability; but, for all, security should be the main consideration.

Let us advise you as to a wise diversified selection of bonds.

Our experience of 35 years as a bond house in California is at your service.

W.M.R. STAATS CO.

Established 1887
Alexander Building
Montgomery Street, corner of Bush
San Francisco
Los Angeles San Diego Pasadena

BOOKS ON THE TABLE.

The Adventure of Living.

The art of the biographer is a delicate one balanced precariously between the Scylla and Charybdis of egoism and chronology. And yet this form of literary exercise has a greater momentum of interest than perhaps any other, since more than any other it has the substance of life behind it. It is a wise self-chronicler who capitalizes himself as differentiated from any one else. By which we do not mean that every man should be his own publicity agent, nor every lady her own diarist either, but that if you are going to write about yourself you may as well make the best of a bad job and no bones about it. John St. Loe Strachey the distinguished editor of the London Spectator, has frankly done so in his "subjective autobiography," which is rather sentimentally named "The Adventure of Living." Mr. Strachey's life has been a delightful one to live—parts of it read almost like a fairytale—but hardly adventurous. Still, he may mean his title in the fairytale sense of adventure—he challenged the world and it capitulated. For that is the happy impression of his happy life that his many less felicitous readers will receive. But it is not so much as the record of a thoroughly successful and useful career that "The Adventure of Living" strikes us, as an admirable exercise of the art of self-interpretation. Mr. Strachey is frank without being naïve—a distinction which seems to separate the sheep from the goats in the matter of what is suitable biographic material and what is only a violation of good taste. The editor of the Spectator has perfectly exemplified the proportion of candor and reticence appropriate to any one's memoirs. His public life is unrolled before us with clarity, his private life remains where it belongs in privacy.

In case our last statement seems contradictory to the author's own label, "subjective," we hasten to differentiate further. Mr. Strachey's story of his life is subjective and even intensely personal, but by some magic formula of his own he avoids the air of revelation either of himself or any one else. Perhaps the secret is that he has written the biography of his mind, which necessarily included his early environment and his later adventures. But as the writer of a subjective narrative he feels it within his autobiographic rights to focus attention on himself and his own reactions—a process that rather eliminates the personal adventures of his associates, and a logical as well as decent course for an autobiography.

R. G.
THE ADVENTURE OF LIVING. By John St. Loe Strachey. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; $5.

Gold.

The title, "Gold," of this Eugene O'Neill play, which was published in 1920 and now is brought out in another edition, appears in startling black letters on the paper cover of the volume. Which seems to be typical of the play.

For, in spite of its merit, the play tries too hard to be striking. It is written around the obsession for gold which confuses and corrupts the human mind. And the author, with his customary discrimination, exempts the women in his play from the reproach of greed.

But all the others except one clean-hearted specimen of involuntary rectitude succumb to the corroding spell: the old, the young, the base, the honest, the white man and the brown, all lose their sane sense of the homely and just things of life when the thought of a buried treasure rears itself, a poisonous influence.

Mr. O'Neill has told his story in four acts, his usually unerring sense of stage technique rather weakening, however, at the end. For the situation prolongs itself unduly, and it would be easy to imagine spectators in a theatre coughing and sighing as the fourth act unfurls its length. Yet the author has made his point, and with due economy of materials. But the reader sees the effort; and a play of sombre motives and passions should always seem like the inevitable workings of fate.

GOLD. By Eugene O'Neill. New York: Boni & Liveright; $1.50.

You.

Magdeleine Marx, having stirred up quite a sensation with "Woman," has followed that revealing story with another in similar vein entitled "You," in which she continues to throw a brilliant illumination upon the secret processes of a woman's musings.

It may be added that Anne Breven in "You" is a Latin, and as the Latins, even the women among them, are more candid with themselves than the Anglo-Saxon, it is probable that Anne will administer a number of mild shocks to American readers.

Anne belongs to the adventurous women-kind of the twentieth century, except that she is incurably romantic. So things happen of an unconventional nature.

And Anne muses, and tries to analyze love, and the reader follows the recital of these passionate soul-stirrings with a realization that the French author is a strange, fiery, unusual being who is ardently trying to solve the problem of what constitutes flesh and what spirit. And so eagerly and burningly do her thoughts develop that the words in which she clothes them pour in a fiery flood, in which self-revelation is inevitably made; which means the revelation of the woman soul.

"You" appeared first in France, the version here reviewed being a translation. But the success of "Woman" has resulted in the book appearing in translated form in the majority of the European countries.

YOU. By Magdeleine Marx. New York: Thomas Seitzer; $2.

Oriental Short Stories.

Achmed Abdullah, well known as a teller of tales, has gathered together fifteen of his short stories that have appeared in various American magazines, the collection being appropriately entitled "Alien Souls." For there are tales of Afghan, of Turkish, of Chinese, of Hindu and of Japanese people, all told as by one who is familiar with the life and the peoples represented.

The stories give to the Westerner an insight into the different standards that prevail both in the Near and the Far East, the author not neglecting to give a picturesque framework to the scenes represented. It is apparent, however, that the European education of the author, and the fact that his stories are addressed to Occidental minds, has put into his style something that is not wholly Eastern, although the characters, the motives, and the settings are wholly so.

ALIEN SOULS. By Achmed Abdullah. New York: James A. McCann Company; $1.75.

Plays by Continental Playwrights.

As a companion volume to Mayorga's "Representative One-Act Plays by American Authors" and Clark's "Representative One-Act Plays by British and Irish Authors," Montrose J. Moses has selected fifteen of the best examples of the one-act play written by Continental authors. The playlets are of great merit and in most part of striking motive. None has purely conventional atmosphere.

Among the fifteen authors are Arthur Schnitzler, Henri Lavedan, Hermann Suderman and August Strindberg. But also we note authors whose names are just beginning to be known to Americans: the Italian, Giacosa, the melancholy Russian symbolist Andreyev, the brothers Quintero, Bergstrom, De Lorde and Sierra. Both nineteenth and twentieth-century authors figure in the list, and American readers will note with interest how these authors differ in national flavor, while being linked by a common artistry.

REPRESENTATIVE ONE-ACT PLAYS BY CONTINENTAL AUTHORS. Edited by Montrose J. Moses. Boston: Little, Brown & Co.; $3.

Notes of Books and Authors

A Berlin publishing house has sold 800,000 copies of Rabindranath Tagore's works.

Mr. Winston Churchill is working on the biography of his ancestor, the Duke of Marlborough, which was begun by Lord Wolsley.

The house which Fanny Burney built with the small fortune she made from her novel, "Camilla," is on the market. The place is called Camilla Lacey, after the heroine of the book.

Maurice Baring's "Overlooked," recently reviewed in these columns, is among the present best-selling quartet of novels in London. "Overlooked" is published on this side by the Houghton Mifflin Company.

Doubleday, Page & Co. have published a new book of poems by Richard Le Gallienne, "A Jongleur Strayed." The book, which is an edition limited to fifteen hundred copies, has a typically fantastic introduction by Oliver Herford.

The rapid sales for so high-priced a book as the "Stevenson Baby Book" (John Howell; $20) is a measure of the great popularity of R. L. S. One-fifth of the limited edition of five hundred has been sold or ordered since its publication on Stevenson's birthday, the 13th of November. And orders come from every part of the English-speaking world for the record of the first seven years of Stevenson's life. The exquisitely published little book makes an appropriate gift for Stevenson lovers, whose number seems to be legion.

In a recent notice to the press B. W. Huebsch, Inc., announced that their edition of Gay's "The Beggar's Opera" was the only current one obtainable. This was an error, which Mr. Huebsch now corrects in order to give their due to Doubleday, Page & Co., who also publish an edition. The Huebsch edition consists merely of the text, the only illustration being that on the cover by C. Lovat Fraser. The Doubleday edition is more elaborate, and is illustrated by C. Lovat Fraser.

Harry A. Franck writes to his publisher, the Century Company, from China (where he is on a two-year expedition to gather material for a book on present-day conditions and on his own travel experiences) that of all the inconveniences one might expect to find in that revolution and brigand-infested land, nothing has troubled him at all but an intensity of heat which makes traveling difficult and writing almost impossible. He has, however, made good progress with his project of seeing all China proper, and it is possible, he thinks, that the end of his term, after Manchuria and Mongolia, may see him attempting an adventure into Tibet.

The B. W. Huebsch Company is recommending several of its nominal-priced publications as substitutes for bromide greeting cards. The house is offering its "Jean Jacques Rousseau," translated by Van Wyck Brooks, at one dollar; "The Soldier and Death," a Russian folk tale that is not at all lugubrious, told in English by Arthur Ransome, at 75 cents; Bertrand Russell's "Free Thought and Official Propaganda," also 75 cents; and a pointed bit of satire by the war correspondent, Henry W. Nevins, "Farewell to America," for 50 cents.

FAIRY TALES

LORETTA ELLEN BRADY

Author Of
The GREEN FOREST FAIRY BOOK and teller of Tales for Children, will hold Story Hour in your home.

Phone Park 489

The French American Bank

OF SAN FRANCISCO

108 SUTTER STREET

Commercial—Checking—Savings

Resources Over $16,000,000

A General Banking Business Transacted

Commercial and Personal Checking
Accounts Solicited

Savings Accounts receive interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum

SAFE DEPOSIT BOXES $3.50

OFFICERS

Leon Bocqueraz ..... President
J. M. Dupas ..... Vice-President
J. A. Bergerot ..... Vice-President
W. F. Duffy ..... Vice-President and Cashier
A. Bousquet ..... Secretary
J. T. Irillary ..... Asst. Cashier
Chas. L. Ebner, Jr. .... Asst. Cashier

The San Francisco Savings and Loan Society

(THE SAN FRANCISCO BANK)

SAVINGS COMMERCIAL

526 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

MISSION BRANCH ..... Mission and 21st Streets
PARK-PRESIDIO DISTRICT BRANCH ..... Clement and 7th Ave.
HAIGHT STREET BRANCH ..... Haight and Belvedere Streets
June 30th, 1922

Assets ..... $76,170,177.18
Deposits ..... 72,470,177.18
Capital Actually Paid Up ..... 1,000,000.00
Reserve and Contingent Funds ..... 2,700,000.00
Employees' Pension Fund ..... 385,984.61

A dividend to depositors of FOUR AND ONE QUARTER (4 1/4) per cent. per annum was declared for the six months ending June 30th, 1922.

The St. Francis Hotel depends on "Pacific Service"

for all of the power it uses. Ask about the measures taken by the P G and E to insure a steady flow of power to all customers for cooking and other purposes.

Pacific Gas and Electric Company

P.G. and E.

"PACIFIC SERVICE"

P-05-15 E

BRIEFER REVIEWS.

Once On a Time.

Admirers of A. A. Milne will eagerly seize upon his grown-up fairy tale, "Once On a Time" (G. P. Putnam's Sons), and will not be disappointed, and new readers will probably become admirers of Mr. Milne. For, as the former group know, he has a brand of nonsense that sparkles brightly and untiringly and which, sprinkled through a play, makes it a comedy. Allowed to run extempore through the pages of a book calling itself grown-up fairy tales, the Milne nonsense becomes a small vacation. Incidentally, the best nonsense has a core of meaning and Mr. Milne's chronicle of the imaginary and vanished kingdom of Euralia, a long time ago, is an ironical prototype of later and vanishing kingdoms.

Seeing the Eastern States.

A contribution to the young but growing class of American travel book is John T. Faris' "Seeing the Eastern States" (J. B. Lippincott Company; $5). This book should be of particular interest to people of the West who are either going to visit the region described by Mr. Faris and should therefore be provided with so excellent a guide, or to those who, lacking the opportunity of first-hand information, should take the best substitute. For it behooves one to know his own country as well as possible; and travel writers like Mr. Faris who have selected American territory for description and interpretation ought to receive a vote of thanks. We have books and to spare on South Sea isles and remote corners of Europe.

Robin Hood's Barn.

The product of a partnership of a clever illustrator and an equally clever commentator on the natural beauties of field and sky is "Robin Hood's Barn" (George H. Doran Company; $2), otherwise "the confessions of a garden adventurer." Like the Pennells, Margaret Emerson Bailey and her brother, Whitman Bailey, cooperate in producing books, with the difference that the Baileys' work, unlike the famous pair just mentioned, is rather more equal in quality. There is not so wide a gap between the graceful pen-and-ink drawings of Mr. Bailey and his sister's limpid descriptions of pastoral incident as exists between the more brilliant Pennell draughtsmanship and the certainly duller prose of Elizabeth Robins. In addition, if Miss Bailey is the author of the verse scattered through her book she is a minor versifier of distinction, and a naturalist besides.

American Lighthouses.

A history and survey of the light-house service guarding the 48,000 miles of American coast line, by F. A. Collins, shows that machinery has not killed romance and that adventure abounds on all coasts. "Sentinels Along Our Coast" (The Century Company; $2) is the story of the men and machines who work to safeguard the passage of ships to and from and along our shores. The author is less concerned with the military side of coast defense than with the progress of efficient aids to navigation. Sea dangers that have been dreaded for centuries are rapidly succumbing to such modern contrivances as the radio compass and telephone. "Sentinels Along Our Coast" is more than an informational treatise; it is absorbing reading for any one with an acquisitive mind.

The Little Country Theatre.

Members of progressive rural communities will welcome a book which is the outcome of an experiment at the North Dakota Agricultural College. Alfred G. Arvold, the author, and a group of associates, founded a "little country theatre" at that institution some years ago, and Mr. Arvold now relates its history for the benefit of other experimenters. A useful appendix contains a list of suitable reference material for costume, production, etc., and suggested lists of plays. "The Little Country Theatre" is published by the Macmillan Company at $2.50.

New Books Received.

AMERICAN WATER-COLOURISTS. By A. E. Galatin. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $15.

ELEMENTARY EQUITATION. By Baretto de Souza. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $3.50.

The principles of horseback riding.

THE WORKS OF LI PO, THE CHINESE POET. Done into English verse by Shieyoshi Obata. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $3.50.

With an introduction and biographical and critical matter translated from the Chinese.

MARGOT ASQUITH: AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY. New York: George H. Doran Company.

Volumes III and IV.

ALOHA AROUND THE WORLD. By Carl Vogel. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Around the world in a sailing vessel.

THE AVIATOR. By Henry C. McComas. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $3.

An investigation of the necessary personal equipment of the aviator from both the physiological and psychological viewpoint.

OUR SOUTHERN HIGHLANDS. By Horace Kephart. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.50.

Revised edition with new material.

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE WORLD. By H. G. Wells. New York: The Macmillan Company; $4.

THE MOHAWK RANGER. By D. Lange. Boston: Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company; $1.50.

An Indian novel.

THE HAPPY HIGHWAYS. By Storm Jameson. New York: The Century Company.

A novel.

FAREWELL TO AMERICA. By Henry W. Nevins. New York: B. W. Huebsch; 50 cents.

An English editor on America.

THE SOLDIER AND DEATH. By Arthur Ransome. New York: B. W. Huebsch; 75 cents.

A Russian folk tale.

PHANTOM. By Gerhart Hauptmann. New York: B. W. Huebsch; $1.50.

A novel, translated by Bayard Quincy Morgan.

THE KANSAS COURT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS. By John Hugh Bowers. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co.; $1.

In the National Social Science Series.

AMERICAN TRADES UNIONISM. By George M. James. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co.; $1.

The National Social Science Series.

THE CRESSMAN OF MARS. By Edgar Rice Burroughs. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co.; $1.90.

Another Martian yarn.

SOME IMPRESSIONS OF MY ELDERS. By St. John G. Ervine. New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.25.

Informal character sketches.

JULIAN ALDEN WEIR. By Duncan Phillips. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.; $15.

Number one of the Phillips Publications.

The White House

The Blood Ship

By NORMAN SPRINGER

It has the elements that make it a bully story—snap and go, lots of action, the tang of the sea, and it certainly reads like the work of a man who knows ships and shanghaied crews. It is romance! Mystery! $1.90

Book Department, Main Floor
Phone Kearny 5000

Raphael Wall & Co. Inc.

The Wright Magazine

("Not for self, but for others")

Only $1.00 a Year.

Besides a serial and short stories it contains departments for literary and music, women and children, farm and garden, a people's forum, manuscript markets, radio notes and other interesting features.

THE WRIGHT MAGAZINE
P. O. Box 304 Kansas City, Mo.

THE WORK OF MARCEL PROUST

Of the latest work of the French literary genius, Marcel Proust, the New York Herald presents this analysis by Calvin Winter:

"It would be worse than impertinent to attempt anything approaching a definite summing up of a work of such magnitude as 'Swann's Way,' on the strength of a first rapid reading, however intent, absorbed, and enthusiastic. These two volumes constitute only one of the five parts which make up the long autobiographic series entitled in the original, 'A La Recherche du Temps Perdu'; and amazing as they are in their amplitude, their exhaustless analysis of certain phases of the life and thought of France of today, one feels that they constitute segments of a much vaster scheme, the ultimate pattern of which is not here sufficiently developed to justify a guess at its purpose.

"This much at least, however, may be ventured without fear of contradiction: Marcel Proust stands for very nearly the last word in the development of the psychological novel. He has carried the analytical method to an extent never before attempted in fiction, probing down, in his search for ultimate causes, into those obscure subconscious depths, the very existence of which were popularly unknown before the advent of Freud. The consummate art with which M. Proust fulfills his purpose, the tireless zeal with which he follows an emotion, an impulse backward to its remotest, obscurest first cause, regardless of syntactical difficulties and breathless length of trailing sentences that meander at times unbroken through the full length and breadth of a printed page, will naturally tend to divide the public sharply into two classes: those who find the barrier of his slow-moving style and method insuperable, and frankly say, 'He may be great, but he is not for us'; and those who read on, oblivious of his manner, intent only on assimilating the richness that he has to offer.

"In attempting anything like a specific epitome of the substance of these volumes, a reviewer suddenly feels an unwonted helplessness. The amplitude, the minuteness, the occasional redundancy, are not, as in most books, the addition of so much tissue covering the vital inner skeleton; they are part and parcel of the skeleton itself, warp and woof of the essential fabric of the work; and every attempt at a brief retelling robs it of just so much of its inherent color and vitality. This is especially true of the second division of Volume I, entitled 'Combray.' One may define it, of course, as the record of a small boy's impressions through 200 pages, of the little French village where he was taken for a yearly visit to an old, paralyzed great-aunt, whose outlook on life was limited to the narrow vista of the village street afforded by her bedroom window, and whose sole daily excitement centered in discussing with her servant, Françoise, the comings and goings of villagers along the street. Yet out of this slim material M. Proust has reconstructed for us a phase of French provincial life. It is no exaggeration to say that he has vivisected and laid bare the very soul of Combray, which, seen from a distance, 'was no more than a church epitomizing the town, representing it, speaking of it and for it to the horizon.'

"For those who find themselves repelled by this author's deliberateness of approach, the wisest procedure would be to invade the story midway, at page 259, at the beginning of the third part, entitled 'Swann in Love.' Here at least we have an episode complete in itself, a story that will live independently of any later interwoven connections with other portions of the main structure. Perhaps never before has the sordid tragedy of a man's love and jealousy of an unworthy woman been so minutely, inexorably explored and denuded. When M. Swann first met Mme. Odette de Crécy he was as sure that she was technically a 'good' woman as he was that her face was a disappointment. When away from her he found that her face haunted him; whenever they met, the initial disappointment was renewed; until, one day, in a flash of enlightenment he discovered what he must have subconsciously known from the beginning, that Odette was a reincarnation of one of his favorite Botticelli frescoes. That the lady was less impregnable than he had first supposed was M. Swann's second discovery. That her moral standards were not greatly above gutter level he was to learn by slow degrees; but by this time poor M. Swann's infatuation had reached the point of mental blindness at which a woman's imperfections, her mental and moral coarseness, her very ineptitudes, all become precious because typical of her. We see the man himself slowly disintegrate under the acid poison of this worthless woman. The inevitable awakening of suspicion that he is being betrayed brings in its wake the progressive breaking down of his moral fibre. We can not recall any other book where the scorching, searing, shriveling action of jealousy has so devastated a man's soul. From listening at doors and windows and prying into sealed letters, he progresses to the greater ignominy of spying upon Odette, lying to her, cross-examining her, tripping her into reluctant ad-

IT'S THE WATER.

Prepared with Glacier Water from Shasta Springs

AT ALL DEALERS

SHASTA WATER COMPANY

missions of unspeakable degradations, torturing himself by visualizing scenes more hideous than her worst confessions. Eventually Swann's obsession runs its course, like any other malignant disease. He sees Odette from a detached point of view, and realizes that he is cured. The crowning irony is expressed in the cry of his heart:

"To think that I have wasted years of my life, that I have longed for death, that the greatest love that I have ever known has been for a woman who did not please me, who was not my style!"

All Books that are reviewed in the Argonaut can be obtained at

Robertson's

222 STOCKTON ST.

Union Square San Francisco

THE HOLMES BOOK CO.

707 Market St. 152 Kearny St. 22 Third St.

Largest variety of new and second-hand books in the city. A visit to our stores will convince you of the truth of this assertion. We buy libraries or single books for cash. See us before selling. Phone—Douglas 3283.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

IF YOU ARE A REAL BOOK-LOVER

Spend a pleasant hour in the real "Old Book Shop" at 2 TILLMAN PLACE, OFF GRANT AVENUE—below Sutter.

Rare Old Books Bought, Sold and Hunted For by GEORGE HARGENS (formerly of the White House)

BOOKS AT

PAUL ELDER'S

239 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO

NEWBEGIN'S BOOKSTORE

358 POST STREET SAN FRANCISCO

Opposite Union Square

A Shop known for its courteous service, and a pleasant place to browse.

Information on books, authors and editions gladly given. Books bought and sold. Buyer will call. Telephone Douglas 2810

JOHN HOWELL

IMPORTER BOOKS PUBLISHER

RARE BOOKS AND FIRST EDITIONS

Libraries Bought and Sold

328 Post Street Union Square

Sutter 3268

SAN FRANCISCO

Geo. E. Billings Roy C. Ward Geo. B. Dinsmore

J. C. Muesdorff Jas. W. Dean

Geo. E. BILLINGS CO.

ALL FORMS OF INSURANCE

EFFECTED

312 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

Phone—Douglas 6400

BALFOUR, GUTHRIE &amp; CO.

SAN FRANCISCO AND LOS ANGELES,
PORTLAND, SEATTLE, TACOMA,
AND VANCOUVER.

MERCHANTS

EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS
MARINE AND FIRE INSURANCE
AVERAGE ADJUSTERS

Agents of

HARRISON DIRECT LINE OF STEAMERS
TO AND FROM EUROPEAN PORTS

UNION LUMBER CO.

CROCKER BUILDING

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

MANUFACTURERS AND WHOLESALE

—OR—

REDWOOD LUMBER
RAILROAD TIES
TELEGRAPH POLES
SHINGLES

—AND—

SPLIT REDWOOD PRODUCTS

BONESTELL &amp; CO. PAPER

The paper used in printing the Argonaut is furnished by us
CALIFORNIA'S LEADING PAPER HOUSE
118 to 124 First Street, corner Minna,
San Francisco

A WEEK OF LEVITY.

Nobody is in the humor for serious amusement, as a general thing, during Christmas week, nearly all the plays at the theatres in which they have drama as she spoke giving the public something that will tend to a mood of hilarity. Hence it is an appropriate time for Kolb and Dill to make a jolly stir-up for their constant appreciators.

This popular pair have advanced their grade of fun to a less childish brand, as the result of which they now have plays—always of a highly amusing flavor—of better form than was once the case.

At present they are offering "a humorous satire based on the Volstead Act," by Aaron Hoffman, who, recognizing the extreme timeliness and ready appeal of all jokes founded on prohibition, has sailed in and hilariously ridiculed everybody and every law that is agin the free use of alcohol.

Result: gleeful sympathy, from all appearances, from the amused public that seemed, at one time, to favor prohibition.

However, the principal point concerning their attitude toward "Now and Then" is that, whether or not they want prohibition, they want the jokes that go with it. It is said on all sides that the bootleggers are freely spending their illicit profits in trying to advance the cause of a permanent prohibition law because they are making millions in breaking the laws. And, by the same token, it would not be surprising if the jokesmiths would willingly pay from their more modest profits something toward maintaining a state of things that makes the grinding out of stage jokes on an alcoholic subject run on oiled wheels.

"Now and Then" is really a very clever satire with its atmosphere of realism and its occasional explosions of argument, preceded or followed by bursts of sentimentality from the well-soaked habitués who cheerfully and consistently pickle their willing insides with "the stuff" as a matter of habit.

Occasionally "Bum," a man of mind who has come down in the world and is the bar-keep, is drawn away from washing mugs and sweeping out the bar-room and invited to utter words of enlightenment on the world situation, war, prohibition, and other pregnant topics, and is listened to with respect and some slight feeling of endurance by the gentlemen who have been so assiduously picking their brains. The audience also listens, but with keen interest, and it presently penetrates that by this clever device Aaron Hoffman is getting in a few side-swipes landing his real opinions.

He is a clever one, is Aaron. He has an end in view, and sticks to it: the consistent ridiculing of prohibition. At first he seems to be impartial, and presents both sides, the partners—all wet and suddenly dry—having wordy, abusive arguments, each amazed and outraged that he can not convince the other. They are very amusing, these discussions, Dill with the light blue flare of wrath lighting up his pudgy little blonde mug; Kolb, earnest, disputatious, self-convinced, self-assertive, intolerant. Who would have thought the clever author would have got so much entertaining human nature in a whisky-smelling, gin-impregnated saloon?

But he does, and there are cozy family relations, and domestic affections flourishing, and the comical jokes in the tails of the remarks are constantly going off like popcorn.

Again I must remark on the cleverness of the author, who has a quick, ready, unfailing sense of humor, and a feeling for the drama of life also, so that the play moves on, carrying our interest with it, while the audience—which is fairly packed with men—roars approval unfailingly at every joke and humorous situation.

It may seem from this description that the author, who has bootleggers and bribe-takers flourishing exceedingly, while the ardent prohibitionist's means rapidly diminish, believes in doing entirely away with temperance.

But no; he has a little sting in the tail of his satire, perhaps not noticed by all of the delighter roars in front. It lies in the fact that Teddy, nice, boyish, warm-hearted Teddy, whom everybody loved, became a drinker when the war went out and prohibition came in, and his prohibitionist dad utterly failed to reform him.

And what did, you ask? For of course Teddy would eventually reform and win to his honest love the pretty daughter of his father's partner that he had almost lost by his alcoholic goings-on. But Teddy comes back from a long disappearance in a neat Canadian uniform; for he is in the government service there, assisting in enforcing the very liberal law prevailing in sturdy, commonsensical Canada against intemperance; a law which Mr. Hoffman inferentially conveys ought to prevail here.

Somehow Canada has never had her progress obstructed by pestilent politicians. The point the author makes is that in Canada the law allows a man a certain number of drinks within a certain prescribed time, each drink being punched in the card he carries. If he gets drunk the cold and ruthless law takes away his card, and a long and arid perspective of dryness stretches before him.

So this is the sting in the tail of Mr. Hoffman's humorous satire. And humorous it is indeed, the author evidently being expert at this sort of thing, and having provided the fun-dispensing partners with a particularly suitable and what will prove to be very profitable vehicle.

Kolb and Dill indulge no longer in slapstick. They are actors, good actors in their line, and they see to it that they have good support. May Cloy, although rather improbably blonde—don't you know, May, that too, too blonde hair takes the glow and sparkle out of the eyes?—is earnest and pleasing as Albert's pretty young daughter, and Julia Blanc does good comedy as the warm-hearted, ignorant hausfrau. John Fee gave an excellent impersonation of "Bum," and Allen Connor was ingenuous and likable as Teddy. Charles Yule also did a small part well.

"Now and Then" is full of life, human nature, and jovial satire. The aesthete wouldn't enjoy it. It smells too much of whisky. But its humor is hearty and real, its purpose well meant, its characters likable, and its pervasive fun highly enjoyable, if you are not too delicately fastidious.

The Orpheum, also, is tacitly giving utterance this week to that jolly old saying, "Be gone, dull care, I prithee be gone from me." It is a bill that is made up in major part of pretty women, whirlwind dancing, and melodious singing.

The principal number is Gorham's Follies of 1923, which exploits fetching little Doris Eaton, and two expert Russian dancers. Dancing also figures in the novel conception presented by the Magleys, who, like one of the most chic Neddads we have ever seen, went through a charming story in dance and pantomime.

Walter Kelly in "The Virginia Judge" is too familiar a favorite to require comment, except that he has new stories to tell, and the Denno-Scanlon group, as well as the John B. Hymer Company in their negro characterizations, are also known to the Orpheum habitués, "Lonesome Land" being, I believe, new, but not exactly in line with the gayety of the rest of the performance.

It remained for the Rivoli to rise fully to the requirements of the Christmas season in "The Toymaker," which, although the story is designed for adults, makes a decided appeal to the children because of the numerous mechanical and performing dolls which diversify the scene. Some of them, needless to say, are large as life and twice as natural. Among these Elfrieda Steindorff appears as a pleasing character, and dainty Edna Malone, in ballet costume, dances prettily about the stage before she retires into doll immobility in her doll.

But this is, par excellence, Lavinia Winn's week, that pretty little bit of graceful symmetry doing a very neat stunt as Papa Guggenheimer's wonderful mechanical doll. The little actress is dressed like a little school-girl in white and baby-blue, and is extremely deft in her manipulation of the tricks of the wonderful manikin. The young lady's strong point is not singing, and she has a lot of that to do, but Lillian Glazer, looking very pretty in the costume of an apprentice, does a pyrotechnical line of singing to offset Miss Winn's innocently ineffectual carolings.

Ferris Hartman exudes domestic and commercial benevolence as the self-praising old toymaker, and half a dozen of the rest of the company were needed to fill the remaining principal rôles, a full chorus representing the hungry monks and the mechanical dolls.

The great moment for the numerous children in the audience—to each of whom had been presented a toy—was the culmination of the first act, when the chorus, costumed as dolls of various kinds, entered and made gay a scene which was further animated by the mechanical goings-on of the dolls of various sizes, some suspended from above and some standing in rows on the shelves. It was a ravishing moment for childhood, and recalled the Xmas transformation scenes in old Tivoli days; when, by the way, "The Toymaker" was the talk of the town and was taken in by all the world and his wife and children.

"The Toymaker" is, from the musical point of view, quite a pleasing composition, Audran, the composer, having had quite a name in his day. Ferris Hartman has adapted it to the American stage, and has done the work creditably. The original story is clever, and where it was necessary he has enlarged characters, modified, or expunged, for it is quite plain that the original librettist did not have artless childhood in view when he wrote his tale.

DECLASSEE.

The only serious note struck in the spoken drama this week—for the Columbia is continuing "The Gold Diggers"—is at the Alcazar, where they have put on "Déclassée."

This Zoe Akin play will be remembered as the vehicle used by Ethel Barrymore when she was last here, and with which, by her indistinctness, she succeeded in stirring up a considerable feeling of injury in her audience. And, by the way, how is an actress who almost makes a study of indistinctness going to read Shakespeare? For I read in the New York papers that Ethel Barrymore is to play Juliet. A mistake, it seems to me, even although she is such an immense favorite. But neither her appearance, speech, nor style of acting fit her for the rôle, and the Barrymore charm alone will have to carry her through.

To return to the Alcazar: They have been doing a few drum-beatings there about their new leading lady, and I think with justice. Miss Nana Bryant puts a neat finish on everything she does. She is, I should judge, an actress of experience, and while her charm and fervor are not great enough to carry her to the high places, she has an ample sufficiency to enable her to enact the rôle of Lady Helen Haden, the last of the "mad Varvicks," hopeless romanticists and therefore headed for calamity.

Lady Helen should be played by an actress who has the instinctive charm and magnetism possessed by Ethel Barrymore. But it is to Miss Bryant's credit that she did exceedingly well with the rôle, not overlooking or under or over-stressing a single one of Lady Helen's wayward moods, and setting off the part beside with an attractive person; for the actress, although not a beauty, possesses not only a refined and pleasing countenance, but a correctly contoured, slender, and beautiful figure. Besides, she is a dresser, and carries her clothes with distinction.

Miss Bryant was noticeably meritorious in the delivery of her lines, and it is evident that the Alcazar patrons are going to rejoice in the possession of the best leading lady they have had for some years.

In plays calling for a figure of social attractiveness Netta Sunderland, as in "Déclassée," is a valuable addition to the company, and Hope Drown plays the rôle of Rudolph Solomon's esteemed but unloved mistress with pensive grace; Miss Mersereau also doing creditably with the rôle of Zellito, the psychic dancer, who has foreseen Lady Helen's end.

It is an old-fashioned touch, this dying-on-the-sofa idea. Lady Helen was "a mad Varvick," and her creator meant from the first that she should go out in the tragedy of a premature death. But somehow play-goers have turned against dying scenes, and this one, both with the New York and the Alcazar people, didn't quite go. For Lady Helen, as soon as she was placed on the sofa in a dying condition, ceased to be Lady Helen and became an actress making the most creditable technical but vain efforts to be pathetic.

To return to the company: Miss Hedwig Helne as the ornate American adventuress gave that character a proper suggestion of meretriciousness, and carried through her principal scene very well. Miss Knowlton, and one or two others, completed a group of personable women who acquitted themselves with ease.

As for the men, Mr. Emmett Vogan was excellent during his brief appearance as a Sir Bruce that it was easy to conceive of as having proved a possible wooer to Lady Helen. Mr. Norman P. Feusier lent body to the character of Rudolph Solomon, and Dudley Ayres gave a touch of romance to the poor thing that Lady Helen, being a Varvick, allowed "to walk as a ghost in her heart"; we being quite unable to sympathize with her. But then "Déclassée" is a romance, and not the type of play that is a slice of life.

So Lady Helen goes on hopelessly loving a figment, and Harry Charteris—a character represented most sympathetically by Jerome Sheldon—goes on hopelessly loving Lady Helen. And Rudolph Solomon is in the same melancholy predicament. And so the curtain goes down on a scene of tragedy, and the audience leaves in a mood of romantic sadness; for Zoë Akin has a talent for insinuating the minor key in the orchestral harmony of moods.

FRENCH AS SHE IS SPOKE.

Having ministered to the requirements of high school students of French with "Le Voyage de Mons. Perrichon," André Ferrier is now consulting the tastes of the native French with "Ma Tante d'Honneur." This Paul Gavault comedy is a sample of what the Parisians like: plenty of action, plenty of chères amies, and plenty of wit in the dialogue and humor in the situations.

I am not sufficiently acquainted with provincial French types to know whether the aunt from Honfleur would in real life preserve such a mellow, genial mood toward her nephew's gay irregularities of an undisciplined heart. But as Charles, who has the natural gayety of a Dick Swiveller, is rather an engaging person, the spectator is won to sympathy with Tante Raymond's tolerant attitude toward what the Anglo-Saxon sternly calls "goings-on."

In fact, everybody in the play, except the two young men who become rivals, maintains a sympathetic attitude. It is a play of French good will, the servants taking a willing hand in making love affairs glide smoothly on well-oiled skids.

The plot, it may be perceived, is rather farcical, the aunt serving by unexpectedly sudden appearances as a hook upon which to hang farcical situations.

As a general thing the French keep their gay ladies and their conventional ones apart, but in "Ma Tante d'Honneur" the desperate chère amie of Adolphe pursues him to the very heart of his father's château, daringly assuming the identity of an imaginary bride of his best friend. And again the genial Honfleur aunt acts as a kind Providence, rescuing the jealous girl from her dilemma by making things smooth between her and her Adolphe.

Shade of the French Mrs. Grundy! What would she think of a marriage with "cette petite délicieuse veuve" being snatched on the fly from Adolphe and handed over to the gay and irresponsible Charles—and the widow possessed a sacred dot, remember—while Adolphe is betrothed to his jealous beloved by the intervention of "ma tante," papa and mamma looking on in benevolent approval.

Certainly that makes farce, and the company at "La Gaité Française" gives the play in very successful farcical spirit; which consists of skidding over highly unconventional scenes with unruffled French courtesy and immutable French matter-of-courtness; with nothing, in fact, of the leer and the snigger with which the Anglo-Saxon on his own soil attempts the representation of French farce.

Mme. Ferrier plays the title-rôle in genial spirit, Messrs. Ferrier and Frediani are the two gallants who work such havoc in the affections of the light ladies with whom they consort, and Yvonne du Parc, Constance Moncla and Mariette Cardona shed their feminine graces on the rôles of the three young women.

The elderly Dorlances are agreeably played by Mme. Garde and M. du Barley, the interior of the Dorlange château being particularly successfully represented, with its skillfully painted suggestion of old tapestries, its French furniture, and the careful grouping of the personages on the scene when the curtain rises, conveying a charming suggestion of French family life.

The French of Mr. Ferrier's players is not always free from the reproach of an Americanized flavor, but on this occasion the players acted with so much spirit that those few who are particularly subject to criticism in this respect toned up their French to the highest concert pitch of which they are capable.

JOSEPHINE HART PHELPS.

Elizabeth's favorite, Leicester, was the first man to receive a license for the performance of plays in England. His troupe was organized the year after Elizabeth's accession and he maintained it all his life.

The first man to build a theatre in England was James Burbage.

ESMOND'S

"THE CAKE SHOP"
253 Grant Ave.

Mince Pies made from
ourown home-made mince-
meat. Genuine English
Plum Puddings and Fruit
Cakes.

"ECCLES CAKES" Our Specialty

MME. ROSE FLORENCE

has returned from New York and is again in her Studio at

545 Sutter Street
Telephone 3421

VOICE PLACE
COACHING

Pupil of Leopold Ketten, Professor Superior of the Conservatory at Geneva, Switzerland

FOYER AND BOX-OFFICE.

The Porter-Emperor.

In "The Emperor Jones," which comes to the Columbia Theatre, commencing Sunday night, December 31st (New Year's Eve), Mr. O'Neill has brought a new idea to the stage, and one that has been joyously received by leading critics. The story is told in eight scenes, all laid in the West Indies. It deals with the adventures of an ex-Pullman porter, who had committed a crime, escaped from prison, went to sea and stranded on an island inhabited by the most ignorant of his race. While portering he had heard white folks discuss high finance and now he decides to put into practice some of the ideas he imbibed. He establishes himself as emperor and exacts high tribute from the natives. But the ignorant blacks turn upon him and he is compelled to flee. The road to safety lies through a dense forest and in the night his fears bring on old race superstitions, "ha'nts" appear, and he goes mad. Charles S. Gilpin, who does the "Emperor," became famous over night by his work in this play.

This engagement will mark the first presentation in San Francisco of any of the Eugene O'Neill plays.

Kolb and Dill.

Kolb and Dill in "Now and Then" are playing at the Curran Theatre as the holiday attraction. As a pair of saloon-keepers who come to the parting of the ways after thirty years of partnership, one adopting prohibition and the other taking up bootlegging as a profession, they have found congenial rôles.

There will be a special matinee on Monday (New Year's Day) in addition to the regular Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Third Pop Concert.

The third popular concert of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra will take place at the Exposition Auditorium next Thursday evening, January 4th, at 8:20 o'clock.

A number of peculiar interest will be the Bach-Gounod "Ave Maria," with Uda Waldrop at the organ, the violin obligato by Louis Persinger and the harp obligato by Kajetan Attl. In Handel's "Largo," Concertmaster Persinger will also play the obligato, with Waldrop again at the organ.

The guest artist of the occasion will be Arthur Middleton, the famous baritone from the Metropolitan Opera House.

Reserved seats for the concert, which is

COLUMBIA THEATRE

Leading Playhouse of the West
Geary at Mason Phone Franklin 1850

Beginning Sunday Night, December 31
Eugene O'Neill's Unusual Play

The Emperor Jones

with CHARLES S. GILPIN
Matinees Wednesday and Saturday

CURRAN THEATRE

Geary Street Near Mason Phone Prospect 9300

Mats. New Year's Day and Wed. and Sat.

KOLB & DILL

In Aaron Hoffman's Latest Comedy Success

"NOW AND THEN"

Nights, Saturday and Holiday Mats., 50c to $2
Wednesday Matinees, 50c to $1.50

Orpheum

SAN FRANCISCO
THE BEST IN VAUDEVILLE
Orpheum Circuit

MATINEES DAILY 25 and 50c
EVENINGS 25c TO $1.25

Except Sats., Suns. and Holidays

ALWAYS A GREAT SHOW

SMOKING PERMITTED IN DRESS CIRCLE AND LOGES

RIVOLI OPERA HOUSE

Market at Seventh. Phone Market 373

Matinees Saturday and Sunday

FERRIS HARTMAN

and

PAUL STEINDORFF

Offer America's Best Loved Comic Opera

"THE TOYMAKER"

Best Seats One Dollar

given under the direction of the auditorium committee of the board of supervisors, range from 25 cents to $1, and may be obtained at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

At the Rivoli.

Ferris Hartman and Paul Steindorff are offering a revival of the comic-opera favorite, "The Toymaker," and toys are being given the children at matinees. There will be a matinee on New Year's. "The Toymaker" has the advantage of an exceptionally picturesque background, a consistent plot, and plenty of good music and dancing. Particularly pleasing scenery by Harry Tyler and the appearance of Elfrieda Steindorff, daughter of Paul Steindorff, and Paul Hartman, son of the comedian, are items that lend interest to the production.

The Orpheum New Year's Week.

Eddie Leonard is the recognized peer of blackface comedians, singers, and dancers. His coming appearance with his company is his farewell tour of the West.

Walter Kelly, "The Virginia Judge," has a raft of new stories.

A Parisian incident with comedy tangles and a touch of humanity is "It Happened in Paris," the skit which Billy Dale brings to the Orpheum.

William Hallen and Mabel Russell call their abundance of entertainment "The Service Station."

The Quixy Four are both instrumentalists and vocalists.

Walter Newman has mirrored everyday life in his sketch, "Profiteering."

Tuscano Brothers juggle heavy Roman axes.

Frank Whitman can dance and play a violin, and adds a lot of laughs for good measure. Whitman is known as the "Dance Mad Fiddler."

Symphony of Negro Themes.

Concertmaster William Laraia and Miss Modesta Mortenson of the first violin section of the People's Symphony Orchestra will be heard for the first time as solo violinists with the symphony when they play the violin concerto of Bach for two violins, accompanied by string orchestra at the Scottish Rite Auditorium, Friday night, January 5th.

Included in the January 5th programme will be Gluck's overture to "Iphigenie en Aulide," "Southern Roses," one of the waltzes of Johann Strauss, and the symphony, "From the New World," by Antonin Dvorak. W. H. Humiston recently issued a popular article on Dvorak and his "New World Symphony," in which he said in part:

"There has been much discussion as to the origin of the themes of this symphony; some, taking their cue from the composer's well-known attitude toward negro folk-songs, asserted that all the thematic matter was derived from negro plantation songs; others took exactly the opposite view of the matter and said that the music was entirely Bohemian in character and that none of the music remotely resembled either the negro melodies themselves nor the Foster minstrel melodies. Mr. Krehbiel, who has made a study of the subject, justly remarks: 'As a matter of fact, that which is most characteristic, most beautiful, and most vital in our folk-song has come from the negro slaves in the South, partly because those slaves lived in the period of emotional, intellectual, and social development which produces folk-song, partly because they lived a life that prompted utterance in song, and partly because the negroes as a race are musical by nature. Being musical and living a life that had in it romantic elements of pleasure as well as suffering, they gave expression to those elements in songs which reflect their original nature as modified by their American environment. Dr. Dvorak, to whom music was a language, was able quickly to discern the characteristics of the new idiom and to recognize its availability and value.'"

JOHN BARRYMORE'S HAMLET.

A great Hamlet, we venture to say, is Mr. Barrymore's Hamlet, the least theatrical, the most eager, and we think the most interesting, the best looking, the most intelligent and the least objectionable of the series, says Percy Hammond in the New York Tribune. We suspected that Mr. Hopkins' stage management was a bit precious in, for example, the Players' production of "The Murder of Gonzago," so quietly were its melodramatic possibilities demonstrated. It is pleasant to know that Mr. Barrymore has wished to play Hamlet; that Mr. Hopkins has encouraged him in so doing; and that the result is as excellent as it is. No one can say, we think, that Mr. Barrymore's Hamlet is not the most effective of its generation.

It has been said of those who play Hamlet that though they be as chaste as ice and as pure as snow in their impersonations, they shall not escape calumny. Sir Henry Irving was indicted as a snorting prince who honked the rôle like an elderly goose. Mr. Mantell is accused of being a bourgeois drum major, beating pentametric time to Shakespearean sonorities. Mr. Sothorn, according to Mr. Winter, is without tragic power, "incurably deficient in imagination and the glamour of genius, undistinguished and ordinary." Sir Herbert Tree lisped and was fussy. Wilson Barrett was a smug vestryman in a frock coat.

Edwin Booth's Hamlet was pooh-poohed by the British as one which said "haff a year" and other nasal transatlantic grotesqueries of pronunciation. Walter Hampden let in too much fresh air; Walker Whiteside not enough; Forbes Robertson was but a melodious preceptor, uninspired and lacking the predominance of a great personality. Sarah Bernhardt was an epicene hybrid, a dapper, shrill-voiced shrew—reeking of the boulevards. Hamlet, according to great authorities, did not exist for Bandman, Salvini, Fecchter, Novelli, Rossi, Sonnenthal and Mounet-Sully. None of them knew or cared whether Hamlet was mad or merely foolish; whether he was fat or faint and scant of breath.

Mr. Barrymore's performance erases from our vague memory all our many impressions of Hamlet since Forbes-Robertson's and including our own. It was his successful endeavor to be Hamlet, and not an actor of Hamlet, and to endow every moment of his presence in the play with reality. He is simply a human, sensitive, picturesque, unhappy prince, who, resenting the murder of his father and the incest of his mother, sets out upon an unskillful errand of retribution. He speaks the lines as if they were his own, not Shakespeare's, save, now and then (and here enters calumny), when his voice grows super-sweet, almost to the point of travesty. Where Mr. Barrymore excels as Hamlet is, we think, in the eloquence of his facial expressions. You will not soon forget his awestricken look when he first sees the ghost of his father, upon the ramparts at Elsinore. There, we suspect, is a stupendous achievement in pantomime.

Other Hamlets, including that of Shakespeare, may have seemed to you to be a little bloodthirsty. If our count is accurate this sweet prince puts six or more notches on his sabre between the beginning and the ending of the tragedy—Polonius, Laertes, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, Ophelia, King Claudion and, perhaps, his queen mother. Yet so subtle are Shakespeare and Mr. Barrymore in their perplexing collaboration, that we lament the passing of the noble Scandinavian, and shed tears as he observes in the moment of his dissolution that "the rest is silence."

Santa Fe California Limited Least

daily to Denver,
Kansas
City and Chicago

Solid Pullman train
with buffet smoker
and Observation cars
Fred Harvey
dining car service
Exclusively for first class travel

Grand Canyon Line

Tickets to and from Europe via all Trans-Atlantic Lines

Ask any Santa Fe Agent

R. D. Johnson, Div. Pass. Agt.

601 Market Street

Phone Sutter 7600

or

Market Street Ferry

Phone Sutter 7600

OAKLAND
434 13th St.
40th St. & San Pablo Ave.
BERKELEY
University Ave. & West St.
SAN JOSE
48 Ryland Block
SACRAMENTO
201 Calif. Fruit Bldg.

SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

ALFRED HERTZ, CONDUCTOR

Third Popular Concert

Exposition Auditorium

Thursday Evening, Jan. 4, 8:20

A Wonderful Program

ARTHUR

MIDDLETON

America's Foremost Baritone,

Guest Artist

Louis Persinger and Kajetan Attl, Soloists

Uda Waldrop at the Organ

Reserved seats, $1, 75c, 50c and 25c (no war tax). Now on sale at Sherman, Clay & Co.'s.

Direction Auditorium Committee,

Board of Supervisors

VANITY FAIR.

One of the sequels of war is the vulgarization of society by the inroads of the nouveau riche. It matters not how delicate, how refined, how beautiful, how cultured, how invested with the sanctities the upper strata of life may be, the inroads occur, the vulgarization follows. We said it matters not—in reality it matters much; for the more delicate and beautiful culture may have become, the less able it appears to defend itself against attacks from without, which have been in truth assisted by the weakening processes of sacrifices within. The rich war contractor, his family lit up with four-karat diamonds, encounters the less resistance from the human orchids within the charmed conservatory, who, by reason of long removal from the ancestral sources of supply, and of the assumption of the unselfish rôle required by the principle noblesse oblige, have weakened at the bank, encumbered their old estates, and have to look with tolerance on the efforts of money to "marry in." In England the process has been accelerated, began in fact before the war, by the policies of Lloyd George in taxing hereditary wealth until its back was broken, and in swelling coalition campaign funds by a wholesale scattering of new peerages; to a previously unheard-of extent. Hence we find in that country today a progressive enfeeblement of the old nobility, manifesting itself not merely in the sale of great estates whose owners can no longer afford to keep them up, but latterly in the more distressing phenomenon of ladies of culture and former wealth actually going out to service in houses which they never of their own choice would have entered. It is said that women of title have been forced into such service, which they render with aristocratic graciousness, leaving their titles at the door, like umbrellas, for fear of embarrassing their new employers. Sad times for society in old England! But old England will have to get used to it. After all, it has happened before, and the oldest peerage is not so very old. The descendants of the present war contractors will have to take their turn.

In respect to our own dollar nobility, it did not suffer as the nobility of England has. The dollars came our way and stayed here. Yet war contracts have bred the usual post-war crop of "new people," and perhaps some distresses among the former higher-ups is reflected in a lessening marriage rate. Anyhow, the Social Register, officially "out" in New York about the middle of this month, has occasion to note a falling off in trips to the altar by pairs of the younger society set. Among the society folk of the chief social centres of the country there were only 796 marriages last year, against 871 for the year before. We are speaking now of marriages that count socially. Of course, commonplace persons, with small bank accounts or none, clerks, stenographers, bricklayers, small property-owners, shopkeepers and the like, continue to trip gayly to the preacher or the justice of the peace, or even take tugboats and have the skipper splice them beyond the Volstead line; but who counts them? In what Social Register do you see them registered, or what stud book keeps account of their progeny? Except that large but seldom read one, the United States Census? They are merely the great body of the people, mainly interesting to themselves. Sometimes one paddles with golden fins into the upper waters, and actually contributes to the life of the iridescent organisms floating there, but it occurs too rarely to be considered an influence. One such who arrived several years ago, too much the lady ever to seek to conceal her lowly American origin, now observes with alarm the threatened invasions of the newly-wealthy and more lately-arriving than herself. She has issued, anonymously, a volume entitled "The Log Cabin Lady," to be sold for charity. In speaking of her return to her country from war-torn and peace-distracted Europe she says: "I saw more show of wealth, more carelessness, more reckless morals than ever before, and, horrible to contemplate, springing up in the New World the narrow social standards which war had torn from the Old. Everywhere was the blatant show of new wealth. New money always glitters. I saw it in cars with aluminum hoods and gold fittings, diamonds big as birds' eggs, ermine coats in the daytime—jeweled heels at night." There you have it; new money always glitters. And there is something in the glitter that hurts the eyes of the owners of the old.

And there is so pathetically little these wearers of jeweled heels and birds' egg diamonds can do to get action out of their glittering new cash. They have flocked to New York, not to be helpful to anything in any way, but to buy what New York has to sell them. Once there, they find things rather hollow. As far as they can yet enter into New York life it is mainly empty corridors that echo to the tread of those jeweled heels. The wonders are less wonderful, the pace is slower, the vice less vicious than they imagined it, and 10 o'clock brings yawns. They sit about cafés and cabarets and "roofs," until the backs and legs all look alike, waiting for something to happen, and the only really big thing that happens is the bill the waiter presents. Night after night there is the endless, and almost fruitless, search for pleasure, for a thousand dollars' worth of it in one gob. The money is a disappointment; it will buy only so much, and beyond that it gets nothing but the Dead Sea apples of satiety. It has been discovered that no one can eat more than one steak at a time, or sleep in more than one bed; although a scion of a San Francisco family did succeed in riding home in two hacks at once—but that was in San Francisco, and he was very drunk. In New York of today the jaded rich supply about all the real action, rushing about from one show to another, from the newest musical comedy to the latest dance club, thence to the latest poor food restaurant, paying absurd prices to head waiters for tables up front—and never think the head waiter will leave you until he gets it, either; what is he a head waiter for?—and finding always the same old line of staled amusement and worn-out shock. Observers find it pitiful to see how in the gilded palaces of sin these sensation hunters sit waiting, waiting for the sin to break out. And nothing doing, even in the sin line, not a new device in dissipation, not a fresh thrill, hardly a homicide any more except among the bootlegging gangs on the lower East Side. They even took to eating queerly, and staid Middle Westerners who really preferred cucumbers to alligator pears, and pie to ravioli, took to chop suey, supposing it to be the native Chinese nutriment. Of late, however, even chop suey has ceased to charm and the soul-weary have been doing cabbage soup as they have it in Russia. They would complain bitterly if they were in Russia and had to eat it; but in New York it supplies some inner want.

It is becoming the thing for society to shed the warm and life-giving rays of its patronage on opening nights at the vaudeville theatres. Charles Dillingham opened his new winter show at the Hippodrome lately, and Mrs. Charles had in her box Lord and Lady Mountbatten, friends of the Prince of Wales; also of Doug and Mary and Charlie Chaplin. In Mrs. Biddle Duke's party was Miss Cathleen Vanderbilt, débutante daughter of Reginald Vanderbilt, and the latest member of the family to come out. This may be regarded as some triumph for the Hippodrome, which, during the balance of the season, will probably enjoy the patronage of the same old folks from Yonkers, Albany, Utica and Syracuse. The last two names recall the story of the ham actors that were playing Damon and Pythias in the last town. One gave the line, "Now hath all public virtue departed from Syracuse," or something to that effect—whereat a farmer in the back seat responded in nasal tones, "Ther aint so darned much virtue left in Utica, neither, these days." Well, he will be at the Hippodrome show when Cathleen Vanderbilt and Lord and Lady Mountbatten are looking for thrills elsewhere. The Sixth Avenue house can accommodate a good part of "up-state." And, of course, all society wants is the first night so it can spring the jokes while they are new.

The first débutante of the New York season to become engaged is said to be Miss Sarah S. Thompson, daughter of Mrs. Edgar S. Thompson of 449 Park Avenue. She will marry Mr. George Leary, Jr., only son of Mr. and Mrs. Leary of 1052 Fifth Avenue and Southampton, Long Island. The engagement was announced at a luncheon given at Sherry's. Dances, dinners, luncheons, receptions and similar diversions of the smart set, interspersed with the usual number of theatre parties, have begun in earnest, and for those on the inside the season promises to be mildly entertaining. For those on the fringe the season never is very agreeable. But they live in hopes. And there is always the Hippodrome.

Why Are Men Milliners?

The circumstance has often been commented upon that fashions in women's dress are all designed by men, who not only manufacture the fabrics, but prescribe the colors and styles. The reason has been set forth by an English merchant, who was taken to task by women for employing only men as designers.

"In the delineation of new models," he said, "occasionally a woman's opinion is valuable to me, but in general I prefer relying on the judgment of men. When I show my wife the latest sketches she gives her opinion from an entirely personal viewpoint, and so usually all women do. The ladies usually are pleased with the colors and designs which they think would be becoming to themselves.

"A woman who is slender and dark will never consider the needs of another who is corpulent and blonde. The men are the more impartial judges. They express an unbiased opinion on the beauty of a pattern and its commercial probabilities, for they are not influenced by personal motives. However more they may love brunettes than blondes, they will never let themselves be influenced in designing fashions."

Dressing Women.

"Only a man knows how to dress a woman. The feminine dressmaker loses herself in details and will neglect the main lines. The couturier dominates over details and preserves the essentials of the silhouette." We leave to Paul Poiret the responsibility for these dangerous words, says Pierre de Lanux in Arts and Decoration. All his hostility, his aggressiveness, he directs against bad taste, or rather indifference to taste; against those who ignore the art of making their surroundings beautiful.

As a couturier he became famous a few years before the war, although as far back as 1904 he had been one of the initiators of the "Greek" shapes then adopted by the hardy few. He was foremost in the movement that freed women's silhouettes from high collars, stiff corsets, and such tyrannies. After the period of the "jupe entravée," he launched the "jupe-collette," which provoked indignation and amusing controversies, and which was a forerunner of the knickers that appeared last year on Fifth Avenue.

The development of heraldry followed that of armor, about the end of the twelfth and beginning of the thirteenth century. Its original purpose was to distinguish a knight, so that his men might know him in the field. The distortions of the animal forms depicted were largely to make them more readily recognized at a distance.

THE CHARLES NELSON CO.
MANUFACTURER AND WHOLESALE
of
REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR,
SPRUCE, HEMLOCK,
SUGAR & WHITE PINE.
CEDAR SHINGLES & POLES.
230 California St. San Francisco

E. C. EVANS & SONS, Inc.
(Established 1881)
STEAMSHIP AGENTS
SHIP AND INSURANCE BROKERS
260 California Street, San Francisco
Phone Douglas 8040 Cable Address "DEWGRIP"

GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION
Office at
SAN FRANCISCO LOS ANGELES
Alaska Commercial Bldg. Higgins Bldg.

HAMMOND LUMBER COMPANY
260 CALIFORNIA ST.
REDWOOD, DOUGLAS FIR
AND PILING

Press Clippings
Are money-makers for Contractors, Supply
Houses, Business Men and
Corporations
ALLEN'S PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Phone Douglas 5119 121 Second Street

COLDWELL MOWERS
HAND—HORSE—POWER

Good
Lawns
Demand
Them

H. V. CARTER MOTOR CO.
52 Beale St. SAN FRANCISCO

Redwood Export Company

California Redwood
Lumber and Ties

Cargoes and Parcels
"To off shore markets only"

260 CALIFORNIA STREET
SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.
Phone Sutter 2163

JOHN McCALLAN
Notary Public and U. S. Customs Notary
34 MONTGOMERY STREET
Near Sutter—Phone Sutter 6195
Residence, Sutter Hotel, corner Kearny and Sutter Streets
Phone—Sutter 3060

Fine engineering in the New Peerless does not stop with major accomplishments. It extends itself to details which are sometimes neglected, as evidenced by the extra large diameter of the spring shackle bolts. This larger size reduces wear, of course; and when finally adjustments are necessary they are readily made without removing any of the parts.

1900 Van Ness Ave.
Phone Prospect 8800

The New
PEERLESS

STORYETTES.

Grave and Gay, Epigrammatic and Otherwise.

On a beach one summer day a half-dozen girls in red one-piece bathing suits were playing ball. There were some cows in a nearby meadow, and after a bit the farm hand who was in charge of them went up to his boss and complained: "Say, boss, them gals is a-scarin' my cows." "Ah, Jethro," said the old farmer with a sigh, "times is changed since I was young. In them days it was the cows not scared the gals."

A widow with a four-year-old son had remarried, and shortly after the event it became necessary for the family to move again to another part of the city. The youngster, who had been very well satisfied with the existing and still novel household, did not take kindly to another move. Among many objections to the plan was, "And I suppose we'll have to change our name again when we move into that house."

Sir Arthur Pinero has the reputation of being one of the most careful producers. On one occasion he expostulated with an actor for speaking a certain line in a pedantic fashion. "I always spoke the line that way," said the actor, with dignity, "and I shall continue to do so." "My dear sir," was Pinero's caustic retort, "by all means speak the line as you will. I would be the last person in the world to deprive you of one of your laughs."

A teacher in a grade school had been in the habit of leaving instructions on the board for the janitor. And it frequently happened that the work of the students at the board was not erased. One day a youngster used the space where the janitor was accustomed to look for orders, and when the janitor arrived he read, "Find the lowest common denominator." He glared hopelessly at the board. "Lawd, I've been looking for that thing ever since working at this place and I've never found it yet."

Captain Hambelton of the White Star liner Olympic has a dog named Cicero of which he is fond. His affection has betrayed him into this statement: "You must understand that Cicero and I are great chums. My wife does not like the dog. They barely speak to each other when I am away. One day Mrs. Hambelton went to the country and did not leave any bones for Cicero. When she returned the next afternoon there was a small bunch of wild forget-me-nots lying on the doorstep."

A Youngstown man recently applied for settlement of a claim for fire insurance, and in response to the agent's queries explained that it was a door and the damages amounted to about five dollars. "When did the fire happen?" asked the agent, and after a moment's hesitation the answer came, "About thirty years ago." "What? Thirty years ago and you have waited all these years to report it?" "Yes, sir." "Well, why in blazes report it now?" "Well, sir," said the Youngstown man, "the women folks at my house have never given me a moment's peace since that darn door was burned and I just couldn't stand it any longer."

Here is a story about the Kaiser in the reminiscences of Lady Susan Townley: "What," I said, looking at the Berlin Victory Column, "does that ugly stout lady represent?" "Ugly? Stout?" the Kaiser gasped. "Why that is my Victory! She represents our great triumph in the Franco-Prussian war." "Well," I remarked, "I think she's rather improper. You should let down her frock." He roared with laughter, nor did he forget my poor little joke, for when years afterwards my brother went to Berlin he said to him, "Tell Lady Susan my Victory is now in the fashion." This being an allusion to the short skirts by that time in vogue.

Rob Wagner, the movie expert, said in an interview in New York: "I approve of the film censor so long as he or she isn't over-censorious—so long as he or she doesn't suspect evil where evil doesn't exist. Two business men from the provinces dined one evening in a pink-lit Italian restaurant. After he had brought their cheese the waiter said to them: 'A couple o' nice demi-tasses, gents?' The two business men looked horror-struck, and the older said sternly: 'No, sir; certainly not, sir. We're expecting our wives at any moment, and what would they say if they saw us sitting here with a couple of demi-tasses? By gosh, young fellow, I believe this is a disorderly house, and for two pins I'd have you pinched.'"

The problems of marriage and divorce that beset most of us have little terror for a certain class of Southern negro. A middle-aged negress who was employed as a cook in a family in Wilmington, South Carolina, had succeeded in getting her sixteen-year-old daughter into the same household as housemaid. One day she was overheard berating her in the following manner for some neglect of duty: "You sho is one no 'count nigger," she said. "Shifless, dat's what you is; shifless an' onery. Lazy is what you is, nothin' else but. You is jus' zackly like your pa. I suttinly is glad I didn't marry dat nigger. I never had no use for him nohow."

Young Briefless had finished the defense of his first case, a mighty hopeless one. His client had stolen the hams, and they had found them in his bureau drawer. Lawyer Briefless, tears streaming from his eyes, wound up his final speech for the defense with these passionate words: "Gentlemen, out in the country, many miles from here, there stands a rose-embowered cottage. An aged couple dwell therein with their only daughter, a frail, anemic girl. The graybeard holds an evening paper in his trembling hand. The white-haired woman at his side weeps. The girl wipes her moist lids furtively with a thin, transparent hand. That pathetic group, gentlemen, waits with bated breath for your verdict. Acquit the accused, and they will be transported to the seventh heaven. Convict him, and despair will overwhelm them. For, gentlemen—need I say it?—the old man is my father, the dear old lady is my mother, and the frail girl weeping by the fire is my adoring only sister."

A prominent citizen of Richmond, Virginia, whose addiction to the cup that cheers drove him abroad with the first onslaught of prohibition, was enjoying all the liberty of inebriation in a small out-of-the-way inn in a Swiss village. He occupied the choice room on the first floor—a room that was very much desired by a prominent social matron who had the rest of the floor for her daughter. Finally the ex-resident of Richmond received the following note: "Mrs. Reggie de Vaux, of Philadelphia, presents her compliments to Mr. John Smith, of Richmond, Virginia, and requests that he kindly give up his room on the first floor, since it is adjacent to Mrs. de Vaux's suite and she would like to have it for her daughter." In answer Mrs. de Vaux received the following: "Mr. John Smith, of Richmond, Virginia, presents his compliments to Mrs. Reggie de Vaux of Philadelphia, and desires to know if her daughter drinks." Mrs. de Vaux indignantly wrote back: "Mrs. Reggie de Vaux, of Philadelphia, again presents her compliments to Mr. John Smith, of Richmond, Virginia, and desires to state emphatically that her daughter does not drink." Which called forth the unanswerable ultimatum from Mr. Smith: "Mr. John Smith, of Richmond, Virginia, again presents his compliments to Mrs. Reggie de Vaux, of Philadelphia, and desires to state that, since her daughter does not drink, it is easier for her to go up to the second floor than Mr. Smith, who does."

THE MERRY MUSE.

She Used To.

She used to let me hold her hands
She used to treat me something grand
She used to let me see her home
She used to make dates o'er the phone
She used to let me steal a kiss
She used to fill my heart with bliss
She used to like me. It was I
She used to bait the other guy.

—Michigan Gargoyle.

At Beauty's Shrine.

A Dresden China loveliness she wears
I e'en might say she's fairer than the day,
Perchance you'll wonder if the gay street stares—
Well, I should say!

To praise her beauty words I'll never spare,
I keep the pharmacy across the way,
And do I sell the goods that make her fair?
Well, I should say!

—Thomas J. Murray in Judge.

The average Englishman writes eighty-four letters a year, the average American a hundred and twelve.

ORNAMENTALS, FRUIT TREES,
VINES AND FIELD GROWN ROSES

Open Daily and Sunday to visitors and purchasers

GEO. C. ROEDING, Pres.

California Nursery Company

(Founded in 1865 by John Rock)

NILES, CALIFORNIA

DESTRUCTIVE "Sulpho" compounds are the cause of motor oils breaking down rapidly under engine heat. An enormous amount of money is annually lost through the presence of these unnecessary properties in oils.

Cycol will save engine owners this tremendous amount of money lost through wasted oil, wasted fuel, preventable repairs, because it is free from destructive "sulpho" compounds. These have been removed by the new Hexeon Process used exclusively by us.

Wherever oil contains destructive "sulpho" compounds, it breaks down rapidly under engine heat. Lubricating value becomes quickly impaired. The oil film is broken and serious damage may result.

Have your crank case thoroughly flushed—not with kerosene. Use the correct grade of Cycol as shown on the Cycol Recommendation Chart. Use Associated Gasoline. Then notice the improved performance of your motor.

ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY
[SAN FRANCISCO]

CYCOL
MOTOR OIL
FREE FROM DESTRUCTIVE "SULPHO" COMPOUNDS

Social Notes.

The members of the Junior League, who gave so successful a performance at the Plaza Theatre for the benefit of the charities carried on by the league, gave several numbers from "Flappers Fads"

FLORISTS JOSEPH'S
Phone Sutter 423 233 Grant Ave.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford M. Weatherwax gave Pierrot and Pierrette ball on Saturday last at the Casino Club. A number of dinner are leaving California. Dr. Baker has been

The Christmas dance of the Friday Evening Assembly took place last Saturday night at Century Hall. The patronesses who received were Mrs.

Phone Franklin 3240

DEL MONTE : : CALIFORNIA

San Ysidro Ranch, Santa Barbara

128 SUTTER STREET
(COOK'S BUILDING) Phone Kearny 3512

SACRAMENTO SHORT LINE

F. L. Nason, Gen. Agt. Pass. Dept.
Canadian Pacific Railway
675 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.
Phone Sutter 1585, or local steamship agents

Empress of Canada
644 feet long

ound trip)

Our Agents will gladly give you further information.

Third St. Station

Phone Sutter 4000

Market St. at 2d, nearly 3100, or at the Emporium, Market St. near 4th, Douglas 1

Emporium, Market St. near 4th, Douglas 1

STRINGER STORAGE COMPANY

Sutter near Fillmore
and
Steiner near Sutter

Conducting a Storage
Business Founded
in 1880

Storage---Shipping

Expert Packing, Protection
and Dispatch

A fully informed representative, anxious
to give you any desired information,
will respond to your phone call.

Phone West 999

Frank W. Fuller, Mrs. Samuel Boardman, Mrs. Edward Erle Brownell, Mrs. Alexander Keyes and Mrs. Danforth Boardman.

Mr. Walter B. Devereux of New York, who has been visiting his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. William Devereux of Burlingame, recently gave a dinner at the Burlingame Country Club on the occasion of his birthday.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Younger entertained Mrs. Clinton Cushing of Washington at dinner at the Fairmont Hotel last week. Among the guests were Mr. Joseph Redding and Mr. Fentress Hill of Paris.

A Christmas party for wounded soldiers was given by Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Merrill at their home in Burlingame last Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Remi Schwerin were hosts at a dinner at their home in Burlingame last Saturday evening, preceding the ball given by Mr. and Mrs. Weatherwax.

Miss Margaret Fuller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Fuller, is giving a dinner-dance in farewell to Miss Kate Boardman, who with her mother will leave shortly for Europe.

Mrs. Eleanor Martin will be at home to her friends on New Year's Day at her residence on Broadway.

The annual Christmas luncheon of the Woman's Athletic Club was held last week in the clubhouse on Sutter Street.

Mrs. William Cathcart Butler will give a tea on January 2d in honor of Mrs. Robert J. Kelly of New York, mother of Mr. Eugene Kelly, who will be married to Miss Marie Louise Baldwin on January 6th.

Miss Josephine Grant entertained at a large luncheon at the Burlingame Country Club on Sunday last.

Mr. and Mrs. William Duncan were hosts at a Christmas luncheon at their home in Burlingame on Sunday.

The engagement has been announced of Miss Katherine Bentley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Irving Bentley, to Mr. Raymond Phelps, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Willis Phelps of New York.

On Christmas Eve Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Weatherwax were hosts at a dinner given at their home in Burlingame.

Movements and Whereabouts.

Captain Frank Harrison Ainsworth, U. S. N., and Mrs. Ainsworth have left for Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Weatherwax will spend New Year's at Del Monte.

Dr. A. C. D. de Graeff, former minister from Holland to Japan, arrived here with his family recently from Japan, and left very shortly afterwards for Washington, where Dr. de Graeff will take up the duties of minister from Holland to the United States.

Mr. and Mrs. Willis Walker, who have recently returned from the East, have opened their home at Pebble Beach for the holidays.

Miss Alice Requa has gone south to spend the holidays with her sister, Mrs. John Henry Russell.

Mr. Felton Elkins, who has gone to New York to spend the winter, has taken a house on East Sixty-First Street.

Mrs. Clara Darling, who has been in Los Altos for the summer, has taken an apartment at the Hillcrest for the winter.

Countess de Limur and her little daughter, Marie, have sailed for their home in France.

Mrs. T. Danforth Boardman with her daughter, Miss Kate Boardman, will leave for Europe next month.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Clark have arrived from New York and are at the Fairmont Hotel.

Chaplain Maurice Witherspoon, U. S. N., will leave on Saturday for Chicago, his new post of duty, after a long stay in San Francisco. Mrs. Witherspoon will join Chaplain Witherspoon in Chicago later.

Sir Frank Barnard and Lady Barnard of Victoria, B. C., who have been staying at the Fairmont, sailed last week on the S. S. Venezuela for New York en route to Jamaica. Sir Frank Barnard is former governor-general of British Columbia.

Mr. Walter B. Devereux of New York, who has been visiting his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. William Devereux, in Burlingame, is leaving for Southern California, where he will pass the remainder of the winter.

Mrs. Clinton Cushing of Washington, widow of the late Dr. Clinton Cushing of San Francisco, is making a short visit to San Francisco, and is staying at the Fairmont Hotel.

Mr. Jules Simon, Belgian consul, and his daughter, Miss Simon, have gone to Santa Barbara for the Christmas holidays.

Mrs. William Sproule, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Marie Louise Baldwin, and her daughter's fiancé, Mr. Eugene Kelly of New York, left on Saturday last to meet Mr. William Sproule on his way home from New York. They spent Christmas at Truckee.

Miss Lydia Hopkins, who has recently returned from Europe, will spend the winter in San Mateo.

Mrs. Cheever Herbert Newhall of Santa Barbara is spending the holidays with her parents, Commodore and Mrs. James H. Bull.

Mrs. Walter F. Frear, wife of the former territorial governor of Hawaii, is spending the holidays in San Francisco with her daughter, Miss Virginia Frear, who is attending Mills College.

Major Albert Randall, U. S. M. C., and Mrs. Randall are leaving very soon for the East, after living for several years at the Marine Barracks, Mare Island. Major Randall has been ordered to Philadelphia.

Mrs. Peter F. Dunne and her daughters, Miss Margery Dunne and Miss Marion Dunne, will go to New York early in January. Mrs. Dunne and Miss Margery Dunne are planning to sail for Europe, while Miss Marion Dunne, after a short visit in Boston, will return to California.

Mr. Robert Gay Hooker, Jr., and Mr. John Hooker, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gay Hooker, who are attending Harvard University, have arrived from the East to pass the holidays at their home in San Mateo.

Miss Harriet Walker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Walker, who is a sophomore at Vassar, will visit the Bermudas during the holidays as the guest of Miss Narcissus Vanderlip, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Vanderlip.

Lieutenant William L. Martin, who has been stationed at Mare Island Navy Yard, has received orders to report for duty on the U. S. S. Mercy.

A large party from San Francisco spent Christmas at the Sentinel Hotel in Yosemite Valley. Among those who composed the party were Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Boardman, Mr. and Mrs. Selah Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Pond and Mr. and Mrs. Ettore Avenali.

Captain Peter Antonovich, U. S. A., at present stationed in Honolulu where he is an architect in the government service, is making a brief visit to his old home in San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Webster Jones, Miss Merrill Jones, and Miss Vail Jones will pass the New Year holidays at Del Monte.

Mrs. Arthur Rose Vincent arrived recently from her home in Ireland. She is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Bourn, and will be joined by Mr. Vincent early in the year.

Mrs. Edward de Laveaga has recently returned from the East and will be established for the winter in the house belonging to Mrs. John J. Valentine in Oakland.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Welch, who have been in Europe, have returned to their home in Burlingame.

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Newhall with their son, Walter Newhall, left last week for the East to spend the holidays with their eldest son, Mr. George A. Newhall, Jr., who is a student at Yale. Mr. George Newhall expected to return home for Christmas, but was prevented at the last moment by a slight illness.

Mr. and Mrs. Burke Corbet are being congratulated on the arrival of a son, born to them on December 20th.

The Paul Elder Lectures.

The winter calendar of "Events" in the Paul Elder Gallery, just ready, discloses a booking of variety and interest, including lectures, dramatic readings, and recitals. Among the names scheduled to appear are Frederick O'Brien, Lieutenant M. M. Witherspoon, Charles G. Norris, Laurel Conwell Bias, Kenneth Saunders, Genevieve Taggard, Charles Upson Clark, and many others equally important in their fields.

The season will be opened Saturday, January 6th, at 2:30 o'clock, by Maslin Hulme. He will speak on "Literature and Life." The series is given under the direction of Paul Elder.

CURRENT VERSE.

One Night There Came to Ravenstone.

One night there came to Ravenstone
A ragged man with quiet eyes
Desiring naught save bread and cheese,
But he was curiously wise.

For now he spake of government—
And now he spake of philosophy—
And now he stayed all dumb because
A sudden bird sang in a tree.

I think the earth meant more to him
Far more to him than met the eye;
And at the dark I saw him love
The stars a long while in the sky.

And at the dawning he had gone
In tatters on, and I dare say
A dandelion in his coat
For a gold button all the way.

—A. Newberry Choyce in the New Witness.

The Poacher

Crisp is the sweet October air;
Craftily hid in a ferny lair,
A gipsy lurks for quail and hare,
As faithless wardens sleep.
Sad red spots on a furry pelt,
Hanging limp at a rascal's belt,
Slender paw with a cruel welt,
Where a gin has bitten deep.

Rustle of leaves at a lurcher's tread,
Slinking soft where a Romany led,
Sniffing the moss where the grouse has bled,
Scolded by rook and daw.
Sinister master, sinister hound,
Stealthily making the sinister round
Of hidden snares on forbidden ground
By thicket and heron-shaw.

With eye, and head, and heart of a thief,
Man and mongrel, o'er pebble and leaf
Shamble swift for night is brief,
And stern is woodland law.
In the smiling land each honest hand
Is an enemy's clenched at the swarthy band
That ravage the wood, and the sod, and the sand
Like the laggard that hangs in the haw.

—Léon D'Emo in Judge.

At Grandfather's.

My son, upon this curving stair
Whose balusters are slim and white,
Your mother scurried from the bear
That sometimes follows you at night.
And later (though you do not care)
She kissed me here by candle light.

So shake the spindles with your hand
And pound them with your chubby fist.
But I would have you understand,
You, with your eyes of amethyst,
That this is an enchanted land
Where bears have lurked and lovers kissed.

—John French Wilson in the Contemporary Review.

Wear Your Jewelry Long.

With longer skirts and the more formal type of draped dress the bobbed-hair girl has had to grow up over night, says the De-lineator. The closer hair-dressing is partly responsible for the vogue of the long earring, which for evening reaches almost to the shoulder. Some of them seen in the shop windows are made of heavy red gold in long, narrow Egyptian designs triangular in shape.
Crystal is very smart for evening and steel and jade are used for either evening or afternoon. Very large hoop earrings are also worn in fine lines of jet or jade or amber.

For evening the very short sleeve bracelets are worn by the dozen. They are the narrow

In the Galleries Vickery, Atkins & Grey

is to be seen a most ui exhibition of French, It a and English furniture, tapestries and objects of art of the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The collection was formed by Charles Roberson of London, who has for many years specialized in antique furnishings acquired from the old English estates. There are in the present display some exquisite examples of furniture covered with p-tit point needlework, some English origin, others French of the period of Louis XV and XVI; as well as cabinet work with ormolu mounting connected with the famous names of Gouthiere and Riesener. The collections of Lord Ellen-boro, Lord Foley, Lord Lovelace and Lady Fairbanks have furnished much of this material, and the Italian Renaissance bonzes are from the Featherstonhaugh collection.

bangle type set with brilliants, emeralds, rubies or sapphires or their synthetic relations. A bar pin of diamonds or pearls maintains the centre of gravity of the bateau-neck body, while the necklace for either afternoon or evening is the single or triple string of pearls.

In order that women with children may delve into politics the Women's Democratic Club of Park City, Nebraska, has elected a "baby tender."

The ruddy kingfisher, a bird native of Borneo, makes its nest in the hive of a peculiarly vicious kind of bee.

John Breuner & Co.
of San Francisco

281 Geary St., nr. Powell

Occasional Tables

Here is one of the choice patterns among our stock of occasional tables. We have a complete assembly of these beautiful tables which we are offering as low as $18.50 and up to $90.00.

THE SANTA BARBARA GIRLS' SCHOOL

Resident and Day Pupils. Eleven acres.
Country Life and Sports. Sleeping-porches.
Open-air school rooms. Riding. Swimming
all the year round. Basis of work, clear thinking.

MARIAN L. CHAMBERLAIN, A. M., Principal
P.O. Box 548, SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

The
ST. FRANCIS
One of the world's great hotels
Facing Union Square
SAN FRANCISCO CALIFORNIA

WHERE SERVICE AND COMFORTS ARE PLANNED FOR GUESTS
WHO APPRECIATE
THE BEST

Thos. J. Coleman
Manager

MOST BEAUTIFUL

Rota-Gravure Section

in the world

Published Each Sunday

by the

San Francisco Chronicle

ONLY

$5.20

a

Year

Including Every Sunday Feature
of the CHRONICLE

THE ALLEGED HUMORISTS.

He—Harvey said women have no souls. She—David said all men are liars.—Boston Transcript.

Frosh—I've been trying to think of a word for two weeks. Soph—How about fortnight? Syracuse Orange Peel.

"But are you sure he's a police dog?" "Positive, my dear; he's always hanging around the kitchen."—Life.

"What's the trouble?" "The car won't run." "What's the matter?" "Pa's been fixing it again."—Detroit Free Press.

"Ave a bit o' ketchup with yer sossidge, Sam?" "Not for me, thanks. Gildin' the lily, I calls it."—London Humorist.

"Impossible, is he?" "Judge for yourself. He thinks Walter Camp is where the football players train."—Pitt. Panther.

Sue—He actually blushed after he had kissed me. Low—My dear, you shouldn't apply your rouge so thickly.—Judge.

Mistress—Nora, I won't have that husky milkman in my kitchen. Nora—All right, mum, I know a smaller one.—Notre Dame Juggler.

He—I can not go to the theatre so often. I must think about my bills. She—Well, can't you think about your bills in the theatre?—London Opinion.

"You have no lower classes in this country?" "Certainly we have." "And what do you call them?" "Pedestrians."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

"Are the directions clear to you now, Jefferson?" "Yas, sah, all except one thing, doctah. Was I to take dose little pills externally or befo' meals?"—Judge.

Kant—This place certainly turns out fine men. Descartes—When did you graduate? Kant—Didn't graduate; they turned me out.—Notre Dame Juggler.

Tramp—I've eaten nothin' but snowballs for three days, mum. Lady—You poor man! What would you have done had it been summertime?—Boston Transcript.

Agitated Manager—Say, don't you know that you shouldn't whistle in the lobby like that? Bellboy—Boss, I aint whistlin'. I see pagin' Missus Jones' dawg.—Life.

"Take it from me," said the senior, "there are two kinds of women you can't trust. Those with bobbed hair and those without it." Johns Hopkins Black and Blue Jay.

Her Father—But, young man, do you think you can make my daughter happy? Her Suitor—Do I? I wish you could have seen her when I proposed!—London Opinion.

Retiring Pew-Opener (initiating new one into his duties)—Remember, Mr. Higgins, they are very good Christians here until you show some one else into their pew.—Punch.

"Tommy," asked the teacher, "what can you tell of America's foreign relations at the present time?" "They're all pretty poor," said the brightest boy in the class.—New York Sun.

"Now that you two are one," began the vicar. "Which one?" asked the demure bride "Ah," said the vicar, who was a married man "You must find that out for yourselves."—London Daily News.

Woman—Now, if you don't leave at once I'll call my husband, and he used to play football at Harvard. Tramp—Lady, if youse love yer husband, don't; because I used to play wid Yale.—Colorado Dodo.

"Have you made any improvements' around the farm?" "Yes, sir," declared Farmer Corn-tassel. "We've rechristened the old barn. We call it a garage and make the summer boarders pay rent for it."—Washington Star.

"So your boy has graduated from college." "Yes." "What is he going to do now?" "I don't know. He didn't pitch well enough to make the major league and there's no money playing professional football."—Detroit Free Press.

Teacher—This time we are going to have a little talk on wading birds. Of these the familiar stork is one—what are you laughing at, Elsie? Little Elsie—Oh, but teacher—the idea of there being any storks!—Stockholm Kasper.

"Let me see! When was this little boy born, Brother Johnson?" inquired the presiding elder. "Well, sir," replied Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge, "it was just before or right after my best dog died, and I haint prezisely shore which."—Kansas City Star.

Gem Mining.

With all its mineral wealth the United States does not take high rank in gem mining, and its production during the year for which figures are available reached only a value of $110,000, states the Washington Star. This, however, is the lowest total since the Geological Survey began the collection of statistics in 1883, except in the single year of 1896, when the value dropped to $87,500.

Four gem minerals—corundum, quartz, tourmaline and turquoise—represent four-fifths of the total annual value, the chief stone of the lot being the sapphire variety of corundum, which is used industrially for the frictionless bearings of watches and other instruments. The gem minerals are chiefly supplied by Montana, Nevada, California, Colorado, Maine and Arizona, although some production is reported by twenty other states. Arkansas yielded a number of good-sized diamonds last year, including a canary-colored octahedron weighing nearly eighteen carats, but the total production annually of the country never exceeds a few thousand dollars.

One of the government experts gives an interesting description of the sapphires of Montana. The only systematic mining for these precious stones in the United States is done in that state. The annual output is something like 500,000, including the stones that are suitable for cutting as gems and those that are useful only for mechanical purposes. It is said that the lapidaries of Montana do work that is comparable to the work done on stones sent to London to be cut.

Montana might well be called the "gem state," in view of the fact that her output of precious stones exceeds the production in that line of all the rest of the United States.

Siberia The Newest West.

Siberia may prove to be our newest west, according to the Portland Oregonian. It is a country of great wealth in timber, agriculture, minerals, furs and fisheries, it is a field for American enterprise and it will demand everything that America can supply. There is a market for logging and sawmill machinery, for mining machinery and concentrating mills, for railroad material and equipment, for cannery equipment and for all kinds of factory apparatus. The men who buy and operate all this apparatus will consume all kinds of manufactured goods.

Though still wearing the red cloak of communism, the Moscow soviet is restoring the hated capitalism with full freedom to conduct its enterprises in its own way, and the Chita acted to act the more action because it has an is out of favor because it has the favor because it has e, other Western na; the capital, the men l of pioneer impulse t that an undeveloped e only white man's should attract Amer- any yellow or brown ## of Corsica.

Napoleon Romanetti, reputed to be the last Corsican bandit of the old type, died, as all men of his school would like to do, with his boots on, says the Boston Evening Transcript. After successfully defying the officers of the law for years, Romanetti was shot by a gendarme as he was trying to make his getaway in an automobile owned by the wife of the prefect of Corsica. Craftsman he was to the last; he spurned other occupations, stick-

CROCKER SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS
SAN FRANCISCO

CROCKER BUILDING
BOXES FOR RENT - $4.00 PER ANNUM
Management JOHN F. CUNNINGHAM

ing to banditry until the end. Jealous of his calling, its traditions, its code of etiquette, he more than once protested, through the columns of Corsican newspapers, against the epithet of common robber hurled against him by the Paris press. Not a common robber was he. Far from it. Was it not his custom to treat his victims politely? Did he not, whenever circumstances permitted, entertain them right royally, after separating them from their valuables? Was he not an ornament to Corsican society, a credit to the bandit's profession?

Romanetti, in truth, had long outlived his generation. Of this the automobile in which he met his death was a signal proof. The Corsica of romance and of story, the Corsica of Bonaparte and the vendetta, had no room in it for flivvers and touring cars. The coming of the motor sounded the knell, not only of the profession of the gentleman bandit, but also, and no less surely, of the Corsica of banditry and blood feuds. Mr. Henry Ford no doubt has done more than a whole generation of gendarmes to stamp out banditry in this island, 114 miles in length and fifty-two in breadth. The Corsican bandit of the future must go elsewhere than the highways of his native island to ply his calling.

Mah Jongg.

China's Christmas present to America this year is Mah Jongg, says the New York Tribune. The game that has caught the fancy of New York's holiday shoppers has been a long time arriving. It was played perhaps by Confucius, and certainly by mandarins and lesser folk in China ever since his day.

Why did not Marco Polo bring it from Cathay along with playing cards, as tradition tells? Goodness knows. Time has its revenge, at any rate. In this year of our Lord polite gamblers will be building the Chinese Great Wall with little domino-like affairs of bamboo and ivory, hand-carved and colored in exquisite patterns, of which the suits are winds and dragons, flowers and seasons. There are dice, too, and sets of counters—heaven, earth, male and female. As the game unfolds the player may get "a moon from the bottom of the sea" or "a plum blossom in unseasonable time." It is all most delicately sensuous, most alluring.

Mah Jongg is a pastime for long leisure, typical of the Orient, where they let the legions thunder past, then plunge in thought again. Not so deep as chess, which also came from China's neighborhood, and with a high percentage of chance, it requires application and a good measure of skill. Its scheme is as complex as its apparatus is charming. Don't waste a Mah Jongg set on one who doesn't like to use his wits.

In China Mah Jongg, meaning sparrow, is the aristocrat of indoor games. High officials are much addicted to this combination, as a writer has described it in the Tribune's Magazine, of rummy, dominoes, poker and children's building blocks. It is their form of a junket, and the people frequently grumble about the governmental "sparrow parties." It might be dangerous to let our congressmen get hold of such an engrossing toy.

Mountainous Photography.

Gutzon Borglum, world-renowned sculptor, is preparing to attempt to print a picture on the side of Stone Mountain, near Atlanta, Georgia, in exactly the same manner as a photographer prints on sensitized paper, remarks the New York Tribune.

Barrels of chemicals for sensitizing the mountain and developing the "negative" and the most powerful projecting lamp ever built have been contracted for by Mr. Borglum.

Using the night as his "dark room," he plans first to treat the side of the mountain with chemicals. Then from a spot 700 feet away the picture he hopes to print will be projected on the mountain from the huge lamp. Three or four hours' exposure will be given.

After the proper exposure the developing will begin. First, down the side of the mountain will come barrels of developer, then the fixing bath and finally tons of clear water.

If successful he will use the picture in his work of carving the Confederate monument on the side of the mountain.

A typewriter which writes music has been invented by an Italian.

The Catacombs of Cypress Lawn

Comparable with the luxurious tombs of ancient Egyptian kings, yet within the means of people of moderate circumstances.

A stone edifice, highly artistic in appearance, containing a magnificent chapel. Eleven Tomb Rooms, 425 Crypts.

Cypress Lawn Cemetery
Association

Phone Douglas 4772

995 Market St.

AGENTS WANTED.

DEFLEXOGRAPH. fits any phonograph. Stops scratch and surface noises. Softens tone. immense profits. VANTONE CO., Dept. 102, lBox 1244, City Hall Station, New York.

KING COAL

High in Heat Units
Low in Ash

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS
IN CALIFORNIA

KING COAL CO.

Main Office
EXCHANGE BLOCK
San Francisco

Wholesale Only

FOR A

CLEAR COMPLEXION

and a

HEALTHY COLOR

eat

FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST

Three Cakes a Day

